Sports in Brief

Pro dealings

PRO FOOTBALL

Green Bay — Returned rookie defensive back Terry Randolph to the active roster and released rookie wide receiver Perry Briggs.

Kansas City — Acquired running back Ted McKnight on waivers from the Oakland Raiders and cut halfback Pat McNeil.

Atlanta — Waived running backs Sonny Collins and Billy Pritchett, wide receiver Shelton Diggs and defensive backs Bob Jones and Ron Mabra; re-signed defensive tackle Jeff Yeates and safety Tom Moriarity.

New York Jets — Placed second-year running back Louie Giammona on injured reserve.

Cleveland — Signed defensive back Rolly Woolsey and placed defensive tackle Jerry Sherk and quarterback Terry Luck on the inactive list.

San Francisco — Waived quarterback Pat Sullivan, running back Kermit Johnson and rookie linebacker Rod Martin; placed rookie wide receiver Elmo Boyd on the injured reserve list and designated rookie linebacker Mike Baldassin and quarterback Steve Deberg to the inactive reserve squad.

Vataha set to sign

FOXBORO, Mass. (UPI) — Wide receiver Randy Vataha, placed on waivers by the New England Patriots, said yesterday he's all but certain he'll sign with the Green Bay Packers.

Vataha said he expects to report to the Packers as soon as possible.

"There's all kinds of things to do," he said. "I have a wife, house, and other things I have to take care of."

The move, plus the waiver of wide receiver Marlin Briscoe, leaves the Patriots with only rookie Stanley Morgan and Darryl Stingley as healthy wide receivers heading into Sunday's season-opener at home against the Kansas City Chiefs. Steve Burks and Don Westbrook have been placed on the inactive reserve list.

Vataha joined the Patriots in 1971 after being cut by the Los Angeles Rams. In six years with the Patriots he was their fifth all-time leading receiver with 178 receptions for 3,055 yards, and their seventh all-time leading scorer with 24 touchdowns for 144 points.

"I'm disappointed, sure," he said. "This team has an excellent shot at going all the way to the Super Bowl. But being cut is also a reality. Every year I've played, I've been aware this could happen. The coaches make their decisions based on the overall effect a player has on a club."

Vataha has been the team's player representative since 1974 but says he does not think his off-field activities led to his dismissal.

"I don't think that had anything to do with it," he said.

Dutton reports

BALTIMORE (UPI) — All-pro defensive end John Dutton reported to the Baltimore Colts' training camp yesterday after his attorney recommended that he pay whatever fine the club imposes and play out his option.

Dutton's attorney, Howard Slusher, told Colts' General Manager Dick Szymanski Tuesday — the day negotiations broke off — that he would urge Dutton to report.

"I've told him to report, pay whatever fine they claim he owes and play out his option. We don't have much other choice. The Colts have all the leverage," Slusher said.

Sports Notices

WOMEN'S LACROSSE — A meeting will be held today at 4 p.m. in room 153, NOPE to discuss details of coach Frank Garahan's plan for the fall semester. All interested women athletes are urged to attend.

According to Garahan, a new program for women's lacrosse will start next week. Although spring usually means lacrosse at UMass, interest on the part of team members has prompted the coach to initiate a 'low pressure' program this fall which should run for six weeks.

The game will be modified by reducing teams from the usual 12 players to eight as well as shortening the field length to 60 yards. The rule changes will enable the participants to improve stickhandling without heavy conditioning and also to enjoy the game without the pressure of varsity competition. Players will be divided into four teams to make up a mini-league.

MEN'S SWIMMING — Swimmers interested in trying out for this year's team should see coach Bei Melamed at Boyden Pool. Workouts have begun and run from 4-6 p.m. daily.

INTRAMURALS — A correction: Boyden swimming pools are open from 7:30-10:00 p.m. on Mon., Wed., and Fri. instead of from 7:00-9:30 p.m. Please make the change on your recreation schedule.

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

From UNITED Feature Syndicate
For release TUESDAY, Sept. 13, 1977

THURSDAY, Sept. 15, 1977 — Born today, you are all but unerring in your judgments involving other people's natures and characters. You have an uncanny knack for predicting what another will do under particular circumstances. You understand through some innate wisdom precisely which aspects of an individual's nature will drive him to make his decisions – and understanding this, you are able to predict reactions and responses that to others appeared hidden.

You are a remarkably methodical and thorough individual, never leaving undone that which has even the remotest possibility of being accomplished. On the other hand, you are wise enough to know when the time has come to reduce effort to a minimum and to allow a given enterprise to come to a halt.

Although you have no love for upheaval and turmoil, you are not one to seek peace at any price. You would prefer a loud, drag-out fight to an interminable period of nagging. You do not look forward to clearing the air with argument – but you prefer that to continued befogging.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

FRIDAY, Sept. 16

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Jealous rages seem to be all the thing today, as friends and loved ones carry on at the top of their voices. Try to settle tempers.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — You won't have much of a chance to have things your own way today. Therefore, compromise; see that another is happy getting what he desires.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Take care that your lack of enthusiasm doesn't put a damper on a loved one's new-found joy. Talent brings rewards at evening.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Chief among your characteristics is a love of complications. You would do well not to court that aspect of your nature at this time.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Unless you are well suited to your present work, you may find that this is an especially difficult time. Prove a point to a boss.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Prospects prove less satifactory than they had appeared earlier in the week. Don't reject another's offer of aid; new projects need more than two hands.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Consider well your own position on the employment scene. Can you upgrade it? Do you really want to at the present time?

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — A great deal of energy must be expended today if you are to pull enough chestnuts out of the fire to gain profit from the act.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Speculate if you like, but take care that you can afford to lose what you put out – which does not mean you will lose, of course. Winning is IN.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Domesticity may become more than a little boring at this time. Deliver on a promise to a child – but make no further promises.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — If you are inclined to follow another into new activities, be sure to take your emergency rations with you. Chances for gain are few.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Restlessness overtakes the Leo who has not been foresightful enough to provide himself with food for thought. Company rescues you at evening.

Michigan grabs top spot in poll

Michigan football coach Bo Schembechler's first reaction this week to the likelihood his Wolverines would be ranked No. 1 in the country was: "That's a blow!"

But he was grinning.

When pressed on the matter he said with a shrug, "No, I don't mind. We rode that last year for a while."

Schembechler has made it a policy of sloughing off the significance of any polls, insisting no one can really determine a ranking of college teams without a round-robin type schedule or a tournament.

Whether he likes it or not, Schembechler's Wolverines — second to Oklahoma in The Associated Press' preseason poll — wound up first in the initial regular season poll of sport writers and broadcasters throughout the country.

Michigan, which trounced Big Ten Conference rival Illinois 37-9 last Saturday, collected 42 of a possible 62 first-place votes for 1,162 of a possible 1,240 points in the balloting announced yesterday. That was 182 more points than runner-up Southern California, which was first on four ballots.

Oklahoma, which struggled to beat unheralded Vanderbilt 25-23, fell to fifth place with two first-place votes and 701 points.

Notre Dame remained third, despite having a difficult time beating error-prone Pittsburgh 19-9. However, the Irish were first on nine ballots.

Alabama, which crushed Mississippi 34-13, got one first-place vote and was ranked fourth.

One first-place vote also went to sixth-ranked Ohio State, eighth-ranked Texas Tech, ninth-ranked Houston and No. 18 Texas.

Texas A&M, which plays at Michigan Oct. 1, was No. 7 and Penn State No. 10.

Rounding out the top 20 were No. 11 Maryland, No. 12 Colorado, No. 13 Mississippi State, No. 14 UCLA, No. 15 Oklahoma State, No. 16 Pittsburgh, No. 17 Georgia, No. 19 Florida and No. 20 Brigham Young.

with a large wicker scoop called a cesta which is tied to his hand, against the granite front wall. Upon hitting the front wall, the ball must land between the under server and over serve lines on the court floor so the opposing team has a chance to return the serve on one hop.

A team loses if it allows the ball to bounce twice or throws the pelota out of bounce before it hits the front wall and bounces on the floor, to the side (a wire screen protects the crowd from stray balls), or if it hits the screen protecting the lights on the ceiling, or the mats between the front wall and the ceiling. A team or singles player need not wait for hop to return the pelota, and can catch it on the fly.

In order to win a game a team must score seven points. A win is worth one point until all eight teams have played, then points double. Twelve games played every weekday and Saturday night, post-time at 7 p.m. There is a matinee Saturday at noon. The games usually last five hours.

Birds clean up in twinbill

TORONTO (UPI) — Lee May drove in three runs in the opener and doubled home a run in the second game last night, helping the Baltimore Orioles to sweep a doubleheader from the Toronto Blue Jays, 6-5 and 4-2, and move into second place in the American League East.

The sweep stretched the Orioles' winning streak to seven games and left them only 2½ games behind the New York Yankees in the AL East.

Baltimore jumped to a 1-0 lead in the first inning of the nightcap when Elliott Maddox doubled off loser Jerry Garvin, 9-16, and scored on May's double. The Orioles added a run in the second inning when Andres Mora doubled, moved to third on a single by Doug Decinces and scored when second baseman Steve Staggs threw wildly past first base on Kiko Garcia's grounder.

The Orioles made it 3-0 in the fourth on back-to-back doubles by Garcia and Skaggs. Rookie Rich Dauer's solo homer in the eighth plated their final run.

Rudy May went six innings for Baltimore in the nightcap to get credit for his 17th win against 12 losses and Scott McGregor, who saved the first game for Mike Flanagan, also came on to get a save in the nightcap.

The Blue Jays got a run in the fifth on a solo homer by Roy Howell and Toronto added a run in the sixth on a run-scoring single by Doug Rader. After May gave up a leadoff single to Steve Bowling in the seventh, McGregor relieved and stopped the Blue Jays on one-hit in three innings of work to post his fourth save.

In the opener, the Orioles were held hitless for the first 3-1-3 innings before Ken Singleton singled and May unloaded his 23rd homer. The Orioles added four unearned runs in the eighth with May driving in one run with a bases-loaded walk.

Flanagan pitched seven innings to get credit for his 12th victory in 22 decisions. Flanagan, a UMass graduate, has now won 10 of his last 12 decisions.

KC wins 13th in row; Mets defeat Carlton

KANSAS CITY (UPI) — Al Cowens hit a two-run homer and Tom Poquette added a two-run single to help the Kansas City Royals extend their club record winning streak to 13 games last night with a 5-2 victory over the Oakland A's in the first game of a doubleheader.

The Royals, leaders in the AL West, have now won 24 of their last 27 games. Their 13-game winning streak tied them with Philadelphia for the longest winning streak in the majors this season.

Cowens' 22nd homer of the year followed a two-out single by George Brett in the first inning and Poquette stroked his two-run single with the bases loaded in the second to give Kansas City a 4-0 lead off loser Rick Langford.

Jackson homer wins it!

NEW YORK (UPI) — Reggie Jackson belted a dramatic, two-run homer in the ninth inning and made a pair of circus catches last night to give the New York Yankees a 2-0 victory over Boston which increased their lead to 3½ games over the Red Sox in the American League East.

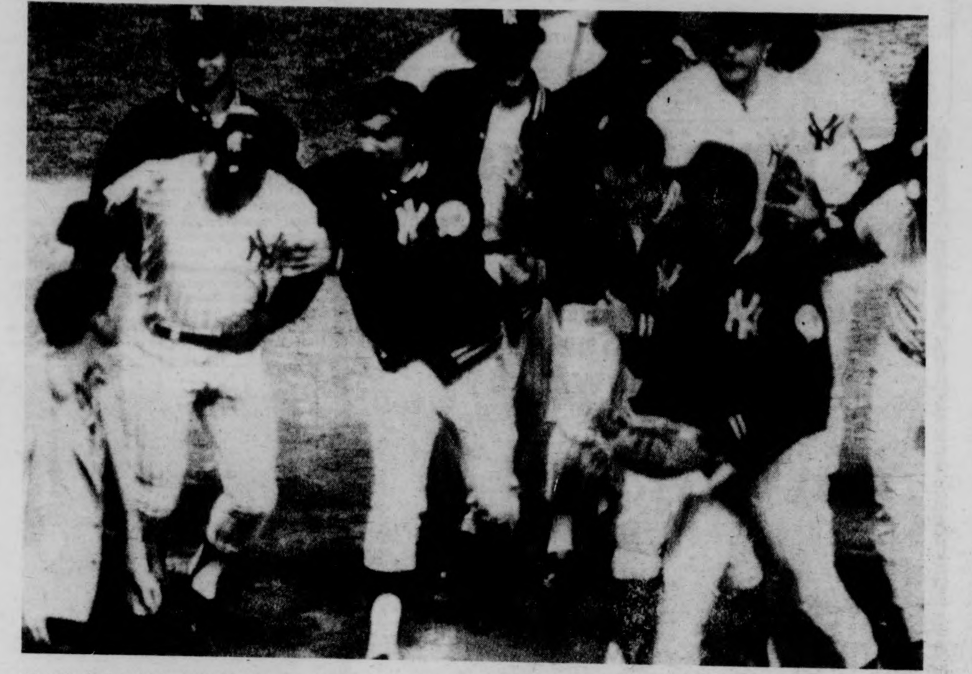
Jackson stroked his game-winning homer into the center field bleachers off loser Reggie Cleveland, 9-8, on a 3-2 pitch after Thurman Munson led off the ninth with a single up the middle.

Jackson, who has come under fire for his sloppy play in right field this season, saved the Yankees' from early disaster when he leaped high against the wall in right field to spear George Scott's line drive for the second out in the fourth inning after Jim Rice had reached base on a single.

Then, in the seventh with Denny Doyle on second base after singling and moving up on a sacrifice. Jackson rushed in to make a diving catch in right-center field off Bernie Carbo's sinking liner. However, a replay clearly showed that Jackson had trapped the ball, although the Red Sox did not protest.

Orioles sweep Blue Jays - move into second spot

Ed Figueroa survived frequent jams in completing a seven-hit shutout for his 15th victory against nine losses. He struck out two and walked three, but was outpitched by Cleveland until the ninth.



Reggie Jackson is hugged by winning pitcher Ed Figueroa at home plate after slugging a two-run homer in the bottom of the ninth to give the Yanks a 2-0 win over the Red Sox. Behind Jackson is Don Gullett and to Figueroa's left is manager Billy Martin and Paul Blair. (UPI)

For the losing Red Sox, it was a case of repeated missed scoring opportunities. They stranded a total of nine runners and had Figueroa in trouble in every inning except the first and eighth. But Figueroa was a bulldog when it counted.

In addition to benefitting from Jackson's catches, the right-hander left Rice stranded at third with a triple in the second inning by striking out Carlton Fisk and Butch Hobson. In the fifth, he pitched out of a none-out, bases-loaded jam by converting Fred Lynn's bouncer to the mound into a home-to-first double play and then knocked down Carl Yastrzemski's hard comebacker and threw him out at first.

Cleveland, who had beaten the Yankees seven times in eight previous decisions, held New York to just four singles until Munson's leadoff single in the ninth and allowed only one runner — Bucky Dent in the third inning — to reach scoring position. In addition, the portly right-hander retired 12 straight batters from the third through the seventh.

Netmen host URI in opener

By RALPH THORESON
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's tennis team begins its brief six-game fall schedule today on the Boyden courts at 2 p.m. against an enigmatic Rhode Island squad.

Last year the Minutemen were defeated, 6-3, by the Rams and this year's UMass coach Jay Ogden suspects Rhody will field a similar squad this season.

Ogden, a sport management grad student here, has a solid tennis background. He is a member of the U.S. Professional Tennis Association and has been a tennis teaching pro for the past nine years in Florida and New England. In his undergraduate days he attended St. Lawrence University, captaining the tennis team in 1972.

Ogden, in viewing this year's squad, said, "we had 45 candidates come out for the team, so we had a choice of some good young prospects."

Two of the more prominent hopefuls are Mark Suetteman from Amherst and Sergio Strepman, out of New York City. Ogden expects these two freshmen can help this year's squad.

The coach also said the loss of last year's number one singles player Adam Rosen, who transfered to a California school, will hurt the singles matches because the team no longer has a prominent singles player. The Minutemen have a nucleus of veterans, however, led by last year's number two man, junior Alan Green. Green will be joined by returning players Jim Barnhart, Rick Sharton, David Nowak, and Steve Heyl.

Ogden said the key to the season will be the play of his doubles teams. The top two doubles units of Green-Barnhart and Sharton-Heyl will have to carry a heavy load if the team expects to maintain or improve its second place finish in last year's Yankee Conference championships.

The Minutemen also placed sixth in the New England championships last spring. UMass had never placed higher than 15th in the tourney prior to the showing.

Last year's successful coach, Bill Brown, has moved to Colorado and is working for Digital Corp.

Jai-Alai means cash for bettors and fans

Editor's note: This is the first in a three-part series on Jai-Alai, 'the world's fastest sport.'

By JIM PAULIN
Collegian Staff

Two minutes before post time, at the Jai-Alai fronton (arena) in Hartford, an hour's drive from Amherst, a bell starts clanging, and as one Jai-Alai (pronounced "hi-li") junkie put it, "It's Pavlovian, the bettors start salivating and race to the ticket windows."

When entering the fronton, it's like reality's suspended. On the scoreboard, the regular clock is overshadowed by the post time clock, and the leisure suit, - pant suited - heavily made up bourgeoise sharpies and would-be sharpies go nuts.

Each game is played with eight teams, one or two men to a team, depending on whether singles or doubles matches are being played. The players are mostly Basque, with three Americans (Gonzales Joey, the second-best player), and Knucklehead Randy. One man is Chilean on the program, only the last names are given, except for Randy. No birthdates are listed.

Each team wears a different colored shirt, according to their order of appearance (post position), similar to the color coding of pool balls. Each player has at least eight different colored shirts, and players who are partners in one match will be opponents in another. This makes the game more complex, as the best player, Bolivar, might be paired with a lesser one, like Randy.

A player's identification number at a fronton is on the back of his jersey, while his post position is on the front. The color of his jersey is also keyed to the post position (No. 1 red, No. 2 blue, No. 3 white, No. 4 green, No. 5 black, No. 6 yellow, No. 7 brown, No. 8 purple).

White pants are standard, as is the red faja (belt-sash) and white sneakers.

The helmet is usually a modified cut-away football helmet.

When two teams play, one player plays the backcourt and another plays the front court. Usually the best player plays the back court. Randy is almost always in the backcourt, and when a pelota (ball) comes his way traveling at an angle and velocity sufficent to reach the man in the backcourt, Randy often ducks and lets the backcourter take it.

A match is won by the first team to score seven points. The server whips the pelota

The Messiah hath cometh

Relieving the frustrations of a "Reggie Jackson eats it raw" home run is no simple task. So, taking up pen, beer, and cigar in hand, I did what most Americans do when they seek relief... head for the bathroom.

Disguised as a Blue Jay fan, I entered the bathroom, threw a little Ivory liquid in the tub (I'm out of Mr. Bubble), hopped in and sat back to relax, shortly to realize the only place to flick the cigar ashes was into the tub. But what can you do?

After simmering in the tub for some ten minutes, my attention was grabbed by a head peering in at me from behind the bathroom door.

"Who are you?" I asked, obviously disturbed by the intrusion.

"I'm your Messiah," he responded curtly.

"You don't look like Jacyln Smith," I said, "but you can come in anyway."

In my usual congenial manner I offered him the only seat in the room, which he accepted graciously.

Now I had heard the Lord worked in mysterious ways, but the Messiah in my bathroom, sitting on the toilet wearing a complete Red Sox uniform while chewing a wad of tobacco was carrying it a bit too far.

Not to be taken in by a bad practical joke, I recovered from my mental depression to question the integrity of this character who had the audacity to call himself my Messiah.

"If you're a Messiah," I began, "prove it. Revive my rubber duck." (My duck had sprung a leak and sank to the bottom of the tub).

Almost instantaneously a beautiful rubber swan magically materialized in my tub.

"That's pretty good," I said, "you're a well-read Messiah."

He thanked me with one of those "it was nothing" expressions.

His integrity assured, I questioned him of his intentions.

"Well Mr. Messiah, what brings you tubside?"

"I heard you were looking for relief," he said as he pitched an imaginary baseball through my shower curtain and the bathroom window.

"That's not exactly the type of relief I had in mind, but we could use a pitcher with your kind of power. Have you got good stuff?" I asked.

"You forget, I'm the Messiah. I can do anything," he replied.

"Yah, right, but do you have good baseball sense. That's just as important you know."

"Try me."

"All right," I said, "Three men on, two out, Jackson is up. What do you throw him?"

"A grenade," he said and slowly began to dematerialize.

"Good luck!" I yelled at the space he previously occupied.

Leaning back in the warm tub I finished what was left of a Falstaff and a Robert Burns Black Watch cigar. "Heaven should be so good", I thought to myself.

Two for the Show for Smith Ensemble

By Michael P. Doran

UNDER MILK WOOD
By Dylan Thomas
Smith Ensemble Theatre
September 16 and 17

The Smith Ensemble theatre has produced a solid, well acted interpretation of Dylan Thomas' Under Milk Wood. Originally a voice play for radio, the Smith group has given it an elaborate set and some good action for the actors, but there are problems. Seeing as the poetry, the beautiful lines written by Thomas that capture the lyric speech of Wales are the main attraction in this play, the additions of set and action should be very carefully considered, keeping distraction from the lines to a minimum. Fortunately the actors' movement did nothing but add to the play. Unfortunately the set had the opposite effect.

The problem with the set was that it was there. There were huge backdrops of burlap trying to look like nets, slung unevenly around the stage. The huge black pointed arches that were supposed to symbolize the church were not balanced with another equally massive or complimentary configuration. The color scheme was awful — astro turf green with dull black and a light blue backdrop with the faint shadows of Milk Wood trees looking more like something dribbled down from the ceiling. The tables and the chairs were not placed in a way as to enhance the free movement of the actors.

At times the actors were bunched vertically on an extremely horizontal stage because of this. Another problem was the unnecessary use of sound effects such as the mooing of cows and the sound of the sea. These sounds were well provided for by the lyrical lines Thomas wrote.

The acting in this play was generally excellent with only one or two exceptions. Mike Rusk, who handled almost all of the character roles in the play, stole the show. His facial movements, his voice changes, and all his mime and action were well executed and very funny. He also possesses the essential ability for anyone who wishes to play a drunk — the ability to belch on cue. Jon Crane, who played the character of the blind sea captain and the plotting Mr. Pugh, added much stability to the play. The comic image of the malevolent intent present in those poisonous eyes behind those round cheeks as he looks at Mrs. Pugh is memorable. Bennett Fischer played all of his roles well, especially Willy Nilly the postman, in which he goes into almost sexual ecstacy while steaming open a freshly posted love letter. Jim Metzler was good, but his voice lacked the essential ability of differentiation so important in this play where there are eight actors playing over sixty parts. Still he adequately played his parts, maybe only appearing mediochre because of the calibre of those surrounding him.

The female actors were similarly good. Dorian Lerner, despite her Alice in Wonderland looks, played the trollop well and with good understanding. Whether sitting on the table twirling a strand of hair or lying in the goat pasture she managed to affect sensousness to a high degree. Jessica Regelson possesses a mobile face to fit her wide ranging voice and was cast to good advantage. She manages to go from all holiness and light to a seedy gypsy in the span of a few seconds, with the audience barely aware she is the same person. The other two female actors carried their roles well, but the roles themselves did not afford us a view of either's potential abilities.

All together the production of Under Milk Wood put on by the Smith Ensable Theatre managed to bring the small town in Wales and the residents' little eccentricities alive for this viewer. The complete cycle from night to dusk that elapses in 1½ hours real time acquaints one with both the beautiful poetry of Thomas and also says something about the culture he was trying to characterize. It is a good play — go to see it.

Teresa Phillips (Jessica Regelson) gets carried away by husband Bob (Bennett Fischer) in the Smith Ensemble Theatre's production of How the Other Half Loves playing in conjunction with Dylan Thomas' Under Milk Wood at the Hallie Flanagan Studio Theatre at Smith College.

HOW THE OTHER HALF LOVES
By Alan Ayckbourn
through Sept. 15

The Smith Ensemble Theatre did well to choose How The Other Half Loves as the second show in this two show repertory. It balances the more literary and artful production of Under Milk Wood, being a light comedy with a simple plot and many funny lines. Mr. Ayckbourn has used to good advantage both the style of plot and humor that were popular during the heyday of Broadway comedy. The play does take place in a contemporary setting though, with many of the jokes and allusions a little more piquant than their models.

The stage is set up in an interesting way. All of the action takes place in the living rooms of two couples — which are simultaneously lit and in use, with the action fluctuating back and forth constantly. Luckily the Hallie Flannagan Studio Theatre at Smith is set up so that a play can be performed in almost any corner of the room — thus making is possible for them to perform with a proscenium for one night and doing a theatre in the round production the next. The effect of having the audience all around the acting area, about five feet above is a heightening of the comedy of this play because you are allowed to look down at all the frantic comedy and not miss a thing.

The intermingling of the two sets of furniture on stage allowed for free movement in the entrances and exits which are very crucial to the flow. It also points up Ayckbourn's greatest achievement in this play, which is the toying with the thin line between the two sets of simultaneous acting and dialogue. All this is very funny, especially when a third couple is thrust in between these two households.

Of the six actors in the play Mike Rusk again stole the show. As the timid accountant Detweiler he exceis with his rodent-like movements. He is well suited for the role physically — his small wirey frame acting as a good contrast to his would be boss played by Jon Crane — who is at least four Detwielers big. Crane again gives an excellent performance as the rather loose brained executive who is led to believe that everyone except his own wife is having an affair and proceeds to try to solve their problems while totally missing his own. His wife, played by Beth Sweeney, is very funny as the high class bored housewife who fools around for excitement with a lower class rogue. Bennett Fischer, as that rogue, presented the only acting problem for this reviewer. The role calls for a surly character whose every other word is sarcastic. Unfortunately he has given us no variation. For example, I don't think one would be sarcastic about bad housekeeping in the same way one would be sarcastic about a sexual liaison. He could use a little toning down, not every line should be dripping. His wife, played by Jessica Regelson, adds a lot of energy to the production with her extremely strong voice and good physical presence. Finally, Dorian Lerner, who plays Mrs. Detweiler, took turns with her husband stealing the show. Everything about her — her dress, her movements, her voice, and her mouse-like squints — enhanced her role. She was very good.

I would highly recommend this play. It is too bad the theatre cannot seat more people but then some of the intimacy of this play would be lost. The last performance is this evening. If you want a seat you should get there early.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S THEATER WORKS
By City Sutdio Theater, Northampton

Reviewed by Cynthia A. Harhen

YOUNG PEOPLE'S THEATREWORKS

A spaceship bound for the new world. A mysterious talking riddle machine. A shiny silver robot who commands the ship and five spacesuit-clad children.

These were some of the spectacles that kept an audience of children fascinated on Saturday morning when the Young People's Theater Works premiered their first play of the season.

The Riddle Machine, by Canadian author Betty Lambert, directed by Andrea Hairston, is the first of four free children's productions which were made possible by a Title VI project grant from the Hampshire County CETA office.

In addition to the free productions which will be performed at the new theater space of the City Studio Theater, the program will provide creative drama workshops within the area schools and the community.

The play held the attention of its young audience by using flamboyant language, lively action, and a wide range of outer space sound effects throughout the performance. With the attention of its fascinated audience, the story of the ship's journey to the new world unfolded, serving as a metaphor for growing up and meeting new responsibilities.

The Riddle Machine's puzzling question, "what is the greatest riddle of all?" is poignantly answered when the children discover the answer within themselves-finding one's identity.

A charming play for kids and adults alike. It can be seen September 17th at the City Studio Theater.

Art/ Dry Ice Under Glass

THE ICEBERG AND ITS SHADOW
Larry Bell
University Gallery through October 7

Reviewed by Lesley Lawrence

A sensual, visual aura surrounds The Iceberg and Its Shadow, encouraging the viewer to become an active participant in the exhibit which is currently on display at the University Gallery. The artist is Larry Bell and the Iceberg is the result of work which began in 1975, the creation being a combination of technology and chemistry, as it is applied to the creation of modern art.

The title piece is comprised of 48 interchangeable parts which, when assembled, resemble an iceberg in the jagged irregularity of its outer silhouette. Forty pieces have been used for this exhibit with the number of possible arrangements being almost endless.

What is most significant about this piece are the sheets of plate glass which the artist has selected as his medium. Each glass plate is ⅜ of an inch thick and has been permanently treated with a coating of quartz and metallic inconel. A vacuum deposition process was employed in coating the glass which controls the color of the glass by the proportions of inconel and quartz used. The end result of this glazing process is a neutral reflective surface and a prism effect which is created as light shining through the glass ultimately produces colors varying in depth and intensity.

The glass pieces used in this exhibit exist as rectangle, triangle or trapezoidal shapes, with their physical dimensions relating directly with the artist's physical size; namely, they are not wider than his arm span, not taller than he can reach nor heavier than he can lift. In this way, the pieces avoid being overwhelming in scale and somewhat more inviting to the viewer.

The pieces in this exhibit are arranged in a zig-zag fashion creating a corridor which the participant may enter and exit, not unlike a maze. The piece works as a whole due to right angle relationships whereby all pieces join at exact right angles and balance on the weight of their own vertical thrust, as well as a thin seam of silicone or rubber cement. A balance is created so that the weight of the glass rests on the floor without putting stress on the seams.

While this review may appear complicated, the exhibit itself is not. Larry Bell thinks of his art as a teaching or learning experience and the Iceberg is just that. It is rich with visual possibilities. In the words of the artist "When someone enters the presence of the Iceberg, then he becomes part of it through his own mechanism, not through mine. His perception, his ability to see and to make decisions about how it looks, make him an inseparable part of it during that point of contact."

This exhibition runs through Oct. 7 at the University Gallery which is located in the Fine Arts Center. Gallery hours are Tuesday 11:30-8, Wednesday through Friday 11:30-4:30, Saturday and Sunday 2-5.

Art/ Dasenka Galleries Finds a New Home

By Art MacCormac

The handsome huge sidewalk clock in front of the old Harry Daniel's Block is running again on Northampton's Main Street. Passersby can stop and reset their watches by it and if they see they've got time to drop into the former men's clothing store to pay a visit to the new Dasenka Galleries which is now housed there.

A 200 piece display of graphics and paintings by Pioneer Valley artists entitled "Inaugural Exhibition" christened the Dasenka's new location last Sunday afternoon and also marked the opening of the Northampton Frameworks, the gallery's own downstairs frame shop.

Local artists in the exhibition include Alan Robinson, Abigail Rorer, Bryant Stewart, Karen Hatch, David Olsen, and Barry Seace.

According to owner-artist David Moser the new location will allow Dasenka to display more graphics as well as paintings, pottery, and porcelain exhibits. Dasenka was orginally located on West Street in Northampton.

Moser says that the frame shop will specialize in custom museum framing and might later offer special limited edition framing.

At Sunday's open house Douglas Haring, who is running the frameshop demonstrated various framing techniques.

The large windup clock outside is not the only restoration. The building's brick walls have been exposed adding a certain old world charm, the tin ceiling has been repainted and an enclosed foyer has been constructed at the gallery's entrance.

The building has been vacant since last November when Harry Daniels Inc. underwent severe damage from a general alarm fire. The clothing store was forced to shut down and Moser is now renting half of that space once occupied by the store. The building's owners, Ralph and Harry Daniels are negotiating with another business to rent out the other half.

Regular hours for the gallery and frame shop will be Tuesday through Saturday from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. and from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. The gallery itself will be open on Sundays from 3 to 8 p.m.

Books/ Stifled by Society and Sentimentalism

Victorian America: 'The women in question adjusted to a chronic state of confusion and were rewarded for their adjustment.'

THE FEMINIZATION OF AMERICAN CULTURE
By Ann Douglas
Alfred A. Knopf

By Cheryl Sreiberg

The Feminization of American Culture, though the title may suggest, is not concerned with the social, economic and political equality of women in our culture, nor with the gradual acceptance and integration of feminine ideas. The setting is mid-nineteenth century, Northeastern United States at the height of an age entirely dominated by the worst, most sentimental aspects of the Victorian spirit. While England's culture represented a complex and intelligent collaboration of available resources, Americans were laying down the foundations of our twentieth century mass-consumer, highly commercialized society. Of course a bit of history may be necessary to understand why Ann Douglas chose the literature and lives of the middle-class women and the liberal protestant ministers as her representatives, being the two classes pushed to the outer fringes, with no tangible power to affect the affairs of their day.

Although lengthy and somewhat redundant, the first and second parts of this book explore in great detail the history needed as well as the tragic results that follow. Unless extremely interested in the social history of the period, I would advise the reader to skim Part I for a more general view, paying closer attention in Part II to the chapters entitled, The Escape From History and The Periodical Press. The latter includes a short but highly insightful look at the Beecher family and the literature they produced.

It was a period of remarkable and explosive transition. Calvinism was slowly but steadily being defeated by a more liberal, popular religion directed to the feelings of their congregations (75 per cent women) instead of the minds. By 1933 the disestablishment of the Protestant church from government funding was complete. Ministers had to rely on public support, creating a dependence on popularity over theology. Calvinism had been authoritarian, repressive, and dogmatic but more importantly it had been the leading cultural and intellectual force in the country. That loss created an enormous vacuum for which the logical replacement should have been a "fully humanistic, historically minded romanticism."

Later in the book, the author will sight Margaret Fuller and Herman Melville as rare exponents of such romanticism. Instead, Calvinism was tragically defeated and replaced by an anti-intellectual sentimentalism utilized by men and women whose temporary victory in the end did not achieve their goals — freedom and independence.

Through a domestic, social history Ann Douglas exposes the vicious circle in which women were engulfed. Their education was highly inferior and superficial — they were not taught how to think but instead how to serve others. The church insisted that they were spiritually superior to men and so their role was to guide and help others by means of influence rather than action. The great American writers of the day, unlike the English writers who explored much of domestic and family life (Dickens, Eliot), chose to ignore them while the historians refused them a place in their stories of war and adventure. European visitors noticed how often American women were given "compensatory etiquette" or "indulgence as a substitute for power". Eventually women felt that they must "engineer their well-being in a world dominated by a sex essentially hostile to it."

The only role that the women were allowed to take in the new industrialized North was that of consumer and the market she chose was that of literature. With too much leisure time and the acute need to escape from a highly stifling life, women indulged in literature and the result was the sentimental, domestic novel. It was written by women, about women but sadly in most cases they only continued to expound on the already accepted virtues of sensitivity, sacrifice, delicacy and spirituality. The publishing world, a young, highly commercial business, was ready to supply the public demands and welcomed this type of literature. Finally having an sphere of communication and influence, the author explains that "the ministers and women in question did not in actuality expend their most intense energies combating those officially their opponents — instead they adjusted to a chronic state of confusion and were rewarded for their adjustment."

Although other societies in the nineteenth century produced great women writers, America produced not one. In what I found to be the most sensitive, well-written section of the book, Ann Douglas relates the life of Margaret Fuller, a brilliant woman who was forced to turn away from both literature and her country. After reading two-thirds of the book, it is in this biography that the reader realizes the depth of human understanding possible in the author's writing and finally the factual, dryness of the two earlier parts vanishes. The narrator develops a rapport with the reader which makes Part III, "Protest — Case studies in American Romanticism" surely the most satisfying part of the book.

Margaret Fuller was raised and educated by her father who trained her in the classics, unlike the education given to most girls, she was taught to think and reason for herself, to have a sense of history as well as community. Throughout her life, she was considered aggressive and difficult to understand, for she was always searching for knowledge and truth and therefore expected a great deal from those she met. Having almost no female precedents or models to help her believe in what she was and discover what more she could become, was always a problem for her. She was close friends with Emerson and spent a great deal of time working with him but eventually chose journalism as her means of expression. Her happiest years were spent abroad, mostly in Italy fighting for the independence of the Italian people.

With the same vigor and empathy, Ann Douglas ends her book with a study of Melville. To Melville, American society was lacking in the masculine qualities Calvinism had once bestowed; it was weak and sentimental and he spent a good deal of his life writing great literature that society would brutally reject. Yet he could not leave for he was profoundly American. Unlike his contemporaries who were writing for mainly commercial reasons, Melville believed that art was not a product but "an experience which can and must alter the participants view of life and himself." In works such as Pièrre, Melville turned openly and decisively against the middle-class sentimental reading public he had previously tried to avoid. He understood masculinity essentially as "resistance to sentimentalism, as an effort at a genuinely political and philosophical life." Like Margaret Fuller, he realized the tragedy of a society that chose domestication over adventure, emotion over reason, and mediocrity over imagination.

Surely the reward of struggling through the rather uneventful, factual first two hundred pages of this book comes in this last section. The author rounds out her view of the period with these two biographies and the reader can only realize then the frustration and sadness which American society forced on itself and its most talented minds. For any student of nineteenth century literature, history or philosophy, Ann Douglas offers much in her study of Victorian life which is both informative and enlightening.

AWAKE IN THE DARK
An Anthology of American Film Criticism, 1915 to the Present
Edited by David Denby
Vintage Books $4.95

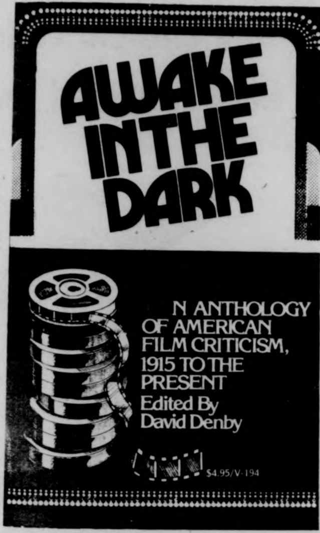
> "My intentions were to suggest the depth and variety of American film criticism with selections from all periods of movie history after 1915 (the time when film criticism begins to get interesting), and to put together a book of good prose that could stand on the shelf next to comparable volumes of literary, dramatic, art, dance or music criticism." —Denby

Critics can be a lot of fun, once they've arranged in their own professional ways to meet the public. Of all the various branches of critical writings, that oft shaky extension which serves to tell us what to see and how to see it in the cinema also manages to tell us who to read consistently about the movies. David Denby, himself quite a popular hero around Boston via the Boston Phoenix, is well aware of the "star-system" within the movie criticism field (almost as if they bask in some of the glittering rays that overshot the true cinema star) and supports that idea by assuring us in this well-thought collection of essays that their intelligence has in no way been affected. "My contributors are either working critics or those intellectuals writing occasionally on movies who have given themselves to the medium in a totally uncondescending way." Refusing their power and authority, critics analyze film to get "the surface right" and necessarily bow with modesty before the immense task of combining values culled from other art-forms and carefully integrated within this new synthesis.

Denby argues for the "sensibility" and "personal voice" of the American film critics, warding off the new "progressive" methodologies: — "The answer is that the kind of good writing found in this book is coming under increasing attack in university film courses, and is in danger of being replaced by the new methodologies — structuralism and semiology — that now dominate serious film discourse in France, and increasingly, in England. This is not the place for discussion of either of these 'sciences'." — With an open door policy, David allows the critics themselves to provide all the various methods needed to deal intelligently about film. Nightmare dissections "complete with graphs, charts, equations, vectors," about such entertaining movies as "North by Northwest" only provide a technical rigidity and imagination block serving to turn away many potential film critics.



AWAKE IN THE DARK
N ANTHOLOGY OF AMERICAN FILM CRITICISM, 1915 TO THE PRESENT
$4.95/V-194

All this of course, also glorifies the critic in that his war is long and hard nowadays as every undergrad sinks himself into a lecture hall chair to tear a film to bits in order to understand more. Denby's conclusion is that writing about movies is very, very hard. Hence this delicately selected anthology with some indisputably great film criticism.

Divided into seven sections, the development of serious film writing begins in 1915 with Vachel Lindsey's Thirty Differences Between the Photoplays and the Stage under the section entitled IN DEFENSE OF A POPULAR NEW ART FORM. Panofsky's Style and Medium in the Motion Pictures (1934; revised 1947) is perhaps the most graceful technical writing on film ever and still very vital in film criticism; "To prestyle reality prior to tackling it amounts to dodging the problem. The problem is to manipulate and shoot unstylized reality in such a way that the result has style. This is a proposition no less legitimate and no less difficult than any proposition in the older arts." Also in this first section you will find Pauline Kael's first New Yorker piece, the controversially favorable Bonnie and Clyde (1967).

FILM AS HIGH ART can boast that these critics have demanded from film the highest standards imposed on any art form as in William Troy's piece on M (1933) where he takes a look at Lang's work from a classical tragedy viewpoint. Dwight Macdonalds' 8½; Fellini's Obvious Masterpiece also elevates that work to the highest standards of any art. In the "CRITICAL METHOD" section Andrew Sarris explains his Toward a Theory of Film History — Intro to the "American Cinema" (1967) and Richard Corliss' Notes on a Screenwriter's Theory, 1973 — Intro to "Talking Pictures (1973) among others, both serve to strengthen the value of individualistic criticism "GENRES, DIRECTORS, PERFORMERS, ENTERTAINMENT," all boast tasty trips into their respective boundaries covering a wide array; Brando to Cagney, Huston to Peckinpah, comedies to Film Noir. "Notes on the Contributors" close the book with fine sketches on America's finest film critics, the entirety having left a much grander and more intellectually realized perspective on the art of film and performance; a breathtaking sweep through the entire film world.

David Denby's purpose to elevate the film critic to the level of other art critics is noble, Galahadian, and painstaking; nevertheless, by cleaning up the backyard he has ascribed to greater fame those writers truly and uncondescendingly engaged in discovering the many miracles and mysteries of one of the very greatest art forms. The intelligence of these people are what make it so.

INDIA By V. S. Naipaul
Alfred A. Knopf
IN THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC
By Orville Schell
Random House

The two countries which hold the greatest aura of mystery to Westerners today are probably India and China. India, with her ancient secrets and rituals, held tight to a past over two thousand years old seems unable to make a smooth transition into our modern world according to Mr. Naipaul. Born in India but raised in Trinadad, the author has developed a compulsion to understand the problems of his ancestor's native land which he sees to be crumbling — a wasteland of extreme poverty where the pervasive influence of the past clouds perception of the present.

Uncompromising in his distressful attitude toward India, one can only wonder how clouded his own perception is by his inability to understand the heart of India and its people. He admits in the forward that, "India is for me a difficult country...I am at once too close and too far away." The bittersweet desire to come to terms with his own roots within his own personal vision rather than those of India create an overly subjective interpretation which makes his ideas about India questionable.

Still, it is an ambitious piece of writing which at the least raises important questions about India's lack of consistent leadership or unified ideology and the intellectual depletion caused by the invasions and conquests of the past thousand years. With hopes for the emergence of a Modern India, independent of outside forces, and a strong conviction for the struggling civilization, Naipaul sees only one answer — "The past has to be seen dead; or the past will kill." The one idea he knows may be impossible for India to accept.

As with V. S. Naipaul, Orville Schell is also a foreigner, constantly in the limelight and unable to dig deeply into the thoughts or feelings of the Chinese people except on rare occasion.

Hopping from museum to lecture, lecture to museum, one is frustrated by the author's factual account of his journey through the People's Republic of China which lacks in language and content the imagination and emotion fitting such a privileged experience. With so much unknown to us about China, it is extremely disappointing to find the author asking so few questions of the Chinese as well as of himself. However being one of the few accounts existing, it is certainly worth reading for the information it lends.

With the ability to grasp detail and recall conversation, Mr. Schell captures small segments of life in China, especially at the Shanghai factory and the Tachai People's Commune. The people he meets are always warm and accepting of their American visitors, never criticizing America only the idea of capitalism. Everywhere they are conscientious of their duties to their society as well as to each other and amazingly, all seem happy and fulfilled. If they question their lives, they need only to look at the old woman sitting outside her home with feet four inches long, crippled because they were bound at age ten or at the mansions in Shanghai once owned by centers to realize that life has improved for all since the Revolution.

Admiration as well as love for Mao is present everywhere and everyone in China including the American visitors believe that Mao's ideology will live long past his lifetime on earth. (This book was written before Mao's death.) The author warms up a bit toward the end of the book and the reader discovers that the people of his journey have captured his heart. With traces of mascara and rouge from a local theater production the night before, the whole village wakes at sunrise to bid their guests farewell. The reader can only wish that someday he too has the opportunity to visit China.

SIX MEN
By Alistair Cook
Alfred A. Knopf

I must admit to feeling guilty about this review. I feel as if I had just sat through the reminiscences of my dear grandfather and then proceeded to poke holes in all his long held values and beliefs with words like outmoded, dull and unrevealing.

The book Six Men by Alistair Cook can only be recommended on the basis of style. It is a fine example of good, solid, old-fashioned British-English composition, with virtually unused words speckling well formed and coherent paragraphs. But we all knew that Mr. Cook could write well. The problem is that he does not put this gift to work in these six short biographies. He also uses his intimate acquaintenances with the subjects (Charlie Chaplin, M. L. Mencken, Humphrey Bogart, Adlai Stevenson, Bertrand Russell, and Edward the VIII) to no real advantage in the context of revelation or personal insight.

In such a book, where all but one of the subjects were long time friends, (the exception of Edward VIII is excused by the fact that he personally covered the ten days of his abdication for N.B.C.), things should go one of two ways: either Mr. Cook is revealed through his thoughts about these men and their human condition, or he can reveal these men and their lives to the reader with little intrusion by himself. Studs Terkels' new book, Talking to Myself, is a good example of the former. Any well written biography is an example of the later. Unfortunately Mr. Cook achieves neither. What we get is a watery, uninformative view of both subject and author. I do have one nagging doubt. Maybe it is that Mr. Cook really did reveal himself as a fairly mediocre man awash in a sea of great men whose real importance he lacks the ability to grasp. In either case the book is, therefore, not very good reading.

Maybe I expected too much from Grandpa. Maybe we should be satisfied with a well written, easily read book. Maybe he has never come to the point in his life where he had to probe his own deepest thoughts about the world and its people. I could forgive this if he did not include himself so often in such maudlin ways. Also, like his book about America, the shallowness of his thoughts on his subject tended to make his subject seem shallow. In two of the essays he remarks on how much he admires the ability of a person to employ the English language in order to keep at a distance or at least battle with the world (i. e., H. L. Mencken and Adlai Stevenson). Subconsciously he has recognized his only ability to contend with his world. Even though the Book Of The Month Club has recommended this one, I wouldn't.

AIRTO
I'm Fine. Howare Are You?
(Warner Bros.)

Airto's albums have always been interesting for their inventive fusion of Brazilian, jazz and rock elements, but on his debut for Warners he seems to be following George Benson's example by throwing in a few too many commercial concessions. There are lead vocals throughout almost every track; string synthesizers are occasionally brought in to give the sound some additional smoothness that it doesn't need; and Tom Scott even appears on a couple of tunes to play the same sort of sax solo that he plays on everyone else's records.

The result is a rather ordinary album, and one which allows the musicians involved a chance to do little more than tag along unenthusiastically. Of the album's better moments, "The Happy People" is an undiluted Brazilian piece and seems to be the sort of music that Airto and his band have the most affinity for. And the "Celebration Suite" is exciting and evocative, although it steals its major theme from a song on Airto's 1973 album, Fingers.

Airto is still a brilliant percussionist, and provides some of the album's most interesting moments with a variety of exotic and rhythmic sounds, but as a whole, there's too much sound and not enough substance. I still recommend Airto's music, but I suggest you go back to his earlier CTI and Arista albums to hear the creativity that he's really capable of.

—Brett Milano

NEW WAVE
(Vertigo-British import)

By now you must have heard about punk rock, but due to the ultra-conservative policies of radio stations and the concentration by the media on "punk's" extra-musical aspects, you probably don't know what it sounds like. This anthology is, for the moment, the best introduction.

New Wave features selections from the excellent albums of the New York Dolls, the Ramones, and the Flamin' Groovies, plus just the right cuts from the uneven works of the Runaways and the Damned. There are songs from forthcoming albums by Talking Heads, Richard Hell, the Dead Boys, and the Boomtown Rats, as well as a couple of tunes by Patti Smith and Little Bob Story that may never make it to other LP's. They even throw in something by Skyhooks, whom I've never heard described as a New Wave band, and yet it sounds fine here.

Due to contractual obligations, many important New Wave artists could not be included. But there is sufficient diversity on the record; anybody who thinks that the Ramones, Patti Smith, Talking Heads, and the Flamin' Groovies even remotely resemble one another just isn't rock'n'roll person. If you are so closed-minded that you can't find anything here to get into, then you've only yourself to blame for being bored with current rock.

WEAK AT THE KNEES
Mylon
LeFevre

MYLON LEFEVRE
Weak In The Knees
(Warner Brothers)

The only people whom Mylon Lefevre will make "weak in the knees" with his debut album Weak In The Knees, will be those who are truly devoted Christians, Lefevre has worshipped Christ for a few years, dating at least back to '73 when he teamed with Alvin Lee (ex-Ten Years After) on a disc called On The Road To Freedom, which included George Harrison and Stevie Winwood among others.

Weak In The Knees begins strongly enough with a Dave Loggins tune, "Goodbye Miss Sadness," which has good harmony vocals.

As one keeps listening, however, some initially impressive licks grow repititious. The six various guitar players including unheralded John Prine's ex-sideman Reggie Young, play riffs that are in short time, too predictable.

Lefevre, who sings and plays acoustic guitar, is also joined by four piano players, banjo man Bobby Thompson and Charlie McCoy, who plays excellent harmonica on a good bluegrass(!) version of Dylan's "Girl From The North Country."

"All My Love," however, sounds too much like disco, and "Love As One" is too much preaching ("Just thank the Lord for the freedom we don't have to die...") for most of us to take alongside an uninteresting melody. The same goes for "Understand It ("Lord, I guess we'll understand it someday...").

Warmer moments like "Banjo Boy" are redeeming factors of the album, but Weak In The Knees still leaves mine intact.

— John Bergman

NEIL YOUNG
American Stars'n Bars
(Reprise)

After Neil Young's twelve years at the top, one is forced to wonder when he will finally burn out. If American Stars 'n Bars is any indication, his demise is still a long way off. All kinds of music can be found on his newest release. Mellow folk, country, smokin' rock'n roll, and extended solo guitar work all blend together to make Stars'n Bars just as good as anything he's done in the past.

Side one was recorded with Crazy Horse as well as with Ben Keith on steel guitar, Carole Mayedo on violin, and Linda Ronstadt and Nicolette Larson on background vocals. The overall flavor is country and there is not a weak song among the five.

Side two really displays Young's genius. Even though it is a collection of "leftovers" dating back as far as 1974, it is as fine a side of music as Neil has ever released. "Star of Bethlehem," recorded with Emmylou Harris, "Will To Love," "Like a Hurrican," and "Homegrown," an ode to that precious green weed, are all incredible in their own unique way. American Stars'n Bars will prove popular with hardcore Young fanatics as well as with those unfamiliar with his music. It is not an album to be missed.

—Tom Aversa

HAPPY THE MAN
ARISTA RECORDS

HAPPY THE MAN
(Arista)

Happy the Man gets one point for naming themselves after an obscure Genesis song, and a few more for putting together an album which is polished enough to make you forget it's only their debut. Although the alubm is primarily instrumental, this is not fusion music: it's an intelligent and creative extension of some of the characteristics of "progressive" music that we've come to know and love over the years.

There are arrangements which take each piece through an imaginative series of changes and developments; performances which sound spontaneous without being improvised; and passages of rocking exuberance. And, save for a few nods in Gentle Giant's direction and the occasional Floydian slip, their music is original and immediately recognizable as their own.

Particularly admirable are the keyboard textures in "Carousel" and "Starborne." Happy the Man's album is an encouraging sign that there are still enough up-and-coming bands to keep progressive rock alive and vital. This is definitely one to go for.

Gong Live etc.
Virgin VGD 3501 (import)

It's no ordinary coincidence that founding Gong member David Allen went to Baudelaire's evil city, Rimbaud's homeland, and came back to Britain with Gong, a poetic, surreal, musically mysterious entourage if one ever existed. Somewhere between Devonshire and Algeria their sound billows on the wind, their cosmic recesses are drunken boats swiftly bringing you through the barriers of isolation to mantric rediscoveries of what it must be like to truly let yourself go.

Mystery and mischief reign absolute somewhere between their professional command of Bebop, Eastern, African and plain ole amplified electric and eclectic guitars.

First picked up by the French as new members of their Avant-Garde, Gong later signed to Britain's Virgin records (who else?) where Allen's true wizardry was to propel the group into his impressively peculiar "Radio Gnome Trilogy;" a humorous attempt at an entire planet Gong mythology replete with Pot Head Pixies, the Octave Doctor and Flying Teapots. Of course the sales never approached their imaginations in skyrocketing to the moon and their abrasive, sometimes serene and always well-intentioned flirtations with unreality became more sure-footed and grounded in reality as time wore on. Allen left the band, Hillage embarked on his solo career as did most other original members and Gong was left an exhausted, less whimsical, and much paler semblance of its old self.

Recent releases Shamel and Expresso cannot testify to the wonderful approach to life and fun Allen's creation had.

Gong Live fortunately carries back from oblivion wondrous strains preserved from an earlier age when Gong's self-reliance and humor were still pure. Culled from live recordings during 1973, 1974, and 1975, these performances testify to their cleverness and versatility with every-sharpened clarity. With nice and lengthy coverage from the trilogy which originally consisted of Flying Teapot (1973), Angel's Egg (1973) and You (1974) Malherbe's reeds get much playing time and lend the pro-jazz aura to the band while Tim Blake's synthesizer works endlessly for the ethereal effect as a diving board for Gili Smith's space whispers. Guitars trickle through the melange like waterfalls, a particular image Steve Hillage's playing can't seem to get away from nowadays.

Throughout four sides Gong keep up a high energy performance never so consistent on the studio recordings, showing forth a new and powerful aspect; a reassertion that works effectively for their very personal material. These recordings emit a very strange atmosphere for their owner; they take you pretty far out and only connect to what's down here from the top of the heap. The playing is fine, the vocals loose and outlandishly communicative; a performance for poets not without its connections to the contemporary poetry scene.

You can bop and scat along in nonsensical grandeur far removed from the dull, cosmic ride most rockers afford us. You can also feast upon this creation's two attempts at making a single and breathe a sigh of relief to know that you might have been crazy enough to want them.

The final side takes Gong up to their new regroupment late in September, 1975, a little while before Shamal but the strings to their past still being held tightly with mostly You material.

Always destined as cult material, Gong Live will probably be the last release so extraordinary and whimsical for any of these folks.

"Long after most other properly alternative bands had either collapsed into disarray or slipped their skins, Gong continued, purposefully self-reliant." — Angus Mackinnon NME

Poetry

liquid air fluid breathing undulate like snake scales emitting musk perfumes. the calm before the storm.
oppressive weightlessness sweat stain fecundity.
a radio blares away invisible in the dark charged night.
summer comes on the skin in the night on a flood a pressure a heated caress of every inch of skin.
summer comes at the height of heat wave summer comes on the skin salt and scented summer lies on the chest in the dusk summer breathes ammonia and speaks in tongues summer shudders one perfect rhythm, then hides while cricket song chills into silence..........

Persona Non Grata

I dreamed the bastards evicted me from everywhere

No Trespassing signs were posted on the perimeter of the campus

The anthracite asshole had me purged then said it was nothing personal

I dreamed the American Legion had a convention in the Campus Center and all the old soldiers faded away from boutulism from Oxford Pickles

I dreamed the groom to be busted me for swinging from the gutter while I was reaching for a beer.

When there was no where else to go, I became a guerilla beyond the pale and was constantly on the barricades.

I listened to Woody Guthrie and he said, "I saw a sign, it said No Trespassing, looked behind it, there was nothing on it."

—Jim Paulin

Suburban

Clothes make the woman, break the man.
Crippled homes, dark oil drums piled high, greasy shadows.
Murmurs from stinking lizards echo through the night.
Warm odors, changing guards above and beyond the manhole.
In the mourning
the only new faces in church are the priests'
Sun glissando gasoline rainbow
allow the rains.
There's a faith in finding worse that I may return.

Roy Brown in concert

Roy Brown in concert
September 16
Library Lawn, UMass

Roy Brown is one of the pioneers of the new song movement in Puerto Rico. He was one of the original members of Grupo Taone, and along with Noel Hernandez, he helped found Disco Libre, an independentista record company.

In a recent interview, Brown talked about his identity as a Puerto Rican artist in the movement for independence:

"Art has become a huge industry, controlled, I'd say, 90 per cent by North American capital. That means they control TV, films, record companies, record distribution within the whole island. Puerto Rican artists with a political conscience therefore are very limited in what they can do."

"This is a phenomenon all over the world. The North American imperialist culture has taken over the mass media, and controls the artistic vision. This mass media has become at best, a mere mindless form of entertainment, feeling no social obligation toward the betterment of humanity. This art is superficial, repetative; it shows in the quality of the movies, the TV shows, the songs which are sung," he said.

"We must look for and encourage artists who will be committed. Maybe this is the word we must begin to use, because 'protest singers' doesn't say enough. That refers to some singers, maybe like Bob Dylan and others, who simply say that things are wrong and drop out. On my recent trip to Peru, I found that singers there hated that term, because it meant to them singers who made a good living speaking about peoples' problems without being willing to identify themselves with the struggles of these people to make things better."

"We are not like that. We have an answer. We have a program and we know where we are going. We are not just unsatisfied, not just protesting. We are personally committed to the struggle. Our songs are not pamphlets, they are poetry. We intend to transform culture and along with it the political and economic structures. We are revolutionaries."

Gregory calls youth to action

By MARK HORAN
Collegian Staff

Comedian and socio-political analyst Dick Gregory told a crowd of about 1600 last night that it's "the young folks that got the power to change things in this world."

Gregory's speech, co-sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program and the Student Organizing Project, was attended by a racially mixed crowd at the Fine Arts Center Auditorium.

Gregory began with a stinging and humorous 30 minute monologue designed more for comedy than message. Gregory then paused to greet the crowd before introducing more serious and sensitive topics.

Gregory touched upon nearly every political problem of the day in proving that "the super pimps are trying to manipulate us," and asserting that "the trickin' has gotta stop." Gregory then called upon the young people to assert their power.

"The power ain't in a gun, it's not locked in a bank vault, it's not locked in the color of your skin. The power is from within. The power is locked in your heart. The power is love. Not the fun kinda love ... but the love that knows no envy or hate."

The crowd remained attentive, although pausing for frequent applause and laughter.

Gregory said it was the young who decided to stop the Viet Nam war and it was the young who have led the fight to give life and dignity to the people of South Africa.

Gregory turned to Kent State and said "youngsters used the power and beauty of their bodies" to stop the building of the gymnasium on the site of the 1970 shootings. Gregory cited the importance of the site in the upcoming court case against the Ohio governor and National Guard.

"Now someone will think twice when they try to get slick."

Gregory touched on a variety of other subjects including busing, women's issues, racial tension at Carson Beach in Boston, and the upcoming University of California Medical School quota system court case.

"If I grew up in a land that detested segregation then I could tolerate someone getting upset with quota systems. I only asked for an equal education and you couldn't give it to me."

The white super rich are trickin' us, with gas shortages and coffee shortages. We gotta stop the trickin'."

Gregory especially related his views to the University scene.

"You gotta tell these institutions of higher learning that they exist to serve you, you don't exist to serve them. They gotta start educating you and not indoctrinating you."

Gregory attacked President Carter on numerous fronts, most notably religion. Gregory questioned the kind of Christianity which could condone the exclusions of Blacks from its church.

"President Carter is a born again Christian. That's good. I'm a refried bean."

Gregory qualified his comments on religion by adding that "there was nothing wrong with religion or Christianity, but until you get the spirit together you can kiss the rest goodbye. If America becomes the number one spiritual country in the world, then poverty will be gone."

Gregory played down the Bert Lance controversy saying that what Lance was doing wasn't any different than what "they're doing at the Chase Manhattan in New York. They're just slicker."

"You gotta turn this thing around; I'm tired of living in a country that spends more money on a federal highway system than it does on a federal education program. If we could only get 90 or 95 per cent of the young people registered to vote then we would instill some fright into those big politicians that hold the money for your education."

Gregory, a former professional comedian who became a well-known social commentator in the 1960's, is famous for his 800-mile "Run Against Hunger" and his 1972 71-day fast to dramatize the seriousness of the drug problem in America. He now spends his time lecturing and writing.

Gregory's visit was the first Distinguished Visitor's Program lecture of the year and helped kick off the 1977 Student Unionization conference to be held here on Sunday.

"Tell those educators they exist to satisfy your needs," said social critic Dick Gregory.

Nuclear plants refuel

By ROBERT CONANT
Collegian Staff

Two major New England nuclear plants will undergo refueling process this fall in preparation of upcoming high demand periods this winter.

Northeast Utilities, owners of Millstone I & II nuclear facilities in Waterford Connecticut and major shareholder of the Connecticut Yankee facility, yesterday told the Collegian in a phone interview that both the Millstone II and Connecticut Yankee facilities will shut down for six-to-eight week stretches this fall to allow for refueling.

Gerry Doughty, a spokesman for Northeast Utilities, said the two plants will be refueled during the low demand months of October, November, and December in preparation for the high demand period of January through April. The third facility, Millstone I, is to undergo refueling next spring sometime.

According to Doughty, most facilities will be operating at full capacity during the months of January through April. Doughty said the base load of power during this period is high because the energy demand for heating homes and buildings is high.

Nuclear-generated power facilities supply much of the energy required to fulfill the base load demand he said. "During the peak demand periods," said Doughty, "oil-generated and hydroelectric facilities cover the fluctuating demands. Peak demand hours occur between the hours of five and eight p.m., when the most energy is used," he said.

Doughty said the Connecticut Yankee facility is led for refueling in late October and early November with the Millstone II plant refueling set for the end of November.

The nuclear facilities which Northeast Utilities has shares in, accounted for 66 per cent of the total energy supplied by the company during the period of January through April for its customers, according to figures supplied by Doughty. Other New England nuclear plants in which Northeast Utilities has shares are Yankee Rowe, Vermont Yankee, and Maine Yankee.

Hayden to kick off union conference

By JACK GRAVELL
Collegian Staff

Tom Hayden will commence a day of activities focusing on the drive for student unionization at the Campus Center this Sunday, September 18. His speech is scheduled for 1:00.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery will also speak on issues relevant to the unionization movement later in the day.

The initial emphasis of the day is to get students involved in political decision-making. Through workshops, students will be able to express dissatisfiaction with campus practices according to Jim Starr of the Legal Services Offices. Based on a student poll, each workshop will concentrate on an issue shown to be of most importance, i.e., quality of teachers and overcrowding of dorms. These groups will then break down into sub-groups dealing with more specific grievances. These grievances will then be transformed into policies.

Following the workshops will be a discussion of unionization stragegy and operation. Students will get a chance to question how a union could benefit them individually.

The evening "Plenary Session" will be conducted like a political convention. Policies originated in workshops will be voted on in order to formulate a platform for the student union.

A spokesperson for the Student Organizing Project urges all students to attend the day's activities as this is a rare opportunity to turn complaints into constructive political action, the spokesperson said.

By RICK YOUNG
Collegian Staff

The Campus Center-Student Union Board of Governors (BOG) last night voted to allocate space for the Central Travel Bureau of Springfield, Ma. to operate a travel agency where the Campus Center barbershop now stands.

The board also voted to employ a driver to operate a van providing transportation for handicapped students to the Campus Center. The van will be driven by work-study students on week nights during the semester, at an estimated cost of $3.50 per night.

The board elected six chairpersons for the committees which operate under the BOG's jurisdiction. Those elected, and the committees they will head include: Linda Issenberg, Food Committee; John Foley, Finance Committee; Bruce Belcher, Space Committee; Jane Kaplan, Operations Committee; David Kantor, Programming Committee; and Michael Federow, Constitution Committee.

Vacancies on the board include eight at-large positions, and area positions in Southwest, Central, and Northeast residential areas. The Graduate Student Senate will also appoint one member.

Discussion followed concerning the disappearance of lounge furniture from student lounges in the Campus Center complex. Campus Center director William Harris said the furniture was probably taken by Recognized Student Organizations. The matter was sent to the Space Committee for further review.

Extra funds won't bring recovery

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

UMass Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery yesterday told the Faculty Senate the $81.9 million the UMass-Amherst campus has requested for fiscal year 1979 will not return the campus to the conditions prior to the three years of budgetary crisis.

"In order to take this University where we were" before 1975, said Bromery, it would take a budget of $87-88 million."

Bromery told the senate the University hopes to cut the vacancy rate from 11 to six to seven per cent during the 1979 fiscal year.

Bromery also announced the appointment of George Beatty to the position of budget director, replacement Warren Gulko who Bromery said left for another position at the University of Hawaii.

Bromery said a search committee will be formed to identify a successor to Beatty's former position as Associate Director of Budgets.

Faculty Senate yesterday began another semester of bi-monthly meetings by listening to reviews of summer events from Bromery, and Vice Chancellor and Provost Paul L. Puryear.

Senate Secretary Terence Burke told the other senators arrangements to fill any senate and committee vacancies should be completed in time for the next meeting in two weeks.

Bromery also told the senate a meeting will be held this afternoon at 2:30 in Bowker Auditorium to discuss the latest plan of reorganizing the state's public higher education system.

Bromery told the senate he is working with UMass Trustee Stephen G. Breyer to ensure that all members of the University community can offer their thoughts on the planning process during the present search for a new University president.

Breyer chairs a committee composed of five trustees, five faculty, and three students which will screen applicants and recommend candidates for president to the full board, which will make the final decision.

UMass President Robert C. Wood early this summer announced his resignation effective Jan. 1, 1978 after serving seven years in the office.

Bromery also introduced to the senate James L. McBee as the new Vice Chancellor of Administration and Finance. McBee began his duties in July.

Vice chancellor and Provost Paul L. Puryear outlined a new organization of his associate provosts and also summarized the present stage of the administration's five year plan.

Puryear said Vere C. Chappell is overseeing administrative areas as an associate provost; David. C. Bischoff, the academic programs; and Eugene B. Piedmont, in an interim role, the research and graduate school area.

Puryear said a search committee, which will soon be organized, will identify a permanent associate provost for the research and graduate school area by July, 1978.

Puryear told the senate the long range plan is currently in a "holding pattern" pending action from the President's office and Board of Trustees.

Puryear also said there may be some "uncertainties" as to how far the planning stage should go until a new president is identified.

The new Vice-Chancellor James L. McBee sits beside Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery at yesterday's bi-monthly Faculty Senate meeting.

NEAG Fall Day will feature bands

By ELLEN DAVIS
Collegian Staff

Plans for the Quad's annual Fall Day, better Northeast Area representation were topics of discussion at last night's first meeting of the Northeast Area Government.

The meeting, which was held in B1 Knowlton, was attended by 22 people representing all the dorms in the quad, except two.

"To get people together," said NEAG Co-President Diane Lauricella, the area will be having Fall Day from noon to 6 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 24.

A beer wagon with 40 kegs of beer will be on the Quad, as well as a refreshment stand with soft drinks, potato chips, and hot dogs. Everything will be 25 cents.

Entertainment will be provided by the Pam Bricker Band from 12-3 p.m., and by London, a 60's British rock group from 3-6 p.m.

Rain day for the event will be the following Sunday, Sept. 25. If it rains then, it will be held in the Worcester Dining Commons.

Co-President Lauricella also marked the event as the "beginning of an effort to reorganize things in the Northeast Area."

The next NEAG meeting will be Thursday, Sept. 22, at 6:30 in the basement of Knowlton House, which is serving as the area's office. By then, Lauricella hopes to have two reps and an alternate from each dorm elected.

Starting next week, NEAG will also be having office hours in B1 Knowlton, which can be reached by calling 545-1595.

After next week, the group will rotate meetings from dorm to dorm.

Dave Goodhue, NEAG Co-President, encouraged the representatives present to hold organized meetings in their dorms to actively seek the opinions of more people in the area.

"There are a lot of good people and ideas in the Quad," he said, "We just have to find them." Goodhue also urged full representation of Northeast area.

NEAG secretary Carol Nunly announced plans to put out a weekly or monthly area newsletter, which was described by Lauricella as "another way of getting out to people."

SGA senator Marian Lemire, from Mary Lyon, said the Northeast-Sylvan area doesn't have adequate representation in the student senate.

Lemire said next week is nomination week for Student Government Association elections, which will be held Sept. 26 and 27. Interested students have until noon on Sept. 27 to file nomination papers, which can be obtained in room 420 of the Student Union.

$16 million given in financial aid

By MARCIA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Approximately $16 million in financial aid will be awarded this year, a 10 per cent increase over last year, according to Student Services Director Daniel Fitzpatrick.

Of this $16 million, half will be awarded in bank loans and outside funds, the remainder alloted in federal and state aid monies, $3 million of which will be alloted for work study, according to Fitzpatrick.

Presently 8,400 UMass students receive financial aid. Ten per cent of the approximately 9,000 students awarded assistance this year declined aid.

The UMass Financial Aid office is the largest in New England in terms of volume, according to Fitzpatrick, referring to the 12,000 applications received from undergraduates this year.

Fitzpatrick noted that through a "highly dedicated and competent" staff, 80 per cent of applicants received notice of financial aid decisions before they left school last May.

He said that in previous years there was "considerable chaos" because the office was understaffed.

Fitzgerald said that one weekend 1,000 applications were processed by staff members who brought approximately 125 applications home with them.

'American Cup'

Great race to see

By MEGAN O'REILLY
Collegian Staff

Whether you're an old salt or prone to seasickness, loaded with cash or scouring the garbage cans in the D.C., booked up with a heavy date or desperately searching for something to do this weekend, no matter what! Head down to Newport, Rhode Island for the time of your life at the America's Cup Race finals.

The two 12-metre yachts, Courageous, the American defender and Australia, the challenger, will compete for the world's oldest international sporting trophy. In the 126 year history of the race, America has never lost.

Ted Turner, skipper of the Courageous, who has a reputation as a relentless egomaniac, guided Courageous to her second victory yesterday in the four-of-seven-race series, beating Australia by 5½ minutes.

The final race this weekend will climax an event which has attracted an estimated 4 million tourists this summer. The celebration of the anticipated American victory is guaranteed to result in a wild bash with dancing in the streets and a people-watching extravaganza, the likes of which may never be seen again.

The race was named after the schooner America, a blockade runner during the Civil War which won the Hundred Guinea Cup against Great Britain in 1851. The America's owner presented the cup to the New York Yacht club under a deed of gift that calls for friendly competition between foreign countries and the race has been known as the America's Cup ever since.

In the old days, rules required challengers to cross the ocean under sail on their own bottom. In 1958, after a 21 year absence of races, regulations were altered, dropping this requirement and opening the challenge to 12-metre class which is the largest active racing class in point of size today.

The Courageous, which was the 1974 cup winner, is only the second yacht in 100 years to defend the cup twice, the first being Columbia in 1899 and 1901.

Both Courageous and Australia emerged victorious after surviving the extensive elimination series this summer against challenges from France, Sweden and Great Britain.

The weekend race will begin Saturday morning and can be enjoyed by land or, by boat, unquestionably the best way.

Ferries carrying from 50 to 500 passengers will operate during the weekend. The prices are high with the standard being about $30 per race. More ingenuous sailing nuts with less cash have resorted to rowboats, sunfishes, and even canoes on the choppy waters. All spectator craft must remain outside a diamond-shaped perimeter around the race course patroled by the Coast Guard.

Those who opt for the land will find Brenton Point State Park and Fort Adams State Park to be the best shore viewing spots in Newport, and Fort Wetherill and Beavertail in Jamestown.

If you don't have a place to stay and lack the $60 for the practically non-existent hotel rooms, the Chamber of Commerce has gathered the names of private homeowners willing to rent out rooms for about $10-per person, per night. Those who prefer sleeping under the stars will have about 6 campgrounds to choose from.

Newport, also the sight of the Tall Ships Bicentennial celebration, is a hangout for everyone from the polished chic to your basic boat bum. And even without the yachts, it's a great place to spend a weekend.

Valley Health Care services community

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

A Health Maintenance Organization called the Valley Health Plan, put into effect in the Spring of 1976, is a non-profit corporation organized to provide comprehensive health care services on a pre-paid basis. Available to UMass faculty, staff, and their families, it is also open to families and individuals located generally within a 15-mile radius of Amherst.

The Valley Health Plan contracts for clinical facilities, and full time care of doctors, nurses, technicians, and other health professionals affiliated with the University Health Services (UHS), and Amherst Medical Associates (AMA). The facilities of the Cooley Dickinson Hospital, specialty hospitals, and the Amherst Nursing home are also available when needed.

The plan stresses prevention of serious illness by encouraging early diagnosis and treatment. Comprehensive care is available to members and their families, 24 hours a day, 7 days a week.

The plan aroused controversy last year because students feared faculty members treated at University Health Services would get preferred treatment. Students also felt the services would be overcrowded. A survey taken last spring of a random 1500 students, indicated that 80 to 90 per cent of those surveyed were satisfied with the treatment they were getting.

They survey also showed that compared to a similar poll taken in 1970, the services provided had improved greatly by 1977.

The program currently has 1200 members who use the infirmary at UMass, and another 5000 members using serviced provided by Amherst Medical Associates.

"The quality of staff has improved," Director of University Health Services Barry W. Averill said, "A few short years ago, we were short doctors; for the first time, this year we have a full staff of better trained physicians. We had a hard time keeping professionals in the past because they wanted a more diverse practice. They wanted to see different kinds of patients, and now they'll have this chance," Averill said.

Without the formulation of the Valley Health Plan, a comprehensive program whereby the families of married students received coverage under a special health plan, would not have been possible. With the VHP, however, there are now enough patients to make such a program economically feasible, Averill said.

Prepaid health care is a model of the future, according to Averill because quality, low cost care could be shared with the faculty. Averill researched this project for seven years, travelling to other health care facilities. Averill said, "ther was no proof (of success) to show in the outset, but if this year goes as good as last year did, we have a very positive program going."

The doctors for the program were screened by a search committee made up of two doctors, a nurse, a student from the Student Advisory Board, and a health advisor. Following interviews five physicians were hired, two of them women.

The cost of the plan is $34 per month per individual, and $81.00 per month per family. Included is professional and hospital care, out-of-the-area care, and ambulance services.

The VHP is governed by a 15-member board, including nine elected community leaders, six of whom must be members, and one student. The other five members are representatives of VHP's two provider groups, UHS, and Amherst Medical Associates.

Day Care Center special

By CYNTHIA HARHEN
Collegian Staff

The sign on the door of No. 4 Skinner Hall warns visitors "Be Quiet, Remove Your Shoes and Open Door Carefully, Babies on the Floor."

Stepping cautiously, one is greeted by the sight of the warm, bright, simply decorated room of the Infant Day Care Center. Cribs, mobiles and toys fill the room. The sound of gently cooing babies and watchful caregivers playing together on the plush, toy-covered rug greets your ears. The center is peaceful and one is impelled to speak in a hushed voice.

Marilyn Hood is a caregiver at the center who holds a masters degree in Family Life Studies from UMass and is currently coordinating programs with the Child Care Program. She is a soft-spoken woman who obviously enjoys her job. As she spoke, she carefully watched each baby and a few times during the discussion, was interrupted in order to attend to the needs of a baby.

"Our objective is to observe the rhythm and response patterns of each infant and thereby keep our schedule in tune with what each infant needs," Hood said.

The Center now cares for seven infants between the ages of two and nine months and currently, there are three spaces open. The Center is open five days a week and offers half-day care between the hours of 9 A.M. to 12-P.M. Hood stressed that the program is open to any member of the community or university who needs childcare.

Six month old Cora Weimer sat happily playing with brightly colored plastic rings and balls. Hood explained that the baby was discovering the differences between objects through her sensory-motor perceptions. According to Hood, the Center's curriculum closely parallels that of the Piaget Theory of Development which stresses that a child's development takes place in a series of stages.

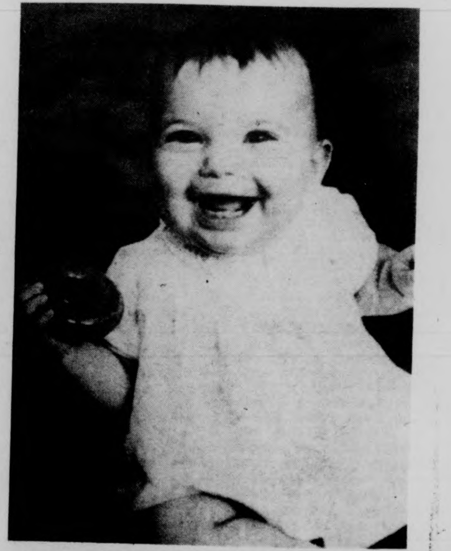
Babies at the Infant Day Care Center are well cared for and their adult "playmates" include three Caregivers and numerous students majoring in Early Childhood Development, Public Health and Nursing.

The Center was established by Roberta Collaide, an Infant Researcher and associate professor at the UMass School of Ed. This program was established by an adjunct through the Psychology department.

Within the basement of Skinner Hall are Human Development labs which offer various playgroups and workshops for children and parents alike.

"We hope to expand more in terms of service to new parents," said Hood. "The Resource Center is a space for people to learn more about every aspect of human development." These workshops stress the importance of the family as the primary educator and the still greater importance of a happy baby, Hood said.

As seven and one-half month old Rachel squeals and happily throws an orange toy in the air, it appears as though the Center is a success.



Six month old Cora Weiner-Hodes gives a big smile to let it be known that she enjoys the Day Care Center. (Staff photo by Dave Rodgers)

Bubbling Brown Sugar

A scene from the Broadway Hit Musical, "Bubbling Brown Sugar." Featuring such songs as, "Sweet Georgia Brown", "Sophisticated Lady", "God Bless The Child", "Take The 'A' Train", and "Stompin At The Savoy".

Broadway's newest, hottest hit, BUBBLING BROWN SUGAR premieres the 1977-78 Concert Series at the Fine Arts Center, University of Massachusetts.

BUBBLING BROWN SUGAR is the first event of the Broadway series. Tickets are now on sale at the Fine Arts Center Box Office.

The hit musical will be presented by the national touring company twice on Sunday September 18. The matinee performance is at 3 p.m., the evening performance is at 8.

Bubbling Brown Sugar takes its audience on a musical flashback tour into Harlem during the Black Renaissance of the post World War I era. It then traces Harlem show business from the speakeasies of the '20's to the wartime jitterbugging at the Savoy Ballroom, and '50's rhythm and blues at the Apollo. Though it hasa few new songs, most of the material is drawn from the rich past — spirituals, gospel, the blues, jazz and pop.

Bubbling Brown Sugar takes you to the period when the cafe society crowd from downtown went uptown to the Cotton Club, Small's Paradise, Connie's Inn and all the "in spots."

A whole new music was discovered by visitors to Harlem nightlife: the music of Duke Ellington, Cab Calloway, Fats Waller, Eubie Blake, Earl 'Fatha' Hines, J.C. Johnson and Billies Holiday.

A whole new kind of dancing was going on at the Savoy — something called the Lindy Hop.

Something special was happening up in Harlemtown and anybody who knew anything knew that.

The essence of the "something" was captured and put on the Broadway stage — its called Bubbling Brown Sugar.

The national touring company with orchestra will perform the musical which Clive Barnes noted "Boils with Dazzlement."

Bubbling Brown Sugar won the 1977 Grammy Award for the Broadway cast album.

Tickets for Bubbling Brown Sugar are now on sale at the Fine Arts Center box office, open 9 - 4 Monday through Friday, and all Ticketron outlets.

On the day of the performance, box office opens one hour before performance. This Sunday, the box office will open at 1 p.m.

There are still tickets available for both performances. 100 tickets are available for the evening show, and 550 tickets are available for the matineee performance.

Ticket prices are: General public, $7.50, 6.50, 5.50. UMass students are $3.75, 3.25, 2.75 and other students and Senior citizens are $6.50, 5.50, 4.50. For more information call 545-2511.

The Panama Canal Treaty

By JAMES LEWIS
Black Affairs Asst. Editor

The Panama Canal treaty is receiving a lot of publicity recently because it is very symbolic in representing a change in traditional U.S. policy in regards to its' control over South America. South America is a Third World area that the United States has been protecting and policing ever since the Monroe Doctrine.

The Monroe Doctrine was really written by John Q. Adams to keep the U.S. out of war in Europe. Yet it stated that Europe was barred from colonizing any countries in South America. It also said that the U.S. will not interfere with European Affairs. Later the U.S. literally invaded Columbia, who then owned Panama, and created the country we now know as Panama.

Teddy Roosevelt established the "The Big Stick Policy" when European countries tried to collect on debts owed to them by various South American countries. The U.S. confronted every militaristic attempt by Europe to collect on its debts. Now most of South America is in debt to U.S. because of this policy that strenghtens the U.S. basis of power and control over the Third World.

President Carter's policy is to try to appease the Third World and civil rights leaders on the basis of civil rights. Most capitalist controlled countries are exploited and do not want this so-called "U.S. protection". It usually means increased U.S. control.

The Panama Canal treaty, would mean withdrawal of U.S. hegemony over the Third World of South America. This is why so many politicians and right wingers are so much opposed to the treaty.

The treaty has a gradual twenty-five year release of U.S. control over South America. All U.S. businesses that reaped profits from U.S. by control of South America will suffer greatly if the treaty is allowed to pass.

It the treaty is passed next year, it will be interesting to watch how future Presidents will deal with the Panama Canal.

More on Panama

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The head of Panama's government recently invited the chairman of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights to make a first-hand visit to Panama to determine whether human rights are being violated.

"Panama is not perfect," said Gen. Omar Torrijos, in a cable released by the Panamanian embassy in Washington, "but we do respect the human rights of all those persons who live within our geography."

Torrijos told Andres Aguilar, the commission chairman, that he would "welcome a statement and a visit by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights to see first hand the reality of our human rights policies."

"You are welcome to travel anywhere in Panama, to speak to anyone, and report to the world," Torrijos said. "I will give you the keys to our jails, and if you find any political prisoners, you can release them."

Torrijos said he was extending the invitation because "there have been a number of unfounded and irresponsible charges made against my government about alleged violations of human rights."

The 'Beautiful' 'Colorful' Army ROTC

The "Beautiful" "Colorful" Army ROTC

How many of you saw the big 5 x 8 inch advertisement placed by the Army ROTC, Wednesday, Sept. 14 on Page six of the Collegian?

I did.

How many of you noticed the big, bold and beautiful letters?

I did.

And, how many of you were "turned on" by the words these letters composed?

I wasn't.

I found the slang terms the Army ROTC "so graciously" attributed to Third World people extremely repugnant. To imply that this is the type of phrasing that will bring Army ROTC Third World students, only shows that Army ROTC would not know how to relate to them if they did come.

The wording "Beautiful", "Colorful", "Third World Students and Others Too", signifies a couple of things.

Here is the reasoning, in fiction, behind using such words.

"Well Major" said the Captain, "we know they all think they are beautiful. They haven't stopped talking about it since that phrase, "Black is Beautiful" came out some ten years ago. So let's use beautiful."

"You're right Captain," said the Major, "let's use 'beautiful', hit them on their own level, we can't miss using their own words."

"Now Major," said the Captain, "I figure if we use 'colorful' that will catch 'em too. Ya' know some of them characters are pretty funny. Have you ever seen one walk? Justa' singin' and poppin' his finger. Sir I'm telling you."

"Right again, Captain," said the Major, We got a winner this time. Do you know any more of dat', wathcha' call it, slang?"

"Yes sir Major," barked the Captain, "I know a few more. There's 'Get it on' and 'Get your head together' and 'Make it.' " "That's about all I know, Major."

"Good, let's print that," said the Major.

Even the part of the ad that reads "And Others Too!!!" is a put down. These words insinuate that the 'others' are the only 'serious' people, and if Third World people want to get 'serious,' they had better join the Army ROTC.

I have seen quite a few 'serious' brothers and sisters on campus. I feel that only the 'serious' people will stay away from an organization that will print degrading garbage like this.

Actually the whole ad is a farce. There's nothing the Army or its ROTC can do for me, except put me on the front line of any major battle that comes along.

That bit about "Help your country, your community ... " is crazy. Ever wonder why black servicemen in any branch service is stationed so far from the U.S.? Is is because if Revolutionary times occur again, the best, the biggest, the strongest, the fiercest, and some of the most experienced black fighters will already be in check, 10,000 miles from home.

"Beautiful?" "Colorful?" the only thing the Army ROTC will get with this ad, is maybe a rainbow, the next time it rains.

As for the UMass Daily Collegian, I don't have anymore to say except that pitifiable judgement was used in allowing an ad of such degrading character to run.

Founder of S. Africa Movement dies

PRETORIA, South Africa [AP] — Steve Biko, widely regarded as a founder of the black consciousness movement in South Africa, died a week after starting a hunger strike in prison, Police Minister James Kruger announced yesterday.

Biko, 30, was taken from prison to a Pretoria hospital Sunday after refusing to eat or drink for six days, Kruger said. He died Monday.

Johannesburg's black newspaper, the World, appeared with its front pages edged in black and devoted entirely to Biko's death. He was regarded by many, the World said, as the most important black political voice in the country.

Biko was the 21st black to die in police detention in the past 18 months.

An honorary president of the Black People's Convention, Biko was detained by security police Aug. 12 and arrested in connection with riots in Port Elizabeth, Kruger said.

Announcement of the death brought an outcry of criticism of South Africa's white minority government.

At United Nations headquarters in New York, US Ambassador Andrew Young said: "The sudden and tragic death of Mr. Biko will prove to be a major loss for the future of South Africa. No nation can afford to lose its most dedicated and creative leadership and yet prosper.

"I know personally how much the United States suffered nationally as a result of the similarly tragic deaths of President John F. Kennedy, Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. and Sen. Robert F. Kennedy," Young said. "These losses cost us nearly a decade of progress."

Mourners gave black-power salutes at a prayer service in Johannesburg and black members of the multiracial congregation shouted "amandla" (power) at the close of the ceremony held by the South African Council of Churches.

Helen Suzman, a liberal opposition member of parliament, described Biko's death as a tragedy to South Africa and called for the immediate repeal of the law that allows detention without trial.

In London, Britain's governing Labor Party issued a statement expressing "extreme disquiet and shock" at Biko's death.

Biko had lived as a banned person for four years, restricted to King William's Town.

Learning is the debater's trait

By CHARLOTTE TRENCHARD
Collegian Staff

When you think of a person on a debate team, do you get a mental picture of a Poindexter-type person who sleeps with a file cabinet, eats library books for lunch, and runs around challenging people to argue with him? Well, if you do, don't feel bad. It's a common misconception. So dismiss Poindexter from your mind and read on.

Anybody can become proficient at debating if they work hard enough at it, according to David Donovan, a graduate assistant of the UMass Debate Union. The only qualities a prospective debater need have are an intense desire to learn coupled with a willingness to work.

"You have to be disciplined," Donovan said, "willing to invest a good deal of time in it, and possess some degree of intellectual ability, which everyone here at UMass has."

On Oct. 5, the team will host this year's first debate "Resolved: Two members from Oxford College, England will debate "Resolved: This house prefers pornography to censorship," with UMass debaters Rocco DeBruscio and co-president of the debate team Mary O'Malley.

"It will probably go over well," said Donovan. "It's a timely topic on the UMass campus especially since there's been so much controversy over whether or not pornographic movies should be shown here on campus."

The Debate Union placed 21st in a national competition last year in Springfield, Mo. It begins this season Oct. 1 and will be sending teams to Tennessee, Kentucky and Dartmouth. This year's major topic is "Resolved: That U.S. law enforcement agencies should be given significantly greater freedom in the investigation of, or prosecution of, felony crimes."

Other topics will include nuclear power, marijuana and capital punishment.

"The goal of a debate is not to win an argument," stressed Donovan, "but is aimed at educating the participant as well as the audience."

Anyone interested in learning to debate should contact the team advisor, Prof. Ron Matlon, or any of his assistants in Machmer Hall.

Newcomers to the debate team are taught the basics of argumentation and then learn the techniques through practice. This year's team will include about 20 new debaters.

"There are a lot of people running around with potentially brilliant ideas," said Donovan. "They just don't know how to articulate their thoughts," he said.

1200 arrested in South Africa

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa [UPI] — Police backed by dogs Thursday arrested more than 1,200 black students holding a memorial service for a black leader who died in jail.

But a whites-only rally at Cape Town University went ahead as scheduled and a white editor told mourners Police Minister Jimmy Kruger must "bear the ultimate responsibility" for the death of Steve Biko.

Biko, 30, founder of the "black consciousness movement" in South Africa, was found dead in a jail cell Monday after an eight-day hunger strike. He was the 20th black to die in police custody in 18 months.

Students at the black Fort Hare University, about 80 miles west of the Cape Province port of East London, met Thursday on the university's sports field to hold a memorial service for Biko.

The youths, most of them dressed in black, had just begun to sing the black nationalist anthem "Nkosi Sikelele Afrika" God Bless Africa when six vans of riot police, many of them pulling dogs on leashes, drove up and surrounded the playing field.

A witness said the police watched the service for several minutes and then ordered all women students to leave. When they refused, the police ordered all male students, estimated to number between 1,200 and 1,300, to climb into four large trucks.

The witness said the black youths obeyed without protest and boarded the vans peacefully, although many gave the clenched fish black power salute as the vans drove away.

Maj. Gen. Dawid Kriel, South Africa's riot control chief, said later the memorial service was illegal because it violated the Riotous Assemblies Act.

The act, passed last year after race riots killed more than 650 persons, mostly black, prohibits the assembly of more than two people without special permit.

Kriel said the arrested students were detained and questioned at various police stations in the area and that some might be released.

A judge first banned the all-white Cape Town University rally for Biko, then lifted it only one hour before the service was scheduled to begin. The judge, Edward Rorich, said police asked him to withdraw the ban but gave no reasons for the reversal.

Governor Wallace sued for divorce

MONTGOMERY, Ala. [UPI] — Cornelia Wallace sued Gov. George C. Wallace for divorce yesterday charging she had moved out of the governor's mansion because he had committed "actual violence" upon her, and she feared for her "life and health."

"The reason for the breakup of this marriage was not incompatibility but the commission of actual violence and cruelty," by Wallace, Mrs. Wallace contended in a cross-complaint filed in Montgomery County Circuit Court.

The governor sued for divorce Monday, contending a "complete incompatibility of temperament" brought about the breakup of their marriage of 6½ years.

While not spelling out the "violence" which she claimed Wallace committed upon her, Mrs. Wallace asked the court to award "liberal sums of alimony, support and maintenance."

State's economic climate improves

BOSTON [UPI] — Administration efforts to improve the state's economic climate helped to create 4,800 new jobs over the past six months, resulting from the expansion of 132 industries, Gov. Michael S. Dukakis said yesterday.

"The economic stagnation and decay people were decrying a few short years ago has ended," Dukakis said in a press conference. "We have made a long-term, serious effort through our Economic Development Program to nurture our home-based industries."

The figures were contained in a report compiled by state Department of Commerce and Development Commissioner John Marino.

Drug smuggling off Boston coast

BOSTON [AP] — The seaswept New England coast that decorates a thousand postcards has apparently started to foster a new industry. Drug smuggling has become big business here.

Twelve tons of marijuana were hoisted from the hold of a 73-foot Honduran fishing boat Wednesday, and the cache may be just the latest sign that smugglers are developing a New England connection.

Traditionally, the dark expressways of the drug traffickers led to southern points like coastal Florida and the New Orleans waterfront. But now, with stepped-up patrols, the heat is on in the South.

The smugglers, in shabby tramp freighters, converted fishing boats and sleek motor yachts, are piloting up the coast to the coves and islands chiseled out of the New England shores.

"It's a lot down there," said the Custom Service's James Sullivan after inspecting the bales of marijuana found in the hold of the Juliana I.

The boat, with her crew of 11 Colombians, was spotted by the Coast Guard cutter Active 120 miles northeast of Boston Monday, flying no national flag and bearing no visible sign of her home port.

A boarding party discovered the marijuana when it forced the boat to heave to for inspection.

E.P.A. reports on environmental quality

BOSTON [UPI] — The automobile is the worst enemy of New England's environment, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency said yesterday.

In its annual report on the quality of air and water in the six-state area, the EPA said "automobile pollution continues to be the region's most serious environmental problem." But the agency said there was major concern about the spread of PCBs, toxic chemical elements which do not smoothly break down after being placed in the environment.

William R. Adams Jr., regional EPA administrator, said tougher laws are needed in the future to bring the smog problem under control.

He said with the exception of northern New Hampshire, numerous violations of public health standards concerning car-related smog were recorded around the region.

In addition to the smog situation, the EPA reported carbon monoxide levels were being recorded in many urban areas although the levels are down regionwide. The agency said carbon monoxide levels in Springfield, Mass., were measured at 2.5 times above the health standard.

The "dirtiest air" was reported at Springfield and Worcester, Mass., and Milford and Derby, Conn. The agency said the "cleanest air" was found in Vermont's jcaledonia and Orange Counties.

The report had a positive report on water quality, claiming 51 per cent of major rivers and tributaries in New England are suitable for fishing and swimming. That was a 3 per cent improvement over last year.

Mass. industries seen expanding

BOSTON [AP] — A reported increase in the rate Massachusetts industries are expanding shows firms are not leaving in large numbers, state officials say.

The Dukakis Administration announced Thursday that 132 Massachusetts industries expended facilities, creating about 4,800 new jobs in the state, during the first half of this year.

A report compiled by the state Department of Commerce and Development said plant expansions averaged six per month during 1975, 17 per month last year and 23 per month during the first half of this year.

"This puts a lie to the myth that companies are leaving the state in droves," Secretary of Economic Affairs Howard Smith said at a news conference.

The report includes only industries and only expansions involving real estate transactions.

Commerce and Development Commissioner John Marino said the firms estimated they planned 4,800 jobs as a result of expansions, but not all the positions had been filled.

He said jobs are counted when the firm begins to move personnel and equipment into the expanded area.

During the same six months, 48,000 persons were added to payrolls in the state, according to the Division of Employment Security, Smith said.

WASHINGTON: Budget Director Bert Lance defends himself before the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee on matters concerning his personal finances. (UPI)

Bert Lance appears before Senate Committee

WASHINGTON [AP] — Budget Director Bert Lance told the American public "my conscience is clear" yesterday and he made a point-by-point defense of his personal loans and overdrafts as a Georgia banker.

Lance, one of President Carter's closest aides, said at Senate hearings into his financial affairs that published allegations have caused him "profound shock and disappointment."

"I did not ask for this fight but now that I am in it, I am fighting not only for myself and for my family but also for our system," he said.

Lance, who has said he will not resign, declared, "Is it part of our American system that a man can be drummed out of government by a series of false charges, half truths, misrepresentations, innuendos and the like?"

He asked the nationwide television and radio audience to be the jury "for I am secure and comfortable knowing that my conscience is clear and that the people's verdict will be a fair and just one."

Lance had been saving up his point-by-point rebuttal for the committee hearing, which his supporters have referred to as "his day in court." Some of his arguments had been made previously by Lance or his assistants, but he saved his most comprehensive defense for his appearance before the committee and the cameras.

At one point, Lance made a face-to-face challenge to Sen. Charles Percy of Illinois, the committee's senior Republican, who had previously asked whether Lance may have backdated checks to take advantage of income tax deductions.

Lance said he found Percy's statements "puzzling... regrettable" and offered an explanation that led Percy to concede: "It was wrong for me to even raise the possibility."

Victim of massacre testifies

HARTFORD CITY, Ind. [UPI] – The lone survivor of a Valentine's Day massacre tearfully testified yesterday how four men blasted her son and three stepsons to death and she bared her back to show her own shotgun pellet scars to the jury.

"I lay real, real still and didn't move, although my hands were trembling," said Betty Spencer, 44, who played dead face down in front of a coffee table until the men left her mobile home last Feb. 14. Mrs. Spencer testified for 2½ hours in the trial of Roger Drollinger, one of four Indiana suspects being tried separately.

"I heard some clicking noises behind me," she said. "Suddenly a shot was fired and a piece of Greg's head fell right beside my face."

"Then they started shooting again," she said. "The firing ceased and I realized I was still alive. It's a strange feeling to know you're still alive."

However, she said, "I heard one of the intruders say 'get that second one again.' They shot me again. This time I felt my wig go off of my head."

The murderers, she said, then ransacked the trailer and fled with $36 in one of the family cars.

"I said, 'Is anybody alive?' Nobody ansered. I heard this horrible noise and I realized it was the blood rushing from our boys. It was a horrible sound." Tears fell from her eyes and her voice trembled in Blackford Circuit Court and at one point she displayed scars on her back to the jury of seven men and five women.

Mrs. Spencer identified Drollinger, 24, Waynetown; David Smith, 17, Wingate; Michael Wright, 21, Crawfordsville; and Daniel Stonebraker, 20, Darlington, as the intruders.

Is UMass really a waste of time?

I get paid to make it easy for you to skip class. The Student Senate Lecture Notes Program pays me $7 per class to sit in on a crowded microeconomics course and jot down everything relevant the professor says. The official rationale for hiring me is that I relieve you of the burden of notetaking, thereby allowing you to devote your full attention to the lecture.

But the official rationale is not accurate. Notes are taken only in large introductory classes (mine has over 300 students) and the very nature of an introductory class belies the official explanation for hiring student note-takers. I would conservatively estimate that at least 50 per cent of the students in any given introductory class are not interested in much the professor says, are bored stiff, and are there simply to fulfill a core requirement. The professor knows this and, I assume, lectures accordingly. This means that he-she doesn't cover much ground, introduces only the most elementary concepts, and presents them as simply as possible. He-she does this with the realization that most students don't care enough to really apply themselves to the material and would be lost if the course moved faster or were more complex.

It is next to impossible to ask questions because the class is too large. The huge size also provents the instructor from getting to know any of the students, which thus precludes any type of fruitful instructor-student relationship. All you are really there to do is shut-up and listen, or daydream if you prefer, or doodle, or most anything else just so long as you keep quiet.

The only motivation you have for attending class is an external motivation, a Sword of Damocles hanging over your head — a grade. Remove the Sword and there is no longer any reason for attending class. And that is exactly where I come in. I remove the Sword by attending class for you.

A student of average sensibility will attend class (most of the time) and only buy my notes for those classes he-she misses. But a really sensible student will buy all of my notes and attend class only rarely, if ever. Only a fool will waste his-her time (attending class) and his-her money (buying my notes).

This sounds outrageous, and I realize I have come perilously close to saying that a UMass education is a waste of both time and money. But although I have strayed to the cliff's edge, I haven't toppled over.

For most students, four years at UMass is something of a waste of time and money. It's a waste not in the sense that you aren't learning skills which will get you (if you're lucky) a middle-level job, but rather in the sense that it doesn't allow you to develop your truly human potential.

Despite the rhetoric, UMass is not a place which encourages you to grow, to expand your horizons and heighten your awareness. It is, to oversimplify, a place which is designed to teach you how to shut-up and listen, how to take orders, how to accept a fragmented, alienating environment. UMass is all these things not because it wants to be, but because it must be.

It must teach you how to accept a fragmented, alienating life because that is what you will experience in your job. It must teach you to shut-up and take orders because the job you get will require you to shut-up and take orders.

All this has been imbedded in our consciousness since birth, and we accept it because it is the only existence we know. If we ever experience an environment where these social realtions are not present, we will naturally begin to question and fight against a society which treats us in such a dehumanizing manner. Thus the people who control our society (and you all know who they are), and who live the good life in proportion as the rest of us don't, structure our schools and jobs in such a way to ensure that we don't ever experience a non-deadening environment.

If you want practical proof of my contention, take a Five College course sometime. You will find that Amherst, Mount Holyoke and Smith College have vastly different environments and social relations than those prevalent at UMass. Their environments are not deadening — and it is no coincidence that the jobs their students will get (if they have to work at all) will not be fragmented and alienating like ours will be. To put it bluntly, we are being trained to take orders from them.

If this sounds somewhat grim — it is. But there is something we can do to improve our environment here at the university; we can empower ourselves, for only with power can we change our environment; no one is going to do it for us. And the only way we can effectively conquer and wield power is to unionize.

Due to space limitations, what I have said is both incomplete and oversimplified. But it is essentially true. For a more thorough and scholarly treatment, read Schooling in Capitalist America, written by two UMass professors; Herbert Gintis and Samuel Bowles. If that doesn't convince you, and you want to see for yourself, hop on the Five College bus.

And if you think you haven't got the time for these things, skip a few classes. You can always buy the lecture notes later.

Widespread apathy

Where have all the student activists gone? Gone to endless meetings everyone. Oh, when will they ever learn, when will they ever learn? [apologies to Robert Zimmerman]

The typical UMass student (if there is one) is perceived by student activists as being very apathetic. Apathy, along with happy hour drafts and joint rolling colloquiums, ranks as one of the favorite UMass pastimes. For several years students have responded to campus political issues with a level of participation comparable perhaps to the audience of a golf match being broadcast on the radio. A variety of people, differing in their ideological perspectives and, all sharing the fate of being student activists, have attempted to change this seemingly natural phenomenon: apathy.

Trying to shift their burdens of being active to the broader shoulders of more bodies, has in fact failed miserably. While there have been gasps of wide interest in particular concerns, the inertia and time consuming process of follow-through here at the university usually condemns the ultimate fruition of plans, to sheer mediocrity. The efforts have included the most traditional forms of recruitment for the traditional activities; student senate, area governments, committees, via elections and appointment drives. This is fairly bland, and remains only as a historically persistent format for involvement. Others have more direct approaches of involvement through departments and dormitory groups (as opposed to individual representatives). While this is a better structure and may offer more direct involvement, it requires a caring and committed student, who we all know is as scarce as funds for a Womens soccer team. Where have the successes come for student activists?

A few days ago, the University Board (bored?) of Trustees divested 40 per cent of the endowment fund, because it was invested in corporations engaged in South Africa. This was a result of a student initiated petition, which had at its peak two hundred active participants. Only a fraction of that peak group persisted with continued direct actions. Their dedication was commendable — Conducting teach-ins, spending innumerable hours at the Campus Center concourse, trying to impact upon student apathy. While 2500 signatures were garnered and many were educated through films etc., only the core group was willing to be active till the end. They were successful despite the general lack of community support. They won because they were right, and key people began to perceive their unending committment to see their eventual victory. What worked was the substance of their arguments and the lack of a viable counter viewpoint.

This can be applied to other conflicts. Student activists might do better to make activity most fruitful for those involved and to leave those who aren't to get themselves motivated. An issue is needed that will rival the roots of apathy on this campus, in and of itself. If any issue could do that, the decriminalization of marijuana could.....

Helping battered women

A woman had been beaten repeatedly by her husband. She sought help from the police several times and was turned down. Now she's in prison for killing her husband in self-defense, according to the Woman's Resource and Survival Center.

The woman, from Clementon, New Jersey, is Roxanne Gay. Her husband was Blenda Gay, linebacker for the Philadelphia Eagles.

The Center, which is helping to raise money for Gay's $45,000 bail, is the first federally funded shelter for women in the US.

Half of the married women in the nation are abused to some degree, and ten per cent of them, or five million, "are badly battered," according to Representative James Howard.

Howard, along with two other members of Congress, introduced a bill last week that would authorize shelter and counseling services for battered wives or husbands.

Traditionally married women have been considered the property of their husbands. The notion is obviously erroneous.

"The New Hampshire Commission on the Status of Women feels the women's liberation movement is causing a rise in wife beating..." read an article in yesterday's Collegian.

That may be true. As opportunities for women increase, so do the numbers of women who, though shy to take the initial step, will be quick to follow behind others with similar non-traditional aspirations.

fifi ball

Commissioner Gloria Belzil, of Nashua, suggested a husband-beaten woman "needed psychological" care because she upset him by spending most of her paycheck on herself.

These are both cases of misplaced fault.

Let's let people know somehow that we don't believe this kind of myth anymore.

The Woman's Resource and Survival Center can be reached at (201) 264-4141.

For more information about the proposed legislature, call Nancy Blades at (202) 225-4671, or Mimi Griffith at (202) 225-6636. The three Representatives sponsoring the bill are James Howard, Lindy Boggs, and Newton Steers.

Criticism aimed at Collegian

To the Editor:

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian has a responsibility to the student body at UMass to provide accountable and accurate information. The Collegian is the most effective medium on campus; almost every student has some contact with it nearly every day. This alleged newspaper has upon its shoulders the monumental task of being not only the student body's voice but also the major source of the information that we receive. In observing the facilitation of these two prime roles by our newspaper, one can only conclude that this paper is a failure.

The gravity of problems here at the university are great enough to warrant better headlines than, "Sardine City Continues". Subsequent articles tend to be an uninforming and uninterested. The housing crunch at UMass is a very blatant blunder by our illustrious administration. It is a situation where the paper pushers at Whitmore have been caught giving the students the shaft. In doing so, they have handed to us cause and reason for more student input in administrative policy. They have made it extremely clear that our lack of confidence in them is justified.

Not to be expected to champion our cause is the S.G.A. The ties of these junior politicos to the administration is too great. Further, the students at UMass have a lack of confidence in our thespian statesmen. They accomplish little other than obtaining occasional favors from the administration in order to stifle our unrest.

As administrators squat in Whitmore and the S.G.A. maintain their regal state of benevolence in the Student Union they create a gap between themselves and the student body-faculty. The time honored institution, Collegian, can bridge this gap. It is time for the Collegian to get its hands dirty and become the keystone of this enterprise. Now is the time for the rebirth of investigative journalism necessary to establish the vital links. In-depth reporting, not cursory articles, should be the Collegian's guide.

Our administration has to be shown that we are watching. If we are to control our own destinies then we must use our most influential medium to our own benefit. The administration allows us the institution of a newspaper. We must use this institution to better the system from which it was wrought. The Collegian must once again become the eyes, ears and voice of the people in the community of the University of Massachusetts.

David B. Brenner

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages.

Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

All letter are subject to editing, for either content or space, according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed.

The 'media experience'

By MARSHA KAZAROSIAN

Well, it must be clear to everyone by now. Violent television shows compel people to commit violent crimes. Surely, anyone who read the related article in the Collegian recently can attest to this fact.

The article was about a man who was convicted of 16 counts of kidnaping, assault and weapons charges. He admitted his guilt, and then proceded to plead that the television series "Roots" motivated him to do it.

For all of you people who aren't sufficiently convinced of the effect of television violence, let me give you a few more examples.

Recently, a young boy in Florida was charged with murdering and robbing his neighbor, an elderly woman. His lawyers entered a defense of "media overload", a close cousin of "too much television".

Do you believe me now? It wasn't his fault at all. Apparently he watched too much "Kojak". Now, let's be honest. If you were overexposed to "Kojak", you might have done the same thing.

As a matter of fact, I can give you a personal example of a similar instance that involves a close friend of mine. It happened several weeks after his third mental breakdown.

Apparently he saw a diving spectacular filmed in Hawaii, where a man dove off a 50 foot cliff. My friend subsequently jumped off the Golden Gate Bridge. Now do you see my point?

If you saw someone jump off a cliff, wouldn't you follow? And furthermore, don't let the fact that my friend was mentally ill distract you at all. That has nothing to do with it.

If they hadn't shown that show on T.V., he would still be resting comfortably in Northampton State Hospital.

As a matter of fact, I'm sure that no one, especially psychotic or mentally ill killers, would even think of hurting anyone unless they first saw it on T.V. Especially since T.V. makes the villain look so appealing. Wouldn't you rather be like the villain, grovelling in jail instead of imitating the heroic policeman? I would.

Therefore, because of the harmful effects of T.V. violence, I propose that there be absolutely not even a hint of violence on T.V. anymore, because violence is just not realistic.

For example, if we must have a show that includes a murder, that's fine. Just omit all reference to the actual murder. This will make everything much clearer, not to mention keeping it clean and peaceful. Who needs to cloud the issue with the actual crime?

I can remember the good old days when nothing unpure was allowed on any screen. A movie called "The Great Lie" with Bette Davis is a prime example of a censored movie with a wholesome storyline.

The story was about a woman who has a child fathered by her friend's husband. How pure can you get? Of course, certain dirty words were deleted, i.e., the word "pregnant" couldn't be used. Instead, they said the woman was "special".

Now this made things a whole lot clearer, besides purifying the movie.

But things were different in those days. Now everyone says "pregnant" on T.V., and look how many people are.

So, in conclusion, I can safely say that by eliminating all violence on T.V., you will eliminate all violence in the world.

And, by the way, the first and foremost show to combat is not "Starsky and Hutch", or "Baretta". No, my friends, according to the most recent polls, the most violent show is "The Carol Burnett Show." So down with Carol Burnett, and peace and harmony live once more.

Let's seize the time

By DAMON THOMAS

It has been my experience that, beyond the confines of the Pioneer Valley, very few people know, or care to know, about the Kent State gym controversy. Among friends, neighbors, and others in my hometown and vicinity I have received many of the same replies in response to my questions about their views on the gym controversy. "I don't know enough about it" and "It doesn't concern me" were two of the more typical responses from these people.

I was appalled at their general lack of understanding of the problem, yet perhaps they didn't see that they were only being fed highly-edited, piecemeal information on the Kent issue by the local media. With only scattered objective accounts of protest activity being reported, all lacking in any real rationale as to the nature of the protest, it is easy to see how people would dismiss the protests.

However, when I heard remarks like "They should bring in the Guard to do it again," "Lock them up for good," and "We've got to preserve law and order," it occurred to me that there was more than just a lack of understanding involved. A terrible sickness and hatred was at work here, and unless these individuals and others like them can recognize the divisive inhumanity of their opinions, the misunderstandings and alienations will grow worse, not better.

We as a nation don't seem to have progressed very far since 1970, both in terms of implementing lasting social change and in developing healthy, understanding attitudes towards each other. The latter is unquestionably of great concern, but let us not neglect the importance of the overall process of on-going political, economic, and social change, of which changes in consciousness are part of.

America in May, 1970 was a society unjust to its poor and its minorities, run for the benefit of a privileged few, lacking in its proclaimed democracy and liberty (contingent, of course upon one's definition of those slippery terms), ugly and artificial, destructive of human and natural environment. It was, like the wars that it spawned, "not healthy for children and other living things".

The Vietnam War, the rallying cause for students at Kent and other universities, was the embodiment of those ills of our society: destruction of people, destruction of environment, depersonalized use of technology, war by the rich and powerful against the poor and helpless, justification based on abstract rationality, hypocrisy and lies, and a demand that the individual regardless of his conscience, values, or self, make himself into a part of the machine, an impersonal projectile bringing varieties of death to his fellow human beings.

This was, and is America in its naked, undisguised form, complete with even deeper social ills: monotonous commercialism, service conformity, the competitiveness of living, the loneliness and anomie of cities, the ruin of nature by machines and pollution, the coarse materialism many values and above all, the plastic, artifical quality of everything. The protests, culminating in the murders at Kent and Jackson State, were directed against those evils as well as the War, which exemplified all of them.

The KSU Administration and Trustees are trying to make us forget the War, are trying to make us forget all that has happened in the 1960's, how strong people can be in unified opposition. Their message is clear: "Be a student-consumer, join the productive apparatus of the state, be an unquestioning part of the impersonal machinery of this ugly, mass society. But, above all, don't protest, don't complain. Forget the prisons, forget that symbol of inspiration Kent State, forget that you must be repressed for the good of society. Because if you don't forget and if you do decide to get out of line, we won't hesitate to use our prisons and M-1's and police to silence you." That's the real message.

Let us not lose sight of all that remains to be done. Nor let us forget, or allow to be stamped out, the lessons of our past, for we need to draw on previous experience and knowledge to aid us in our struggles today. The spirit of Kent and Jackson State will not be plowed under by bulldozers! The ruling powers hope that we will bury our noses in our books and forget our proud history of resistance to the war and to injustice, so that we will not be inspired to resist them in the future. Let's seize the time and make the struggle around Kent State 1977 another part of the people's history our rulers would like to forget.

Tire iron, steak knife evidence at hearing

WATERBURY, Conn. [AP] — State police found a bloody tire iron, a bent steak knife and bloody handprints in a Prospect house where a woman and eight children were slain July 22nd, a state trooper testified Thursday.

Those facts emerged during a Superior Court hearing in which the state won permission to get palm prints and blood samples from Lorne Acquin, 27, of Waterbury. He was indicted last week on charges of murdering the nine victims.

Acquin's lawyer immediately said he would appeal the blood and print rulings.

Acquin is charged with the murders of his foster brother's wife, Cheryl Beaudoin, her seven children and a visiting child and with setting fire to the Beaudoin house. Several of the victims suffered stab and bludgeon injuries, police said.

Trooper John A. Witte testified that a tire iron found in one of the Beaudoin's bedroom was "covered with a reddish like substance" and hairs or fibers.

Unidentified fingerprints were found in one bedroom, palm prints were discovered in another room and there were "prints which looked to be in blood in the bathtub," he said.

A "bloody" steak knife with a bent blade was found in the kitchen, he added.

"The end section of one of the children's cribs had massive red stains on it," Witte said.

Under cross examination the trooper said he saw "marks on the defendant Acquin's leg, scratches on his face" after he was apprehended, but he had no way of knowing how the injuries occurred.

Earlier in the hearing Acquin, dressed in a three piece denim suit, refused to enter pleas before the judge on the advice of his attorney. Judge James Henebry entered innocent pleas on behalf of the defendant.

Defense Atty. John Williams argued that Acquin should not be required to plead to the charges until the state's attorney complies with a defense motion for evidence and statements that may be used against him.

Henebry decided to proceed with the plea anyway but later granted a defense motion for a wide range of evidence in the case. Among the material requested was a statement by a woman that Williams claimed "tends to show the defendant was not near the house" at the time of the slaying.

The statement was made by Joyce Graham, who Williams declined to further identify.

The state is also required to give the defense within two weeks other evidence that may clear Acquin, scientific tests made at the crime scene, statements made to the police and Acquin's criminal record.

Acquin made incriminating statements to police, Williams has said.

Minimum wage hikes effective in January

WASHINGTON [AP] — The House beat back attempts Thursday to require a lower minimum wage for teenagers and then passed legislation that will raise the nation's wage floor to $2.65 an hour in January.

The measure will also boost the minimum wage to $3.05 by 1980 — a 75-cent increase over the current $2.30 hourly minimum.

About 3.1 million of the nation's 90 million workers are paid the current minimum wage.

The bill passed 309-96, sending it to the Senate where a similar bill has been approved in committee.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill broke a tie vote on the controversial business-backed proposal to pay youths only 85 per cent of the minimum wage for their first six months on the job.

The sub-minimum wage amendment failed, 211-210. Even without O'Neill's vote — his first since becoming speaker last January — the amendment would have failed on a tie vote.

Even if you HAVE to buy your receiver* or amp* somewhere else, you owe your ears and your investment in stereo to buy your loudspeakers from us.
It's common knowledge that loudspeakers when adequately powered will determine what your component system will sound like. You see, there are some twenty or so companies that devote their energies to electronics, i.e. Sony, Marantz, Kenwood, Yamaha, Pioneer and JVC to name just a few. And by and large they all perform well, look sharp, and sound pretty much the same.
A speaker on the other hand, is designed to reproduce music as its creator conceives it. As a result some have lots of bass and no highs, or an enhanced mid-range or treble so accentuated only your dog and a few of the local brown bats can fully enjoy.
Back in the sixties, people like Edgar Villchur, Roy Allison, Win Burhoe, Henry Kloss to name a few, got into designing their speakers to be electrically and acoustically accurate. Back then as now, our buyer preaches with almost Graham-like enthusiasm, extolling the virtues of the music boxes these men designed.
We feel that this "Boston Sound" as it's called, is the most accurate, exciting way to listen to music. (An amazing fact is that all seven brands of loudspeakers we display are made within a 100 mile radius of our store.)

Americans 'cash in' on fire insurance

NEW YORK [AP] — Americans are intentionally burning down their own buildings at an increasing rate in an effort to "cash in" when they're in financial trouble, insurance officials said yesterday.

"Arson is a negative economic indicator," said Gene Kacson, vice president of the Insurance Information Institute. "During times of an economic downturn, we always have an upturn in arson claims."

"We estimate that 11 per cent of all the fire losses are attributable to arson," Kacson said. "Arson has grown over the last several years. But during periods of bad economic conditions, arson does rise."

The Insurance Services Offices, a statistical organization, reported that fire in the United States caused an estimated loss of $310 million in July, the latest month for which figures are available. That was $35 million, or 12.7 per cent, higher than July 1976.

The figure, which includes both insured and uninsured losses, brought to nearly $2.3 billion the total estimated fire loss through the first seven months of the year, up from about $2.1 billion in the period in 1976.

Arson "tends to be commercial rather than personal," Kacson said.

"If they were residences, they would be apartment houses, more than single-family dwellings," he said. "People very seldom burn down their own homes. We just don't find that occurs very often. It only happens sometimes when someone wants to sell their house and can't.

"If people have structures that are not useful in an economic sense, there may be an inducement to cash in," Kacson said. "Secondly, some people may find expenses are high and will use arson as a way of getting out from under a negative situation.

"In general, this fact is accepted, by police, fire and government officials," he said. "During difficult business cycles we will find warehouse fires at a higher level than during prosperous times."

Kacson said insurance companies don't pay claims "when it's obviously arson" but that in many cases "it is very hard to tell."

Industry spokesmen also say that an estimated 1,000 people are killed in deliberately set fires each year.

Paul Sawin, spokesman for the National Fire Protection Association in Boston, a non-profit organization that gathers statistics and provides information on fires, said arson "has been growing at an absolutely staggering rate.

"In 1964, we had 30,900 cases of arson," he said. "In 1975, we had 144 100 cases. The property loss in '64 was $68.2 million. In '75 it was $633.9 million. That's quite a jump."

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

From UNITED Feature Syndicate
For release TUESDAY, Sept. 13, 1977

FRIDAY, Sept. 16, 1977 — Born today, you possess a sharp, penetrating intelligence and a warm, inviting sense of humor that has the effect of guaranteeing that you will never take your mental superiority so seriously that you will offend those you are dealing with. You will achieve what you wish to achieve, for you will not brook that kind of pressure that would prevent you from doing so.

You are always free with your material offerings and your spiritual support, regardless of the person or enterprise in need of them. You will have to take care, however, that you are not so free with your aid that you lend your support to endeavors or individuals who are bound for objectives you would not approve of had you real knowledge of them.

Although you are often set tasks that others manage to avoid, and are often given responsibility that should by right be assigned to others, you never leave those tasks undone or shirk those responsibilities. You are quick to feel the injustice of an overload, should it placed upon you — but you are proud of your reputation for being able to accept an overload and not be "undone" by it.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

SATURDAY, Sept. 17

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — An inventive mind must work in conjunction with a set and acceptable goal; otherwise, chaos may well result.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — You will get what you want out of this day – if you are wise enough to want what it is possible to get! Rest on your laurels at evening.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — An overly energetic approach to a new project may interfere with plans to get the project off the ground before the day ends.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — An orderly spirit in a fit body: this is the formula if you hope to meet with success insofar as emotional stability is concerned. Dry your tears!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — You should find yourself at a tremendous advantage by day's end if you follow the advice of an expert in your field.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Make this a Saturday for joint enterprise. Community activities may leave something to be desired; add your experience to the pot.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Subdue your own temper and you will be able to deal better with those whose habit it is to be quiet, contemplative and peaceful.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Don't mistake another's reserve for anger. You can ask questions and feel sure of gaining whatever answers are known.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Affection and tolerance go together. Don't hesitate to speak your piece – but don't allow another to misquote you later in the day.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Originality of purpose must precede originality of method. Otherwise, there is no point in being in the vanguard.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — You can assume leadership on the home front – and hope that the appearance will carry the authority. Otherwise, you may have to compromise.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Employ humanitarian principles in all your involvements today. You neither want nor can afford to gain a reputation for being unfeeling or unkind.

Sports in Brief

Clock beats yacht

NEWPORT, R.I. [UPI] — Courageous, with a big lead over the challenging yacht Australia, yesterday failed to cross the finish line within the 5½ hour time limit and "no race" was declared in the second race of the America's Cup series.

Both boats lofted pennants to indicate they would race today in a rerun of the second race in the best-of-seven series.

Cuban hoop tour

WORCESTER, Mass. [AP] — In its only appearance in the East, Cuba's national basketball team will face Holy Cross College when it makes its first American visit since 1959.

Arrangements have been made for a Nov. 26 game at the Holy Cross campus, according to the office of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

NY Marathon set

NEW YORK [AP]— A record 5,000 persons, including Bill Rodgers of Boston, who won last year's event in 2:10:09.6., will participate in the 1977 New York City Marathon on Sunday, Oct. 23.

The race of 26 miles, 385 yards will begin on the Staten Island end of the Verrazano Bridge and weave through Brooklyn, Queens, the Bronx and Manhattan to the finish line at West 66th Street in Central Park.

Also among the runners will be Frank Shorter, a four-time Olympic medalist who was runner-up here last year; Chantall Langlace of France, who set the women's world marathon record this year in San Sebastian, Spain; Lynn Schreiber of Greenwich, Conn., the mother of quadruplets, and Lou Gregory, 74, a veteran marathoner who was a member of the 1932 Olympic team.

UConn babied?

STORRS, Ct. — The University of Connecticut, somewhat shell-shocked, hopes to retain some credibility tomorrow. The Huskies will meet Navy in Annapolis.

Coach Walt Nadzak says the UConn program is a positive one and that one devastating loss can't destroy it. Nadzak was still high on transfer quarterback John Chase, whom he says is going to be excellent.

The first year head coach has changed one thing. He feels that his no-contact approach may have "babied" Connecticut. The UConn's have been hitting during practice sessions this week.

Also, in an effort to shore up the secondary, Nadzak is installing sophomore Andre McGuire at safety. He had played wingback.

Knox gets pact

LOS ANGELES [UPI] — Chuck Knox today agreed to an extension of his contract as head coach of the Los Angeles Rams, team president Carroll Rosenbloom announced.

Knox's old contract was for this season and three additional seasons. The new agreement is a revolving five year contract which means that Knox will have five years on the pact, a year automatically being added at the end of each contractual year.

No other terms were announced.

"Chuck Knox's record speaks for itself," Rosenbloom said. "He's the NFL's winningest coach for the four years he has been in Los Angeles."

"I'm very happy about this," Knox said. "I have enjoyed greatly coaching the Rams. I look forward to being the coach for many years to come."

Fever builds for '78 World Cup

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina [UPI] — Things are starting to fall into place for the 1978 World Cup Soccer finals in Argentina.

Many uncertainties remain, but the outlines of the maximum "fubol" event next June are becoming visible, both in terms of organization and competitors.

The World Cup pits the national teams of every soccer-playing nation recognized by the International Football Federation (FIFA) in an elimination every four years to select 16 finalists who then engage in a 38-match playoff for the FIFA Cup. Cup winners will be decided in the final match at River Plate Stadium in Buenos Aires June 25.

The players are professionals, selected from the top teams in each country.

Officials of the Argentine organizing committee known by the awkward title of "Autarchic World Entity" recently made a tour of Venues at Mar del Plata, Rosario, Cordoba and Mendoza and said they found stadium construction 70 per cent complete, or more.

New stadiums are up and their pitch is already a lush, well-tended green in Mar del Plata, Cordoba and Mendoza. An existing stadium is undergoing major reconstruction in Rosario, as are the two stadiums designated for World Cup play in Buenos Aires — River Plate and Velez Sarsfield.

The organizers are expecting about 40,000 foreign visitors. They are making 400,000 tickets available abroad, to be sold in a package deal with hotel space and air fare to Argentina via the state-run Aerolineas Argentinas or its designated subcontractor. The 400,000 tickets average out to somewhat more than 10,000 foreign spectators at each of the 38 matches.

Argentine sportswriters have gone out on a limb to predict the following 16-team line up:

6-5 record, the first winning season in eight years for Maine. Bicknell did not just accomplish this with miracle x's and o's for he has a considerable amount of talent on hand.

For the second weekend in a row the Minutemen will be facing a good college quarterback in Massachusetts native Jack Cosgrove. Although not quite the caliber of Leamon Hall, Cosgrove can throw the ball with authority and is always a threat on the ground.

Joining Cosgrove in the backfield will be halfback Rudy DiPietro, who set a Maine single season rushing record last season by gaining 943 yards. DiPietro rushed for 120 yards in 28 carries last weekend and is only a little more than 200 yards shy of the school's all-time career rushing total. At fullback will be senior Jim Hood who carried for one of the Black Bears scores last weekend.

When Cosgrove does go up top he will most likely be looking towards senior Rich McCormick, last year's top receiver. The other wide receiver is another senior, Stan LaPointe.

The Black Bears have added some size and strength up front to bolster their defensive corps and will be looking to stop the Minutemen's ground game.

Maine enters the game reasonably healthy, although linebacker Steve Giordano will sit out the contest due to a knee injury (what else?) sustained last week.

According to MacPherson, the Black Bears have been talking about this weekend as the pivotal part of their schedule. A victory over UMass would be a great psychological boost, but for those more skeptical Black Bear fans a touchdown would probably suffice.

Welfare abortions back for vote

BOSTON [AP] — A feverishly debated bill to end public financing of abortions for welfare recipients is back in of the Massachusetts Senate now that the House overrode the governor's veto.

Opponents of the bill believe they have enough votes to sustain the Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' veto when the issue reaches the Senate floor Monday, but abortion foes have already prepared another confrontation.

The House Thursday overrode the governor's veto of the controversial legislation after one and one half hours of arguments that both sides admitted had been voiced over and over again. The vote was 151-to-70 — four votes more than would have been necessary to sustain the veto.

In anticipation of losing the battle to override the governor in the Senate, the co-sponsors of the bill have planned another strategy. Reps. Raymond Flynn, and Charles Doyle, both of Boston, say they will propose an abortion rider to the supplemental state budget scheduled for debate in the House Monday. If passed, the provision would achieve the same results: prevent state funds from being used to finance welfare abortions.

But Dukakis has promised to veto the measure, guaranteeing another storm of debate if the legislature adds the Doyle-Flynn provision to the budget.

The House vote Thursday to override the veto followed emotional debate by both sides, including several personal attacks on the governor by anti-abortionists.

Doyle called the governor the "sweetheart of the abortionists" and a "merchant of death."

When the Dukakis vetoed the legislation, Doyle declared, "his pen was dripping with the blood of unborn babies."

Rep. Max Volterra, D-Attleboro criticized Doyle for his colorful metaphors and accused him of trying to sidestep the issue.

The bill, Volterra charged, "discriminates in the worst way with what people need most, medical services."

Volterra said although he would vote to sustain the veto, he believed a compromise could be worked out if Doyle and Flynn would soften their position.

The bill as written permits the state to pay for abortions for welfare recipients only if the mother's life is in danger. Several legislators who voted to sustain the veto indicated they would have voted in favor of the bill if it had contained exceptions for victims of rape or incest.

Rep. Mel King, D-Boston, accused supporters of the Doyle-Flynn bill of being "naive" in arguing that the bill would cut down the number of abortions performed in Massachusetts.

People receiving welfare would still seek abortions, King said.

"The only difference is that people with the means will be able to walk away alive and people who don't have means will end up maimed or dead."

The vote to override the governor's veto included 136 Democrats and 15 Republicans, while 43 Democrats, 24 Republicans and 3 Independents voted to sustain.

Booters top Jeffs

By MARK MARCHAND
Collegian Staff

Mark Shannon scored two goals while Ion Bogdaneris and Bill Leary added singletons, as the UMass soccer team rolled to a 4-2 victory over Amherst College yesterday afternoon, boosting the Minutemen's preseason record to 3-1.

Coach Russ Kidd was impressed with his team's performance, saying "we controlled the ball 75 per cent of the time".

"We sat out four of our starters including co-captain Ed Niemic," Kidd added.

Kidd went on to say that he had a chance to look at a lot of his players in a game situation and also had a chance to play three goaltenders.

The booters next and final preseason tilt is Saturday afternoon when they travel to Williams College.

Steeler's Blount back; ends 56-day holdout

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — Cornerback Mel Blount, a mainstay in the Pittsburgh Steelers' defensive secondary, last night ended a 56-day holdout and reported to the team for the 1977 season.

Blount also dropped a $5-million defamation of character suit he had filed against Steelers coach Chuck Noll. Lawyers for the Steelers would have had to answer the suit Friday in court in New Orleans.

A Steelers spokesman said Blount's current contract, which runs through 1979, was not renegotiated or extended.

Blount, who will be in his eighth season with the team, was fined for missing the entire pre-season training camp, the spokesman said.

Blount and his attorney, Reg Foster, met with Steelers president Dan Rooney for one hour Thursday, and later at a hurriedly called news conference Rooney said in a statement:

"We have resolved our differences and are happy Mel will be playing with the Steelers. That was our primary objective during this entire matter."

Blount said he "reconsidered several things" and felt it was in his best interests to return to the team.

Blount sued Noll after the Pittsburgh coach said Blount's rough play could qualify him as belonging to what Noll called professional sports' "criminal element."

Noll made the statement in July during testimony in a slander suit filed against him by cornerback George Atkinson of the Oakland Raiders. A federal court jury ruled in favor of Noll.

Blount, who lives in Slidell, La., and raises quarterhorses on a farm he owns in Georgia, was named the National Football League's most valuable defensive player in 1975.

Bronco's Miller wants snakepit

DENVER [UPI] — Denver Bronco coach Red Miller says he not only wants his team to be feared but its fans, as well.

"I believe Mile High stadium can become a snake pit," Miller said. "I want National Football League teams to hate to come here so bad. The fans in Denver already have a reputation for being vocal, but I'm looking to them to become the loudest.

Mile High stadium's seating capacity goes up to 75,000 Sunday when the Broncos take on the St. Louis Cardinals in the season opener for both teams. The stadium's new 10,000 east stands completes an expansion program begun four years ago.

"I remember when I was coaching in Baltimore, and the stadium is a horseshoe there, too," Miller said. "Well, in one game the officials were forced to call time out 10 straight times because the fans wouldn't be quiet. That's the kind of noise I'm looking for."

Meanwhile, the Cardinals have been working out this week in Laramie, Wyo., to adjust to the region's light air which many visitors say causes a shortness of breath.

Miller said he was not bothered by the Cardinals new training approach.

"That has no effect on us," he said. "Let them do what they want to."

Bowlers await season

The UMass bowling teams return this fall and hope to equal or better their fine performances of last season.

The women's team last year finished first in the Tri-State League, which boasts such schools as West Point, UConn, WPI, Cornell and Lowell.

The women also took first place in the regional tournament and attended the National Team Championships in San Antonio, Texas.

The women however were hit hard by graduation and hope to come up with some new talent during tryouts later this month. The women are led by returning Juniors Beth Schneider and Amanda Garcia.

The men's team also had a fine year, finishing third in the 15 team Tri-State League. The men are led this year by returning seniors Paul Stutzman and Roger Norcross and sophomores Mitch Forman and Mike Berard.

Berard last year competed in the Collegiate National Championships in Reno, Nevada and finished 20th in a field of 32 of the country's best bowlers.

Both the men's and women's teams are hoping to pick up some additional talent in the roll-offs, to be held later this month at the Boyden lanes. All are encouraged to attend. Watch the Collegian for time and date of Roll-off.

Sox salvage win; Tiant, Doyle star

NEW YORK [UPI] — Veteran Luis Tiant and relief specialist Bill Campbell combined to pitch a nine-hitter and light-hitting Denny Doyle delivered a three-run triple in a six-run, sixth inning last night, leading the Boston Red Sox to a 7-3 victory over the New York Yankees and to within 2½ games of first place in the American League East Division.

The victory salvaged the third game of the big series with the Yankees and enabled the Red Sox to go into a second place tie with the Baltimore Orioles, who forfeited their game in Toronto.

Tiant, responding to the challenge of a "must" game late in a so-so season, yielded a solo homer to Reggie Jackson in the fourth inning and a two-run homer to Thurman Munson in the eighth after Paul Blair had singled before giving way to Campbell. Titant yielded eight hits, walked one and struck out four as he received credit for his 11th win against eight losses. Campbell allowed only a pinch-hit double by Dell Alston in the ninth in his 1 and two thirds innings of relief.

Yankee relief ace Sparky Lyle, who took over in the fifth when starter Mike Torrez developed a sore shoulder, went into the top of the sixth with a 1-1 tie but was bombed out by an onslaught of six Boston hits.

Bernie Carbo started the uprising with his third single of the game, took second on a passed ball by Munson and scored the tie-breaking run on a single up the middle by Carlton Fisk.

Singles by Carl Yastrzemski and Jim Rice filled the bases and George Scott followed with a two-run single to put the Rex Sox ahead 4-1. Fred Lynn walked to load the bases and Butch Hobson hit into a force play at the plate before Doyle, batting .242 when he entered the game, ripped his three-run triple down the right field foul line.

The Red Sox took a 1-0 lead in the second inning against Torrez when Rice doubled into the left field corner, went to third on an infield out and tallied on a wild pitch.

The Yankees lost the services of center fielder Mickey Rivers in the third inning when he suffered a sprained left ankle returning to first base on a pickoff attempt by Tiant after hitting a single.

O's pulled off diamond

TORONTO [UPI] — Rather than risk injury to one of his players, manager Earl Weaver of the Baltimore Orioles willingly let a game be forfeited to the Toronto Blue Jays last night when he pulled his club off the field in a protest over a tarpaulin which was covering the pitcher's mound in the left field bullpen.

The Orioles were trailing 4-0 entering the last of the fifth inning when Weaver approached third base umpire Marty Springstead and asked him to order the removal of a tarpaulin, which had been put on the pitcher's mound in the Blue Jays' bullpen in the left field corner to protect it from a steady rain.

Weaver argued that the tarp was a potential danger to his left fielder, Andres Mora, but Springstead refused to comply with Weaver's request and the Orioles' tempestuous skipper then pulled his club off the field. The Orioles were given 15 minutes by the umpires to get their players back on the field and when they did not return the game was forfeited to Toronto.

It could end up being a costly loss for the Orioles, who entered the game only 2½ games behind the first place New York Yankees in the American League East. But Weaver was more concerned about the safety of his players than the effect the loss had on the pennant race.

The last game forfeited in the Major Leagues occurred on June 4, 1974, when the Cleveland Indians forfeited to the Texas Rangers at Cleveland.

Netmen trounce Rhody in opener

By RALPH THORESON
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's tennis team yesterday picked up a hard-fought 6-3 victory over a stubborn Rhode Island team on the lower court.

The victory, first of the season for the Minutemen was especially pleasing to coach Jay Ogden because of his team's ability to win the matches that went three sets.

Rick Sharton, playing as UMass' number one singles man, won a hard-fought three set match over the Rams number one man, Mark Braunstein.

Ogden pointed out that Sharton's was the key match because it was the fifth individual win for the team, thus clinching an overall victory going into doubles play.

The Minutemen did have a letdown in the doubles matches, however, winning just one of three. The big surprise was the defeat of the number one doubles team — Al Green and Jim Barnhart. Ogden said, the doubles play must be steadier if UMass expects to have a successful fall season although the singles play was a very bright spot in the season's inauguaral match.

"I was especially pleased with the play of freshman Mark Huetteman and Keith Hovland, who each won their respective singles matches and teamed up for the only doubles victory," Ogden added.

The Minutemen's next home match will be tomorrow at 2 p.m. against Boston University on the lower courts. All of the team's matches will be held on the lower courts this year.

Women harriers open up season

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The 1977 UMass women's cross country team will open its season tomorrow when it travels to Storrs, Conn., to take on the University of Connecticut and Springfield College in a triangular meet at noon.

Backboned by five returning letter winners and three outstanding first year runners, the squad and new coach Charlotte Lettis are eagerly awaiting this first test of the season.

"We're a good, solid team," said Lettis, "a team similar to last year's, with a couple of additions. We're definitely as deep, which is a UMass tradition."

UConn has last year's New England champion, sophomore Lavinia Muncy, and probably very little else. Muncy, a national AAU qualifier, ran away from the field in last night's NE meet, but suffered a stress fracture in the spring and couldn't compete. According to Lettis, she's all the way back from that injury.

Springfield signed a contract for the meet, but supposedly doesn't have a cross country team and may not show. If they do, the Chiefs boast Sue North, a sub-five minute 1500 meter runner.

Lettis said the meet would be run over a 5,000 meter (about 3.1 miles) course, part of the UConn men's course. She described it as "rough and hilly, and all off paved roads."

Lettis said this year's team was "improved, if anything," from last year's squad, which was undefeated (4-0) in dual meets, notched two invitational wins (Lowell and Brandeis), was 2nd in the New Englands, 3rd in the Easterns and 14th in the Nationals.

Veterans from that stellar squad include seniors Sue Swartz, Johana Chapman and Jane Welzel, juniors Debbie Farmer and Anne Bradshaw and sophomore Barb Callahan. Newcomers Tina Francario, Priscilla Wilson and Eileen Everett should also crack the front running group, Lettis said.

Everett (no physical) and Bradshaw (sick) will not make the trip tomorrow.

The meet may not provide much competition, but will serve to break the ice and prepare the women for the stronger teams they will face later this year. Lettis pointed out that with women's track and cross country on the rise, the New England scene will be much closer this year.

Gridders greet hungry Bears

By RICH ECKEL
Collegian Staff

The UMass football team makes its 1977 home debut tomorrow afternoon when the Minutemen host Yankee Conference rival Maine in a 1:00 encounter at Alumni Stadium.

The Minutemen are looking to rebound from last weekend's 34-10 setback to the Cadets from Army, while the Black Bears will be searching for their second victory of the young season after squeaking past Lafayette, 12-10, last week.

Maine will also be looking to end two rather dismal streaks it has compiled against UMass. The Black Bears have failed to defeat the Minutemen since a 10-8 victory way back in 1965 and have gone seven seasons without a touchdown against UMass.

From prior performance Maine appears to be the perfect cure for the Minutemen, but UMass coach Dick MacPherson is not taking the Black Bears lightly.

"We've got to be fully prepared," said MacPherson. "There can't be a game any more important than this one. It's our opening game in Yankee Conference play and we've got to win it."

The game will mark the first time since MacPherson has been at UMass that the coaching staff will call the plays from the sidelines. This turnabout was necessitated because of the injury to starting quarterback Mike Fallon last weekend. Fallon, though his injury is less serious that previously thought, will not dress for tomorrow's game, leaving inexperienced sophomore Mike McEvilly at the helm.

McEvilly, who saw his longest varsity stint last weekend (21 minutes), was one for nine in the aerial department and had two passes intercepted. However, another outing like that is not expected this week.

"He was nervous, he'll play better this week," said MacPherson.

Guard Russ Cooke, who sustained a slight concussion at Army last weekend, will also have to sit out tomorrow's game, while defensive back Dave Croasdale is listed as doubtful with an injury to his heel.

Maine arrives at Alumni Stadium with perhaps its finest football team in many years. Last season, in his first year as head coach, Jack Bicknell led the Black Bears to a

Alternative academics

This university is prejudiced. Prejudiced against Red Sox fans.

All of New England is locked in a life-and-death pennant race, and the thought foremost on the mind of my physics prof is that it sure would be dandy to read chapters seven through nine on relativity.

My "Aspects of the Campaign" lecturer considers the political milieu sociologically fascinating, and if I would be good enough to peruse through 153 pages in the green "Sociological Fascination of the Campaign" text, I will understand why.

My Russian Literature instructor (alone,) gave me a break. I only have to browse through the "War" section of "War and Peace."

Assigning this kind of work in September, when the Sox aren't even mathematically eliminated, is most certainly a form of cruel and unusual punishment. Red Sox fans have constitutional rights too, y'know.

I'm not advocating that no books be read nor papers written until mid-October, for that would undermine UMass' highly regarded accreditation rating. I'd simply like a rational compromise, such as the following alternative list of month-and-a-half-long courses:

HISTORY OF THE SPITTER
PROF WHIT TOOEY

We'll study how all the great ones loaded the ball, and discuss whether or not the use of Slippery Elm to work up split is a sign that the pitcher may be tiring. If time permits, we'll look into the rumor that the first spitter was actually the result of nasal congestion.

Requirements — Students will be expectorated to attend class regularly.

Prerequisites — Anatomy 302, Upper Level Mucus.

PSYCH 111 — THE TWISTED MIND
OF THE STRIKEOUT VICTIM
DR. GEORGE SCOTT

Just what is the man who took the called third strike saying to the umpire? Why does he put his fist through the water cooler? Will he be a chronic wife-beater?

These are only a few of the questions with which we will be dealing in an attempt to clarify the motivation for the actions of the big whiffer.

Reading List — "Ball Four" — Jim Bouton.

Requirements — A 42-ounce bat and blurred vision.

Rrerequisites — Strikes one and two.

PHYSICS 221 —

NFL--and Howard--make season's debut

By Bill Edelstein

Now that the Red Sox have suffered through yet another losing series at Yankee Stadium, the time has come to turn our collective attentions to the upcoming football season.

The ever-lovin' Patriots open things up the day after tomorrow (that's Sunday for you day-of-the-week freaks) against Kansas City's Chiefs, at Fabulous Foxboro. The Chiefs are this season's top candidates for the "They're making fools of themselves out there" award.

The game most assuredly won't be as easy as the final score will indicate, however, because starting at right guard and tackle for the Pats will be a paper bag and ruptured inner-tube respectively. First-string starters at those positions, John Hannah and Leon Gray, who walked out on New England due to salary disputes, can be found at a local Howard Johnson's watching the game, sipping sodas and getting fat.

Still in all, the Patriots will be heavy favorites against Kansas City whose defensive line isn't quite the match for the Pats respective bag and tube.

The much maligned New York Giants open their slate with the Washington Redskins. The Giants have a chance to win this game, but they won't. They never do. The last time the Giants won their opening game was in 1925 when they beat Vassar College, 19-17. Vassar had three touchdowns called back because of a rough play.

Monday (that's two days after tomorrow for you days-after-tomorrow freaks) marks the start of another season of Herbiverous Howard sounding like a garden vegetable by lip-synching irrelevant statistics handed him by some ABC lackey.

Yep, the San Francisco 49'ers take on the Pittsburgh Steelers in one of the worst mismatches since Custer took on Sitting Bull in the Astrodome. Howard will undoubtedly mention the fact that he was privy to umpteen one-run baseball games in a row (he mercifully took a leave of abscence for the last Red Sox-Blue Jays massacre) so why shouldn't his streak continue on into the football season, you lucky fans, you.

Handy-Dandy Don Meredith will be back in the booth with Howie and fun-loving Frank Gifford. Don will be there because it was discovered that his acting career paralleled his football career--whenever some important scene came up, Danderoo couldn't handle it.

Gifford, himself is back because he reminds New Yorkers of a time when the Giants could actually claim to play football. When the Giants get good again, Gifford will be fired. His is a secure job.

All we, as television viewers, can hope for is that Alex Karras returns to the press box one night and silently 'pacify' the ABC trio. Alex was fired owing to gross incompetence.

Bromery discourages union

By ANDREA ATKINS
Collegian Staff

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery last night told students to think twice before making concrete plans for unionization during the Conference on Student Empowerment held in the Campus Center.

He said the bargaining between administration and faculty is handled by negotiators and is bound by legal structures which students should consider.

He outlined some of the inner workings of the administration at UMass and ended his speech with a short question and answer period where he responded to questions on student action and the housing problem.

In collective bargaining, Bromery explained, there are two sides represented (administration and faculty). The addition of student negotiators would add to the complication which already exists while keeping to three issues which are outlined in a state law regarding contract negotiations.

In discussing the limits of University power, Bromery explained this law which "gives the governor the final word" on programs at state institutions. The chancellor extended his statement by defining two major points of the law: first, labor unions can bargain only for wages, hours and conditions and, second, once this settlement is reached, the contract must be sent to the governor's office for approval. There the settlement is subject to veto without comment from the governor.

"Contracts are explicit," Bromery said. "If any of the parties fail, then penalties fall on the whole group." He suggested that students carefully look over the "mechanism that now exists" for student action before changing it.

The chancellor continued by introducing what he called "the ability of external politics to invade University life." Bromery said because of pressures from government about one third of Whitmore" must account to the federal government for the money they spend.

Commenting on the survey of 57 issues made by the Student Center on Educational Research (SCER), Bromery proposed the topics be broken into related categories, specifically, education and economy.

The SCER survey questioned UMass students on their priorities in terms of spending. Bromery said he was "pleased" to see that academics was first with most students.

Bromery said in certain cases, more effective student representation was needed but re-stated the existing system could be effective. Concerning the housing problem, he admitted there were some mistakes made by the administration but in solving the problem, it wanted to stay away from computerization which might create more problems. Bromery said next year's admissions might be altered somewhat to compensate for this year's record freshman class.

UMass bear statue reappears

The UMass bear statue, missing since last October, reappeared this weekend in its original place, above the main entrance of the Student Union Building. The bear was a gift of Hokkaido University in Japan and was presented to UMass as a symbol of friendship. It was presented to the University by former UMass President Jean Paul Mather at dedication ceremonies for the then new Student Union in January, 1957.

Student union makes gains

By BRUCE KAYTON
Collegian Staff

UMass students organizing student unionization yesterday said the union will be run by the students and for the students.

"The point is the people that are doing the coordinating will come directly from the grassroots councils. There won't be representatives, there will be spokespersons," said Greg Tarpinian, an organizer of the movement.

There were a variety of speakers and workshops yesterday on student unionization. Approximately 450 people attended a session with nationally known student rights activist Tom Hayden at the Campus Center Auditorium. Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery last night spoke and a discussion followed the speech. (See related story.)

The student union is still in its infant stage and the leaders of the movement hope to look back at yesterday as the day when things really got moving, they said.

Only 15-20 people attended the afternoon workshop but student organizers said they are happy with this turnout.

"It only takes a small number of people of affect change," said Tarpinian, "and remember we're only in the discussion stage."

Brian J. DeLima, speaker of the Undergraduate Student Senate said a thousand people were reached when Dick Gregory spoke at the Campus Center Auditorium and another 450 were reached when Hayden spoke.

One result of the day-long conference is a statement made by the students expressing the students' dissatisfaction of being powerless in their own University.

Warrants for 61 at Kent State

KENT, Ohio [compiled sources] — Warrants have been issued for the arrest of 61 persons who briefly occupied the site of the proposed $6 million gym at Kent State University, adjacent to the 1970 massacre of four students by the Ohio National Guard, who were demonstrating against the U.S. invasion of Cambodia during the Vietnam war.

Construction of the facility is scheduled to begin this week, possibly today, said Kent State University President Brage Golding. The proposed site is at least 120 feet from the actual location of the shootings' site, he added.

Two protesters were arrested Saturday when they and two others attempted to stop workers removing trees from Blanket Hill. The tree-moving effort got underway as U.S. Supreme Court Justice William J. Brennan Jr. rejected the May 4 Coalition's latest maneuver to halt construction.

Karen E. Gordon, Cleveland Heights, and Julia Cochrane, 24, Kent, had buried themselves horizontally in a hole workers had dug to transplant a tree from the construction site.

Cochrane escaped serious injury when a backhoe operator, suddenly and without warning, according to police, scooped up a load of dirt next to the spot where she was burrowed. Police dragged her by the arms for 100 feet, until they realized she had fainted, and then picked up her feet and took her to a hospital where she was placed under observation.

It is unclear as to whether the sight of the descending scoop made her lose consciousness.

The operator of the front end loader was a Kent fireman whose hose had been cut during the burning of the university's ROTC building two days prior to the May, 1970 shooting.

Also arrested Saturday was Greg W. Currie, Cleveland Heights, sheriff's deputies said, adding that Currie and a female juvenile were sitting in a hole dug for a tree.

Gordon and Currie were charged with resisting arrest and disorderly conduct and were being held yesterday in the Portage County Jail, Ravenna, in lieu of $3,000 security bond apiece.

"You better plan on being here for a long, long time, for every day it takes to build this gym," one protester chided at police, who have been guarding Blanket Hill 24 hours a day to protect workers and the site.

Collegian reporter Brad Goverman will file a detailed report on what happened at Kent State this weekend in tomorrow's Collegian.

Conferences mean $

By ELIZABETH S. KENT
Collegian Staff

The Campus Center's most lucrative market is conferences, according to William M. Harris, new director of the Campus Center. Harris wants to make the complex financially viable, and in doing so, reduce the debt-fee which the student body now has to pay.

The present debt service amounts to $1.7 to $1.9 million. For the past two years, the Campus Center fee has increased $13, from $66 to $79.

The Campus Center must be made more attractive to prospective conferees, Harris said, to take advantage of the large conference market. This would also benefit the residence halls and ddining commons by expanding their use during the large summer conferences.

According to Harris, the University Store coontributed about $250,000 toward the Campus Center debt service. The University Store is budgeted to contribute $321,000 for fiscal year 77-78.

There is a precedence for the state paying for the campus centers of state schools, Harris said, so it is possible the state would finance some part of the UMass Campus Center debt.

There is currently legislation before the state house to achieve just that. There is, however, no possibility the state would reimburse students for monies already paid on the debt, Harris said.

Campus Center Board of Governors and Harris are presently considering a proposal for a new check cashing service in the complex.

Most.state universities around the country have commercial banks on campus, Harris said.

The new director came to UMass in June from Rutgers University. He was director of Student Activities and the campus center there, and was also the assistant dean of students.

As director of the Campus Center Harris is responsible for its various operations and services. These include food services, the University Store, Conference Services, Accommodations Services, and the maintenance and operation of the entire complex.

Harris has permanently filled the position formerly held by three acting co-directors: William F. Field, O.C. Bobby Daniels, and Kenneth H. Dean.

UM Child Care System can baby the pre-schooler

By CANDY CARLON
Collegian Staff

In a small second floor office, a young woman listens attentively as a secretary explains the registration forms before her. On display around the room are drawings and paintings obviously done by young children.

The office belongs to Mark Segar, director of the UMass Child Care System (CCS), coordinated by the University's Community Development Center. The young woman is a mother hoping to register her child in one of the on-campus day care programs.

CCS attempts to alleviate some of the problems encountered by parents of pre-school aged children by providing day care programs. It also provides a babysitting referral service, which matches babysitters with community families.

Although the programs are open to the five-college community, UMass students are given first priority in enrolling their children in the five Student Affairs-sponsored day care schools.

The Infant Care Experimental Center, in North Village Apartments, offers half and full day sessions for children aged three months to two-and-a-half years.

North Village also houses the New World Day School and the North Village Children's Center.

The Grassroots Cooperative School is situated in the First Baptist Church on North Pleasant Street. This program stresses parental involvement both in the classroom and in policy-making decisions. These three schools are designed for children from two and-a-half to five years of age.

The University Day School, housed in Bowditch Lodge, works in conjunction with the School of Education.

The children, aged two-and-a-half to six are offered an open classroom with various activity areas, including art, blocks, and science.

The school is staffed by student teachers as well as a head teacher and an assistant teacher.

According to Segar, these programs were originally started by parent groups who eventually approached the University for sponsorship.

"UMass has the cheapest day car, as far as what the parents have to pay, in the state of Massachusetts," stated Segar. The reason for this low cost is due to a University subsidy of one half the expense of these programs.

All the CCS schools have interns and work study students involved in the day care services, which Segar believes adds to the enthusiasm and energy of the programs. There are many positions open to involvement by students with a variety of skills, such as art, dance and landscaping, which aids in the design of playgrounds.

CCS has only two male staff members, but last year had six male interns.

There are only a few openings currently available. There are no infant child care openings, which are more in demand than the other programs. There are still a few afternoon openings. For more information contact the Child Care Office, 221 Berkshire or call. If space is unavailable, the office will refer you to off-campus day care programs.

Sci-Fi Library--reading isn't 'forced'

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

"May the Force be with you" is the greeting you may expect but won't ever get from the librarians or patrons of the Science Fiction Library, located in room 434 of the Student Union.

The library, an RSO group, began in 1964 and now claims to have over 10,000 volumes of science fiction, horror, fantasy material and comic books.

President Lou Wysocki said most of the present 100 members just come in to talk to the librarians about the latest happenings in science fiction and claims the library is "the only place on campus for light reading."

The library is also the meeting place for other small groups on campus such as people interested in strategy games and the Star Trek Lives group, a clearinghouse for Star Trek information.

The UMass Sci-Fi Library, an affiliate of the New England Science Fiction Association (NESFA), receives advance warnings of forthcoming movies and books as well as advance copies from both Bantam Books and Fawcett publishers.

Wysocki said members of the library also publish a newsletter and hold two annual parties, one on Halloween and the other on Walpurgis Night, which falls on the eve of May 1. Walpurgis Night is when witches and other supernatural beings ride through the skies. "We celebrate it, but it's not as well known," Mary Trompke, the library's secretary said.

Library members have a table in the Campus Center throughout the semester where third and forth copies of library books are sold. The profits going toward buying new titles as well as subsidizing people going to various science fiction conventions.

The Science Fiction Library is open to all members of the five-college community and the $2 per semester membership fee entitles the member to take out any five books for a week, renewable, and free entrance to all parties and films sponsored by the library.

Hayden following union progress

By CAROLYN GUERRA
Collegian Staff

Political activist Tom Hayden addressed a crowd of about 200 students in the Campus Center Auditorium last night, citing the importance for students to put forth a collective effort in organizing a union of students.

Hayden was the second keynote speaker of the Student Unionization Conference held here this weekend, organized by the Student Organizing Project.

Hayden commened UMass students involved in the protest of UMass investments in South Africa for their substantial victory through the decision of the Board of Trustees to divest their holdings in corporations based in that country. Hayden told the crowd that out of 17 votes on the board of the University of California system, only six supported withdrawal of that university's holdings in South Africa.

Hayden then addressed his talk to the subject of a union of students at UMass. He said he plans to follow the progress of activities geared toward such a unionization on the UMass campus with great interest.

He went on to say that in the 50's and 60's, the "Student Union" was someplace you went to get coffee and the only reason for a membership would be to use the school pool. He pointed out that the idea of a union of students aimed at a valid and active part in the decision making of university policies was something students were not allowed to be in a position to conceptualize.

In the 60's, students had no rights, Hayden said, and the concept of students having rights was looked upon as revolutionary. Student governments could take no stand on issues and students in general were told they were not fit to think for themselves and had no voting rights, he said.

Then things began to change, Hayden said. Out of small debates in the growing unrest on campuses in the 60's, came the foundation of activities which helped desegregation of the south, "frozen for a hundred years," and created an atmosphere for the rise of minority rights, including those of women, he said.

Abolition of the draft, the toppling of two presidents and the end of the Vietnam war, he continued, were also results of student protest in the last decade.

He said he feels Kent State and Jackson State are key examples of how the past tragedies and anti-war efforts connected with the protest of students of the Vietnam war are threatened with direct attempts of the involved officials to place them in obscurity forever.

He went on to say that historically, this can be shown to happen frequently. A "return to the old days" of superficial peace is what those who would wish to avoid confrontation by further investigations and persistance are actively trying to do with the building of the gynasium proposed for the site of the Kent State student slayings.

"I fear in this country the rights and achievements of the last decade are being cut back," he said. By initiating some achievement here, "you can influence the rest of the country and use it as a building stone to the future."

This effort requires change in the present social climate of the United States and change in attitudes, he said, "It is for us to decide."

Hayden said the poor in this country are the most tragic victims of the present system. Middle Class "nest eggs" are being snatched away and a college education can no longer be looked upon as a way of moving up the ladder and a vehicle to economic opportunity. Graduates are now among the ranks of the unemployed, he said.

The dream of upward mobility through education is starting to crack, Hayden said, and rampant individualism is the "blessing and curse" of organizing students. It is important for students to see that in order to secure and strengthen individual rights for each student, there must be a collective effort. Students must be willing to feel a part of a class of people or social group without fear of losing their individual freedom and identity, he said.

The government could begin a campaign to rekindle prosperity in this country, Hayden said, by reversing the cutbacks in social programs and education programs and stopping the exploitation and manipulation of defenseless people.

Hayden said a program of majority economics should be put into law; but posing a threat to the present system is something that causes much resistance. Full employment and housing, education through college, and health care should be "a matter of human right," he said, but these things are alien to the present economic situation in United States.

Franklin D. Roosevelt suggested these things 30 years ago as an economic bill of rights, said Hayden, and now we are told we do not have this prospect.

He said the system should be reorganized along the lines of the aforementioned goals; he sees them as the "quality of life."

He outlined a three point plan. Representation of the labor force of any corporation or corporate entity on its board and labor's participation in all investment and corporate decisions of the corporation is one point stressed in the plan.

The transition of fossil fuel energy to solar energy is another point in Hayden's plan. "No one can create a monopoly of the sun" Hayden said, and a more equal representation of women and minorities in corporate executive positions should be achieved.

He said the concept of reinvestment of capital has gone "haywire". There must be some legal guidelines of who comprises the board of directors of corporations which have a great power base in the political and economic functions of this country.

The struggles of the 60's opened up a crack for the 70's and created more opportunity for social progress and economic democracy, he said.

Hayden said most of the people who jailed the student activists in the '60's are now serving time themselves in the 70's. He says this with no "revengeful" feelings but to emphasize what was resisted then is now truth accepted.

He also said the 60's struggle has undergone it's searching and now can arise in a progressive and strong unification of socially minded people in the 70's using social and economic frustration as the unifying basis.

If the government fears us learning the truth so much, known by its efforts to cover up so many things, it must show us we have power, Hayden said. Because of this, he said, we are living in a country where the government is at war with its citizens.

A past organizer himself in 1961 for civil rights, Hayden co-funded the Students for a Democratic Society in 1962. He was among the Chicago 7 defendants in 1969 and 1970 resulting from his involvement with the anti-war movement against the American involvement in Vietnam.

He became a candidate for the U.S. Senate in 1976. Running on a democratic ballot in California, he was not elected. He felt the weaknesses in his campaign was the fact that many young people have become disillusioned in the present electoral system and the bulk of the young vote was not represented.

Hayden is now working on a campaign for economic democracy through a statewide organization in California. The organization's goals are to make social and political changes in California.

'Reorganize'—Bromery

By MOIRA P. CAMPBELL
Collegian Staff

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery Friday offered a plan to reorganize the Massachusetts Board of Higher Education's role with the state university system.

"The present Massachusetts Board of Higher Education," said Bromery, "should be retained with a redefinition of its role and function focused primarily on the state-federal and public-private liaison." Such action would retain UMass-Amherst as head of the three UMass campuses in Amherst, Boston and Worcester.

Bromery's plan differs from that of Paul Parks, director of Educational Affairs, for the state, who suggested that the state Board of Higher Education split into regional sections. Park's proposal, introduced this summer, would divest UMass of its position as head of the UMass campuses.

Bromery addressed himself to this topic and two others including the changing University presidency and the faculty collective bargaining effort during the Convocation Speech to University faculty.

Bromery's proposal for reorganization within public higher education also includes "a horizontal separation of the three major segments of public higher education, an effective and functional statewide coordinating board with equal representation from each segmental board, protection against direct political influence for future planning, and determination of resource allocation as a function of public higher educational program needs."

Bromery also announced that the UMass Board of Trustees will select and name an interim president of UMass if no candidate has been named by January 1, 1978, when present President Robert C. Wood's resignation becomes effective.

Bromery, concluded the speech saying he hopes the outcome of faculty bargaining sessions will be to the mutual benefit of both the faculty and the University's objective to provide quality teaching for its students. He said the duty of the University community is to "pull together this year to improve ourselves and our prospects."

Distinguished Teachers given awards

By PATTY KIT
Collegian Staff

The University recognized its most outstanding teachers last Friday at the annual Faculty Convocation with the presentation of the "Distinguished Teacher Awards" and the "Distinguished Teaching Assistant Awards."

The three recipients of the teaching award were professors Bruce Hoadley, Maurice Levin and Edward Phinney. Teaching assistant awards were presented to Sue Currier, Garry Monroe and Edward Wolff, all graduate students. Each award consists of a citation from the University and a check for $1,000 provided by a grant from the AMACO Corporation.

The distinction is determined by a strict criteria. Selections are made by a faculty and student board appointed by the provost. They consider the ability of the teacher to stimulate students through challenging ideas and effective communication techniques.

The teacher must also have full knowledge of subject matters and the ability to interpret and relate the result of contemporary scholarship, be interested in counseling students and show evidence of consistently distinguished work for at least three years.

Hoadley, an associate professor of forestry and wildlife management, was described by his students as "dedicated, demanding and encouraging; interesting because he is interested." Levin, professor of Slavic Languages, makes Russian challenging and dynamic, students said, by emphasizing student participation. The third award winner, Phinney, a professor of Classics, was described by members of his class as "spellbinding and capable of generating enthusiasm even at 8:00 in the morning."

Currier is a teaching assistant in the Rhetoric department, Monroe is a teaching assistant from accounting, and Wolff won his teaching assistant award for his work in the mathematics department.

CEQ projects take clean aim

By DEBBIE GRAFF
Collegian Staff

Does it bother you that one day our oceans won't be clean enough to swim in, or that soon recycling will be a way of life?

The UMass Coalition for Environmental Quality (CEQ) would like to promote a new awareness of environmental issues through the education and involvement of students in various projects.

Formed in 1970 by the Undergraduate Student Senate, it has since been dealing with many different issues. But the organizations's involvement in campaigns and projects is severely limited by the lack of student concern and participation. Although there are over one hundred members, only about ten of these people are truly involved.

At a recent meeting President Carol Entin gave an introduction to CEQ, and suggested some projects be undertaken. Pointing out that someday recycling will be mandatory, she proposed that all soda machines on campus be stocked with only returnable bottles.

CEQ would also like to sponsor an environmental film festival and continued action dealing with wildlife issues, such as the dolphins and whales. These projects could all be very successful if student participation would increase, Entin said.

There are no paid positions in the CEQ, but there are many advantages to this. Meeting people with similar interests and working together for a common cause can be a very satisfying experience. The coalition also organizes canoe trips, potluck dinners, hikes, and assorted adventures. There was even a trip to Provincetown to watch the whale migration.

There are also many academic advantages to be gained while working with CEQ, such as learning how to put together a newsletter, or gaining experience working with the general public. It may even be possible to earn a credit while working on a specific project.

It requires no knowledge of environmental issues to become a member of the coalition. Entin said many people are afraid to join because they feel they don't know enough about ecology and conservation to participate actively. She stressed one of their objectives as an organization is to educate people, and that everyone's time and effort is considered very valuable.

CEQ will hold their election meeting Sept. 22 at 7:30 p.m. in Campus Center room 903. There are still positions available including secretary, vice-president, projects coordinator, and newsletter coordinator.

Profile

Prince's life heir-raising

By MATHEW KOVARY
Collegian Staff

Prince Albert Grimaldi, 19-year-old heir to the throne of Monaco, is alive and well and living at Amherst College.

The prince, now beginning his freshman year, is at the request of his family being treated like any other student.

He lives in a freshman dorm with students his own age. When it gets too noisy, he leaves his single room, marked "Big Al", and walks to the Amherst Library to study introductory courses in political science, history, economics and English.

The prince is becoming a quite familiar figure on campus. Friends who recognize his tall, neatly cut, dirty-blond profile wave to him from across the lawn.

Prince Albert appears to be unaffected by his position in life. He is sincere but quiet, and never offered more than asked — the sign of a veteran interviewee.

Prince Albert walks around campus without a bodyguard, although it is believed the Grimaldi family has taken private security measures. But this reporter had no trouble tracking the Prince down one morning before classes, and actually met him for the first time standing in his royal pajamas.

Albert is soft spoken, and speaks slowly without an accent. As a youngster, he learned French and English simultaneously, due to the influence of his famous American mother and aristocratic father.

Rarely has there been a royal family which has been as loved, photographed and doted on as Monaco's Grimaldi's. Albert is the son of Prince Rainier III and Princess Grace, former movie star Grace Kelly. In 1958 all 4,000 citizens of Monaco heralded the arrival of the Grimaldi's first son, Prince Albert. Albert's sister, Princess Caroline, is one year older than the prince, and is engaged to be married to Philippe Junot, 37-year-old French businessman within the year. Albert's other sister, Stephanie, 12, has her royal heart set on ballet.

The prince is neither what one might call talkative, or humorous. He is a serious individual, a bit nervous and reserved in his behavior. Although far from being pompous, he rarely elaborated on any topic and answered questions with a quick staccato delivery.

Albert Grimaldi

"Do you like to travel?"

"Yes."

"Do you have a favorite city?"

"Not really."

"Why is that?"

"I like London."

"Why do you like London?"

"It has personality."

"Do you have a home away from home? Perhaps here in the states?"

"Philadelphia."

"Why is Philadelphia your home away from home?"

"My mother's family lives there."

Being heir to the throne of Monaco has certain benefits. At home, the prince lives in a 200-room pink-and-while palace surrounded by flowers, flags, and snappily dressed guards. Monaco, a 450-acre princedom on the French Riviera, is not much bigger than New York's City's Central Park. It is an international playground for the rich, and according to Prince Albert, is a favorite convention site for congressmen and business executives.

The prince is a great fan of the Grand Prix and knows several famous race car drivers, most notably Jackie Stuart, who the prince says recently retired.

Monaco is also the site of an international television festival that rivals the Cannes Film Festival a few miles away. According to the prince, television shows from around the world are viewed and judged every spring just like the films at Cannes are.

But being heir to the throne can sometimes be inconvenient. During his public high school days in Monaco, Albert dated girls under the watchful eye of a chaperone. The Prince admits having someone follow you around can certainly cramp your style. So when asked if he ever identified with the overprotected prince in Mark Twain's The Prince and the Pauper, he smiled for the first time during the interview and said, "yes."

Kent film

The film "Kent State — May 1970" will be shown at 7:30 p.m. in Student Union 413A. It is a documentary depicting the events leading up to and including the shooting of four students at Kent State May 4, 1970, for protesting the war in Vietnam. Discussion will follow which will include events going on now at Kent State concerning the building of a gym on the site of the murders. The film will be shown by the Revolutionary Student Brigade. Everyone is invited.

U.N. fall session has big agenda

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. [AP] — The United Nations General Assembly opens its three-month fall session tomorrow facing a crowded agenda dominated by the racial confrontation in southern Africa and the status of Israeli-occupied Arab territories.

Other issues among the almost 120 items scheduled for debate are human rights, bridging the gap between rich and poor nations, curbing political terrorism and the admission of Vietnam and the newly independent African state of Djibouti to U.N. membership.

But the scorecard on the 32nd General Assembly session is likely to be based on what the world organization can do to help resolve the conflicts and potential conflicts in southern Africa and the Middle East.

A leading African diplomat told reporters last week that the United States is going into the session with "more authority and credibility", largely because of the success of what he described as "the Third World-oriented diplomacy" of Ambassador Andrew Young, the first black U.S. chief delegate to the United Nations. It will be Young's first General Assembly session.

Scores of heads of state and foreign ministers will be on hand for the first phase of the session, and many governments are counting on the high-level contacts to provide the needed impetus for progress in at least some of the complicated issues.

Middle East foreign ministers here for the assembly session are to try to begin a new round of indirect, U.S.-mediated peace discussions.

The presence of one head of government, Uganda's President Idi Amin, could touch off a storm of controversy here. Amin, whose regime has been widely accused of brutality, has said he would like to address the assembly, but no official communication has been received here yet.

These are the main issues before the General Assembly:

—Rhodesia: The latest British-American plan for ending Rhodesia's 12-year-old rebellion and transferring power to the black majority will be examined closely in the assembly and in the Security Council.

The plan provides for a black government to be chosen by the end of 1978 in a one-person, one-vote election overseen by the British and a U.N. representative, A U.N. peacekeeping force would act as a buffer between Rhodesian government forces and black guerrilla armies.

President Carter is expected to appeal for the support of the British-American plans when he addresses the assembly Oct. 4.

—South-West Africa: The assembly and council will also assess the continuing international efforts to bring about majority rule in South-West Africa, home to 100,000 whites and 750,000 blacks. South Africa rules the territory under an old League of Nations mandate the United Nations disallowed in 1966.

The five Western members of the council — the United States, Britain, Canada, France and West Germany — have been negotiating with South Africa and the black nationalist South-West Africa People's Organization on a plan for independence by the end of 1978.

News in Brief

Mondale speaks, on Lance hearings

COLUMBUS, Ohio [UPI] — Vice President Walter F. Mondale says he believes Budget Director Bert Lance has helped his own cause with appearances before the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee.

But the vice president declined to say this weekend whether he felt Lance should stay on with the Carter administration or resign.

"Let us await the outcome of the hearings," Mondale told reporters Saturday in Columbus, Ohio, where he addressed a $125-a-plate fund-raising dinner at the Ohio Democratic party.

"I think he has done very well at these hearings," Mondale said of Lance. "Already his presentation has helped to remove some of the charges hanging over his head. The proper thing to do is to let him have his day."

Americans for democratic action

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Americans for Democratic Action joined in the criticism of President Carter yesterday, saying his domestic policies are "jeopardizing his liberal support for renomination and reelection in 1980."

The liberal organization said in a statement issued by its national board that it is "concerned with the underlying assumption of this administration that "life is unfair" and little can be done about it."

Leon Schull, ADA National Director said, "President Carter is retreating from long-time Democratic progressive positions and reneging on the realistic expectations many citizens derived from his campaign commitments, and the Democratic party platform."

The ADA said the administration's goal of balancing the budget and at the same time increasing defense spending has hurt employment programs and other social services.

Board members specifically criticized the administration for:

—A welfare proposal that "redistributes poverty rather than income."

—An economic stimulus package that favors individuals and private industry.

—A job-creating proposal that had less than one-fourth of the total package going toward direct job creation.

—A job-creating record that will be insufficient to drop unemployment by 1 per cent during the first year of the Carter presidency.

—A food stamp program that omits many working poor now eligible for food stamps.

Profits for oil companies, 1977

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Profits for 21 top oil companies in the first six months of 1977 were greater than their total profits for the entire year of 1972, the consumer-oriented Energy Action group said yesterday.

James Flug, director of Energy Action, said figures published by the leading companies show their profits increased from $2.822 billion in the first half of 1972 to $5.74 billion in the first half of 1977 in current dollars.

"In fact," said a statement issued by the group, "the reported profits for the first six months of 1977 exceeded the profits reported for all of 1972 by $30.3 million."

The group said while oil company profits were rising by 103 per cent since 1972, the last year before the Arab oil embargo, earnings of the average American worker increased by only 38.5 per cent and energy prices increases ranged from 77.4 per cent for gasoline to 140.4 per cent for fuel oil.

13 nations meet on energy shortages

LONDON [AP] — Representatives of the 13 nations that control Antarctica meet here today to discuss what to do with their frozen assets on a barren continent that scientists say holds vast energy, food and mineral riches.

Their decisions at the 10-day conference may head off a major international political battle and could have far-reaching effects for a world threatened with energy shortages and famines.

The countries are the "consultative members" of the Antarctic Treaty organization that for 19 years has controlled the icy continent that accounts for one-tenth of the globe's land surface.

These nations are the United States, the Soviet Union, Japan, Britain, France, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, Chile, Argentina, Belgium, Norway and Poland.

Scientists say the polar ice contains an estimated 90 per cent of the world's largest reserves of protein, in the form of fish, krill — swarms of small, shrimp-like crustaceans — and other marine life; huge deposits of coal, iron ore, oil and natural gas, and possibly large quantities of plutonium, nickel, copper, gold, cobalt and other rare metals.

Homeowners are against Concorde

MIAMI [AP] — Homeowners in six cities, including Boston, are joining forces to keep the supersonic Concorde jetliner from landing in their cities, a lawyer for one of the groups said yesterday.

"We have information that the Concorde will be allowed to land in several cities in addition to New York and Washington," said Ellis Rubin as he announced formation of a group called Emergency Coalition to Stop the SST.

Other coalition members are in New York, Chicago, Boston, Honolulu and Dallas, he said.

Rubin, who once represented residents complaining of noise made by conventional jets at Miami Airport, said they expect the Carter administration to allow the Concorde to land at other cities when a test period is over this fall. Rep. Leo Ryan, D-Calif., has set a Sept. 24 announcement will clear the way.

The Environmental Protection Agency has opposed the controversial airplane on grounds that its landing and takeoff are too noisy.

Do someone a favor today

This week marks the third straight semester the Collegian will be sponsoring a blood drive to kick off the UMass Donor Center's blood-collecting efforts. While the thought of giving blood sends chills down the spines of some of the more squeamish editors at this publication, those who have given before realize the benefits of knowing they have helped someone in need far outweigh the minor discomforts involved.

UMass' Red Cross Donor Center, which recently moved from its old location in the Health Center (infirmary) to the Public Health Building (next to Morrill), is part of a blood-collecting system that services more than 220 hospitals in Maine and Massachusetts alone. Last year, the Red Cross collected about 360,000 pints in this region, while the local hospitals required more than 400,000. The region is striving for, and coming close to, self-sufficiency.

UMass operates the only on-campus donor center in the Northeastern U.S. During the center's first year in operation two years ago, it collected about 1100 pints, and last year improved its yield to 1547 pints. This year, with even more open hours than before, there are great hopes for a further increase.

The donor center will be open for the rest of the semester Tuesday and Thursday from 5 to 9:30 p.m., and Wednesday from 2 to 8 p.m. This week a sign-up sheet will be in the Collegian business office for donors to pick a convenient time.

Donating blood usually takes from 30 minutes to an hour of your time. It might even be a welcome break from studying, partying or unionizing. The blood you donate may help anywhere from one to six patients — so do someone a favor and sign up.

A colorblind judiciary?

"Someone should give Judge Johnson a barbed wire political enema". This statement of obvious endearement for the Judge was made by Alabama governor George Willace, who later withdrew the statement due to the tastelessness of the medical analogy (through an equally bitter apology), on a recent 60 minutes program. Mike Wallace then confronted George with another inspired gem from the horses...; in this pithy ditty, Wallace claimed that "this country is run by thugs and Federal judges".

This latter maxim is certainly more truthful, though distinctly less colorful and graphic than the former, but it represents a growing dissatisfaction among bureacrats with the actions of the federal judiciary in its quest to set right the many wrongs brought to its attention. Since 1954 the rank and file of the elite corp of judges have been seizing school districts and running them according to their own subjective dictates. However, now, a little more than 20 years after the Supreme Court had ordered schools to end discriminatory policies directed against minorities, it may be forced to do the reverse, and end practices directed against whites.

In October, the United States Supreme Court will hear the case of one Allan Bakke v. the Board of Regents of the University of California, a suit brought by Bakke seeking admission to the medical school at the Daivis campus. Bakke is basing his case on a principle which has been, and remains, the subject of much vitriolic debate these days; the concept of reverse discrimination. The case, and the fundamental principles involved, are best summed up by the first two lines in the decision of the California Supreme Court, handed down in September of 1976, when they decided in favor of Bakke.

"In this case we must confront a sensitive and complex issue: whether a special admissions program which benefits disadvantaged minority students who apply for admissions to the medical school...offends the constitutional rights of better qualified applicants denied admission because they were not identified with a minority. We conclude that the program, as administered by the University violates the constitutional rights of non-minority applicants because it affords preference on the basis of race to persons, who by the University's own standards, are not as qualified for the study of medicine as non-minority candidates denied admission."

It is undeniable that minorities and disadvantaged persons have been subject to discrimination, incidious in many cases, particularly in the field of education. Every citizen should be, and is, entitled to receive a quality education regardless of her or his race according to the Supreme Court.

If the Constitution is "colorblind," we cannot sanction discriminatory policies or practices, regardless of whom it affects or their race. The 14th amendment prohibits discrimination in that it states that "no person shall be denied equal protection under the laws". The Civil Rights Acts proscribe discrimination on the basis of any of the so called "suspect" categories: race, creed, color, sex or national origin. It is hard to sanction the admissions procedures at U-Cal-Davis in the light of these lofty concepts.

The admissions policy of the University of California that is the subject of this litigation sets aside a fixed number of spaces in every entering class that are to be reserved for disadvantaged students. It serves to establish an obvious quota, a practice that in almost all other circumstances has been declared most foul and incidiously discriminatory. The Court must now decide if there are compelling reasons or interests which outweigh the palpable denial of an individuals civil rights.

In my opinion, this question need not be addressed by the Court when it decides this case, for there are alternative admissions procedures, legal in nature, which will achieve the objective sought by the University of California-Davis, and do it in a more expeditious fashion. This method is one that is used by many graduate schools around the country; it consists of the rational approach of considering the applicant as a whole — not just a litany of scores in a manila folder. This obvious and logical approach calls for examination of the applicants' background, social status, access to educational institutions and opportunities, as well as their activities, scores and intelligence quota.

Graduate schools are, for the most part, not seeking a homogeneous body of students; they are searching for a variety of students whose backgrounds are different and who maintain disparate and varied interests. They are tied together by one common bond: the university has determined, by whatever methods, that thest students are capable of achieving academic success in the immediate environment. This judgement should, quite naturally, take into account obstacles that served to impede the students progress on the educational treadmill.

The admissions policy of the U-Cal-Davis has many problems in its own right. It precludes disadvantaged whites from applying to the "reserved seating" section. One of the great assets of our country is that we have disadvantaged of all races, colors and creeds.

There are those who claim that there is no such concept as reverse discrimination: they claim that discrimination is majority based, that is, it occurs only when perpetuated or practiced by the majority of a culture on a particular minority. Hence, by definition, a minority cannot discriminte against the majority.

Despite the fact that legislatures, when they enacted the 14th amendment, and Civil Rights Acts, probably didn't believe that such a concept was worthy of consideration, to define the concept in such a manner is to badly mangle and contort what has previously been considered precise definition. If one uses the majority-minority concept, then everyone will proudly display their own particular familial ties to some minority group; only the white, male, Anglo-Saxon Protestant will suffer (not that I wouldn't like to see this!).

I believe that the lofty concept of equality should not be tainted by a practice such as is being used at the University of California at Davis Medical School. If the Constitution of the United States is colorblind, and if Justice is blind, than let all be weighed equally, as total human beings; composed of mind, spirit and history. If racial equality is to be achieved, it cannot be done through conscious discriminatory policies. Besides, if schools go entirely on scores, I'll never get into law school.

Drawing the lines at Kent State

Wednesday night's news seemed to bring a compromise to Kent State 1977. Its new president, Golding, proposed naming the gym that will cover the site of the murder of four students, after the four students, the wounded, the National Guardsmen, the townspeople, and the University community. (After the name is put on the building there probably won't be any room for windows or doors).

However, Saturday's bulldozers came with the same intention; to bury "the spirit of Kent and Jackson State". Golding's 12-point proposal is more like a bear trap hidden by pretty flowers and shrubs. Pretty on the outside but deadly if you step inside.

charles bagli

The Kent State Administration is implying that all the May 4th Coalition and the students of Kent want is "recognition" of the tragedy. In view of this they are only too happy to continue to build the gym; name it after all the "victims" (students and Guardsmen alike), put shrubs where the Guardsmen stood and fired, trees where the nine students fell wounded and benches where four died.

When we pull away all the pretty flowers, shrubs and trees though, the sharp, vicious, jaws of the trap are only too apparent.

First of all, what kind of memorial is this gym and assorted fauna? A mixture of sweat sox and death knell. Golding will even personally build some benches for reflection. They want to plow the spirit of Kent State into the ground and then resurrect some drama, tragic for all concerned, gutted of all political content!

When we talk about the spirit of Kent and Jackson State we're talking about students uniting to take a stand against oppression. We're talking about a time of tremendous upheaval and social movements — the Civil Rights movements, Black Liberation, and the anti-war movement. The problem stood out and the people stood up and rocked the country with their struggle against discimination and a war of aggression.

That was the 60's and many things are still the same today. Discrimination with 40 per cent unemployment among Black youth and the notorious Bakke decision; attacks on health care and social services; neutron bommbs and arms races; unemployment racing inflation; all these are still a fact of life under this system in 1977. The profit-hungry system that people began to learn about in the 60's is still here.

We need to draw the lines, and declare the two sides. Kent State 1977 echoes as a clarion call for all the people in this country that are tired of being driven down, pushed around and sold out. TODAY, the spirit of Kent and Jackson State is standing up, uniting, and opposing oppression. It's something to be damned proud of. Our memorial must be more fitting with that spirit and not some empty sweat sox and fauna that takes the heat off of the murderers.

The four students murdered May 4th, 1970 were the victims of the government's response to people's rebellion to their imperialist war. Now they propose that the Guardsmen were also victims May 4, 1970. Hardly. Gov. Rhodes, who compared the student protestors to Nazi "brownshirts and nightriders", was not a victim. The mayor of Kent who declared that protesters should be put down "by any means necessary" is not a victim. The Guardsmen that pulled the triggers and murdered four students and wounded nine, are not victims. They and the class that runs this country, are the perpetrators. A memorial that includes Guardsmen and protestors is a mockery, more deserving of Saturday Night Live or Alice Cooper.

The final sharp teeth of Golding's 12-point proposal-trap are the actual trees and bushes. Now that they've tried to rewrite history, making students and Guardsmen victims, they are continuing to try and change the physical geography of the incident May 4, 1970.

On May 4, 1970 there were only two trees in the National Guardsmen's field of fire. There was a clear line of sight to the parking lot and practice field where the most vocal and militant students stood (more than 200 feet from the Guardsmen). Now numerous trees — planted by the administration — block that original view, so that if you went there today you'd think the Guardsmen fired into the trees and didn't know there were students down in the parking lot or on the practice field. The gym (which will go on top of the area four students were wounded) and Golding's green thumbery would continue to distort that physical layout which gave me a cold chill to see it two weeks ago.

The gym should be built but not on its present site (any of the seven alternative sites would do, including the 17.2 acres they bought to build it on in the first place). Golding should take his "memorial" back to the capitalist's graveyard where he got it. It has no place in our history.

The only ones that will fall into this latest bear trap are the rulers themselves, especially Golding when he debates the May 4th Coalition this Thursday night at Kent State. By the way, this man who proposes a quiet "memorial" for all the "victims" of Kent State also sits on the Board of corporation in South Africa. Will he memorialize the South African Blacks who've died under the brutal system of apartheid to which his corporation quickly rushes in search of greater profits?

The May 4th Coalition and the students of Kent have not let all this go unanswered. They greeted the bulldozers last Saturday. But the time for action is this Saturday, September 24th. The date of the reestablishment of tent city on the site of the murders, and the gym. Students all over the country have been called on to come out to Kent to support the moving of the gym.

Fellow students! The bulldozers are moving on the site where four students were murdered. With this gym they're trying to crush the spirit of Kent and Jackson State. We have to move that gym! We have to preserve that site, as it is, and remember what happened. We have to shine the light on our proud past so that it can illuminate the path to the future.

All out for Kent State September 24.

Unionize now

There is no doubt that the revolutionary college movement of the seventies is student unionization. And just as the revolutionary movements of the sixties concerning civil rights, the war and basic student rights were exercised at UMass, the revolutionary movement of unionization has. In fact, no where else has the issue of unionization been as fully developed as at UMass in the past four years.

But it isn't until now that the call for the formation of a student union at UMass has been so eminent nor the moment so opportune. There is a need for a student union now with faculty collective bargaining. Student input is essential and never before has the organizational body behind such a union formation been so fine to carry out the goal of creating such a body.

lisa melilli

This point was evidenced just yesterday at the Unionization conference held in the campus center, one of the products of the two-month Summit conference on unionization and student government held during the summer.

Never before has a conference educating students about unionization been held nor such an organized effort to contact students about where their concerns lie. The success of the event in which approximately 500 students participated lay in the people behind the event and a turn taken recently in the powers that be.

The Student Organizing Project (SOP) was formed four years ago by the Student Government Association (SGA) to investigate the possibility of unionization when it became evident that the SGA as the governance organ of students had little effect upon the university decision-making process. However, at the inception of SOP in 1973, many SGA members were against the idea of forming a union. A split developed in the Senate. There were the "unionists" and the "conservatives". SOP clearly had to prove itself, but did everything in its power to worsen the situation.

The problem with SOP was with many of its student workers who saw SOP not as an in-house organ of the SGA, but as an adversary group working to antagonize the Senate. They were not working with the Senate to form a union but working against the Senate to destroy it so a union would have to be formed for lack of anything else.

The problem with SOP also lay in the fact that they saw their mission not only in forming a union, but in battling sexism, racism, and a series of other oppressions which made it difficult for students to figure out just exactly what SOP was all about. SOP stretched itself and seemingly minimized the issue of unionization.

SOP also became a "closed clique" encompassing one set of persons — campus radicals out to save the world from capitalism. UMass may have a radical economics department and the reputation of being a progressive university, however most students are not interested in a Marxist revolution particularly at a place where they only intend a four year stay.

But members of the SOP of even two years ago were not interested in who UMass students were, it seemed, for never did they seek out the input of students nor curb their radical approach to attract all students. Members of the SOP thought they had all the answers and anyone with a different answer was wrong, anyone with a not so radical approach was called a reactionary. And most of the people giving a more conservative answer were in the SGA.

Gradually a third party took form in the Senate: those who were for the union formation, but didn't take to the way SOP was going about it.

But SOP activists have one problem inherent with all campus activity activists: lack of time for studies. At the end of spring 1976, the SOP core was members who were bounced out of UMass.

A quiet period followed in which many (including myself) were wondering if SOP still existed and exactly what they were doing with their $60,000 annual budget. During this period SOP was researching, looking at the situation of the past three years, at students, at the needs of the community. The reflecting period ended this summer with the Summit talks, SOP finaly exposing themselves and their ideas to the community.

Evidently SOP made one realization, that they must work with and through the Senate. Hence comes the SGA reorganization plan into dorm and academic councils, the same inherent organization as planned for the student union when SOP was first formed. The logic of this approach is beautiful. Obviously, a union should grow out of SGA in philosophical terms, so what better method than to put this philosophy into tangible action?

The SOP is also only focusing its attention on one issue — unionization. Therefore they will expend their energy on only one area.

And the SOP is no longer a "closed clique" like in the old days. They are actively seeking the input of students. They say this input is essential.

At the same time, SOP is not lowering itself completely to the commonality of all students but is actively educating students to understand the concept of unionization and thus to be better participants in the union's inception and development.

SOP has grown from a select group to one which truly understands what a union is — a group serving a group. And after four years and approximately $240,000 of the Student Activities Tax Fund poured into SOP over the past four years, isn't it about time SOP finally made this realization?

Disposal criticized

To the Editor:

We were outraged to read of the manner in which the university disposed of the over-sized refrigerators. This was a terrible example of waste. For those who missed the article concerning this matter, the refrigerators that were found to violate the University's standards were dumped. Didn't anybody in Whitmore care enough to suggest giving them away? Don't our administrators realize how many needy people are simply unable to afford a refrigerator? I am sure that the local welfare office would have been more than happy to utilize the refrigerators in a much more worthwhile manner. We most certainly hope that the next time the University decides to remove refrigerators somebody in Whitmore will use his-her head and do some good for those who may be less fortunate than they. It would not take much more than a few simple phone calls.

This was just another blatant example of how the United States assumes that it is a country of unlimited resources that it can afford to waste indefinitely; yet this doesn't excuse any individual institution to follow the assumption of this "right."

To the Editor:

American Cup? The headline is indicative of the amount of research Megan O'Reilly did for the article on the America's Cup. [Fri. 9-16] There are a few glaring errors any sportsperson would recognize.

1— The second race of this match racing final was abandoned as the first place yacht did not finish the 24.3 mile course within the 5.5 hour time limit [though Courageous was 5.5 minutes ahead at the time].

2— America was a yacht that was constructed specifically for races in England to try to win her builders, speculating gamblers, some hard cash. It was later that she became a runner.

3— Courageous is not the second yacht to defend the Cup twice; think back to 1967 and 1970, the yacht was Intrepid, how soon we forget the most innovative 12-meter ever designed.

4— Great Britain's challenge was dropped early in the campaign before a yacht could be constructed. Australia was required to sail against yachts from Sweden [Sverige], France [France I] and Australia [Gretal II]. Courageous had to fend off her stable-mate Independence, designed and skippered by Ted Hood [74's winner in Courageous] and Enterprise skippered by Lowell North.

5— Finally the last race isn't likely until today or Tuesday as either yacht can request a lay day. So let's get it together, research isn't that hard.

A serious issue

To the Editor:

The selection of the next President of this University is a decision with far-reaching implications for the students, faculty, and staff and for all of public higher education in the Commonwealth.

While the story on page 3 of Thursday's Collegian — concerning the placement of an advertisement for the position of President — was clearly intended to be humorous, it could have a detrimental effect on the search process.

I placed the advertisement in the Collegian on the direct instruction of the Search Committee, acting through its Senior Consultant. Presumably, the Committee gave that instruction in the belief that students at the Amherst campus, as well as other Collegian readers, could provide nominations and recommendations valuable to the Committee. Neither I, nor any other member of the staff of this office, have any direct connection with the Committee's work.

I hope very much that despite the Collegian's attempt at humor, members of the Amherst campus community will take most seriously their opportunity to influence the selection of the next President of the University.

Williams kicks UMass in pre-season finale

By JACK ATKINSON
Collegian Staff

Despite a 2-0 final loss to a good Williams team, the UMass soccer team had an unquestionably fine preseason. The bottom line stood at three wins and two defeats. The first of those losses came at the hands of a Brown team which many feel is the best in New England, along with UMass' big rival UConn. The Williams club which beat the Minutemen on Saturday had an impressive 7-4-1 ledger for '76.

At Williams, the Minutemen were somewhat doomed right from the start. They were missing, for various reasons, defender Ed Niemiec and forwards Joel Mascolo and Tommy Koutsoukos. Midway through the first half, midfielder Willy Sorensen suffered a knee injury. His status for the opener on Wednesday against Bridgeport is questionable.

The first half was scoreless. This was due partially to offensive disorganization and defensive excellence. The ball, for a good part of the half, was constantly in the UMass zone. The defense, minus co-capt. Niemiec, continuously shut the door on the Williams attackers. Co-capt. Larry Aronson had a particularly strong half. Mike St. Martin, converted to defense this year, also played well. Mark Hodgdon, in goal, rose to the task when tested.

The problem, though, was offense.

"We were playing one sophomore and the rest freshmen on the front line," said coach Cap Kidd afterwards. "Nothing like education through experience, is there? Another reason is, since it was only a scrimmage, players were constantly being shuffled in and out. It's tough to get your offense together under those circumstances. Hopefully there will be more punch with the return of the regular forwards."

Preston Kise and Will Temby split the goaltending chores in the second half. Both Williams goals were scored in rapid succession early in the half off Kise. The second seemed as though it caught the UMass defense off guard, the only really serious lapse it had all afternoon. Afterwards the defense settled down and held the Williams shooters off. Again Aronson and St. Martin were effective. Greg Omasta also played a solid game.

Offensively, UMass was frustrated, to say the least. Mike Shannon and Ion Bogdaneris were continuously thwarted by the Williams defense.

"I'm not disappointed (by the loss)," said Kidd. "We should have had three or four goals. It was the same against RPI (a 2-1 victory).

"We were out toughed. There was a lot of nacking out there. Since they were operating with only one ref, there were a lot of missed calls. Towards the end, it was getting to be like a wrestling match."

The preseason, which began with double and triple sessions back on August 26, comes to a close with Tuesday's practice session. The regular season begins on Wednesday night in Bridgeport.

Kidd, his assistant coach Joel Dryer, and all of the Minuteman soccer team look to the '77 season as its most successful. Judging by the preseason, it should prove to be a very successful indeed.

Pats eke out win over KC

FOXBORO, Mass. [AP] — A third-period 11-yard touchdown run by reserve fullback Jess Phillips and two earlier scores by wide receiver Darryl Stingley gave the New England Patriots a hard-earned 21-17 victory over the underdog Kansas City Chiefs yesterday in the teams' National Football League opener.

Chief's fullback MacArthur Lane scored from the one and rookie running back Tony Reed scored on a ten-yard sweep in the first 11 minutes of the game.

Reed's touchdown had come after linebacker Jim Lynch picked off a Steve Grogan pass at the Patriots' 19-yard line.

But with 52 seconds lift in the period, Stingley, celebrating his 26th birthday, scored from 34 yards on a reverse.

With a minute and eight seconds left in the first half, Grogan connected with Stingley for a 21-yard touchdown pass to tie the game after the Patriots' Pete Barnes had scooped up a fumble by quarterback Mike Livingston, who had been sacked by safety Tim Fox at the Chiefs' 42-yard line.

The Patriots' winning drive late in the third period came on seven plays covering 59 yards capped by Phillips' score from the 11-yard line.

Phillips had replaced fullback Sam Cunningham two plays earlier when Cunningham was slightly injured. He returned later.

Kansas City did not score after the first period except for a 22-yard fourth period field goal by Jan Stenerud.

The game also turned bitter later in the fourth period when Patriots' tight end Russ Francis was ejected for fighting with Lynch. On the same play, Francis had been called for illegal motion, nullifying a 43-yard run by Cunningham.

Duffers seek revenge in Yan Con tourney

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's golf team, complete with a new coach and a new look. travels to familiar Stowe Acres Country Club this afternoon in hopes of regaining the Yankee Conference title it lost there a year ago to UConn.

The team's new coach is Ed Vlach, who takes over a squad devoid of seniors and marked by youth, inexperience and uncertainty.

The team is led by co-captains Flynt Lincoln and Jimmy McDermott, who both had excellent spring seasons. But behind the two co-captains are several young, talented, promising but as yet untried players.

From that store of young players Vlach has chosen juniors Jeff Orr and Bill Campbell, sophomores Vic Lahtiene and Mark Duggin, and freshman John Lien to make the trip to Stowe with Lincoln and McDermott.

Vlach drew his line up from performances in early season qualifying and the scores from a practice match last Friday against Amherst College, which UMass won by some 16 strokes.

Vlach said that his lineup is figured from day-to-day, and could change considerably from match to match.

"The players have been told that any member of the team can challenge anyone else to try to take his position in the lineup," Vlach said.

Vlach added that he has confidence in his young crew but admitted that he really had no idea of what to expect this afternoon. "I'm still very uncertain of just what this team can do," Vlach mused.

He did say that he considered Lincoln and McDermott the only solid players he had, and that they alone could not make a winning golf team. "It will all depend on just how well our young players are able to come through," Vlach noted.

The scoring in today's match will be figured the best five of seven scores, with the main competition expected to come from New Hampshire, Rhode Island and UConn, which last year ended the Minutemen's three-year reign as Yan Con champs.

Schubert stars

CHICAGO [AP] — Ex-UMass star Steve Schubert returned a punt 70 yards for a touchdown and Walter Payton rolled up 160 yards rushing and scored twice to lead the Chicago Bears to a 30-20 victory yesterday over the Detroit Lions in their National Football League opener.

Schubert's punt return came in the second quarter to break a 7-7 tie and the Bears never trailed again. The Lions, who fell behind 27-7 at one point, came within seven points before Bob Thomas sealed the victory with a 35-yard field goal.

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

From UNITED Feature Syndicate
For release WEEK of Sept. 19, 1977

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 19 — Born today, you are inclined to put too much of yourself into a single project while other projects are allowed to go by the board. This level of commitment is admirable if you have little to do but unsatisfactory if you wish to accomplish a great deal. Beware of dissapointing yourself and those who love you. You are not a conservative individual; yet you often give that impression because of your lack of enthusiasm for new enterprises.

You are intelligent and sensitive, rarely making mistakes involving accuracy or know-how. But, it is difficult for you to tell the difference between projects which will be uplifting and those which won't. Because you insist upon staying with an endeavor until the bitter end, you are often bored with the routine that is established as a result.

You possess courage and at times a fiery nature. You have tremendous inner warmth and can be counted among the best of friends. Not overly concerned with money, you emphasize such soul-satisfying elements as freedom, integrity, and the development of the spirit in your goals.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide. TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 20

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) — Don't rely on one who has proved inadequate to the situation in the past. Seek out a "new broom" to sweep clean with.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) — Courtesy will open more doors for you than you think. Try approaching a higher-up with a concise plan for a change.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.22) — Refuse to take action against those who have caused you difficulties. Revenge will only cause you personal anguish.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) — An alert and thoughtful response to a call for help should prove both welcome and rewarding to all concerned.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) — Training of a new faculty opens new fields of interest for you. Use the day wisely; reconsider change.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) — A tendency toward bossy behavior may cause difficulties with old friends. Think before speaking.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) — You should be able to assume the leadership necessary for getting ahead with the present phase of your work. Morning hours may be difficult.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) — Shyness in the face of new experience may cause you to lose out on what could have been a fascinating adventure.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) — This is a day when neatness counts. A disorderly approach to problems early in the day may create confusion at evening.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) — Keep general efficiency high by going by the rules. This gives best results.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) — Take care that you don't unwittingly spread malicious gossip. Check out all rumors.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) — Because you know how to interest a member of the opposite sex, you may end the day with an embarrassment of riches.

Sox overpower Birds; Yankees outslug Tigers

BALTIMORE [UPI] — Designated hitter Ted Cox, making his major league debut, spoiled "Thanks, Brooks Robinson Day" by ripping three singles and a double and scoring three runs yesterday which helped the Boston Red Sox salvage the last of a three-game series with a 10-4 victory over the Baltimore Orioles.

A record crowd of 51,789 paid tribute to Robinson, Baltimore's all-time third base great, then watched disappointedly as the Orioles dropped to 3½ games behind the New York Yankees in the American League East.

Cox, recalled from the minors earlier this week, scored after a walk in the third, singled and scored in the fifth, and came home after a double in the ninth as Boston overcame an early 4-2 deficit to move within one game of second place Baltimore in the American League East.

DETROIT [UPI] — Dave Kingman and Reggie Jackson each hit homers in combining to drive home five runs and southpaw Ron Guidry won his seventh straight game yesterday to give the New York Yankees a 6-5 victory over the Detroit Tigers.

New York has now won five out of six games with the sweep of the three-game series with Detroit to maintain its edge over second-place Baltimore.

Jackson hit his 30th home run and reached the 100 mark in RBI for the season with a three-run blast in the third inning which followed a walk to Graig Nettles and a single by Thurman Munson.

Kingman has played just two games since becoming a Yankee but has doubled his AL home run count to four after following a leadoff walk to Lou Piniella in the second inning with a towering shot into the left field seats.

the top five, but still, its amazing how they've taken to the collegiate level of competition.

"Sue Swartz is such a tough kid. She's very consistent, an outstanding runner who is always in the top five, no matter what the competition.

"Beth (Collins) looked great too. She was injured last year, but has come back and is running strong again.

Lettis was also surprised at the ability shown by UConn's mystery runner, Kelly Nelson.

"I don't think she ran at Penn State," she said, "but she certainly could have. She's a fine runner."

With such a convincing win, UMass has served notice to the rest of New England that it is once again one of the top contenders for the NE title.

With its convincing win, UMass has once again stated its claim as one of the foremost contenders for the NE title. Several teams have strengthened themselves, but not many NE schools can boast the depth at quality displayed by the Minutewomen.

of consecutive years without allowing Maine a touchdown may finally come to an end. But as Cosgrove rolled out on third down, Minuteman defensive and John D'Amato caught him from behind, jarring the ball loose into fellow defender Todd Holt's hands and the scoreless skein remained intact.

UMASS FUMBLINGS — Coleman, the game's leading rusher, ended with 127 yards gained. His starting backfield mate Hank Sareault finished with 81 yards gained in 14 carries ... Punter John Romboli hit for an average of 36 yards, this figure being deceptive since he booted a perfect coffin corner kick in the second quarter, which left Maine on its own three yard line .

Upsets highlight NFL as campaign begins

Opening day action in the National Football League yesterday was marked by three major upsets and a number of surprises.

Los Angeles, Cincinnati and Washington, all prime candidates for the playoffs this season, all fell as the NFL opened its 58th season.

Scott Hunter, filling in at quarterback because Steve Bartkowski had a knee operation earlier in the week, completed 10-of-17 passes and sneaked across for the game-clinching touchdown to lead Atlanta to a season-opening 17-6 upset of Los Angeles.

Hunter, scheduled to be the backup before Bartkowski reinjured his right knee in the last exhibition game, directed a 76-yard Atlanta drive early in the third period, capped by his own 1-yard scoring run to give the Falcons their second TD.

The Rams, favored by two touchdowns, got their only points with 5:42 left in the first quarter when Joe Namath threw a 27-yard TD pass to Harold Jackson. Namath, making his first regular season start for the Rams after 13 seasons with the New York Jets, threw a flurry of passes in the final period in a desperate effort to avert the upset. The Falcons stopped his best bid when Ray Easterling recovered a fumble at the Atlanta 13.

Larry Poole ran 12 yards for a TD and Don Cockroft kicked field goals of 41 and 25 yards to send the Cleveland Browns to a 13-3 upset of the Cincinnati Bengals. The highly favored Bengals, losing the first home opener in the club's 10-year history, could manage only a 25-yard field goal by Chris Bahr.

The UMass women's tennis team opens its season today with a 3 p.m. match against Springfield on the NOPE courts.

This afternoon's match marks the beginning of five weeks of competition for the 14-member UMass team, which is coached by Bill Yu, a '77 UMass graduate.

Although Springfield traditionally fields good teams, Yu is "very confident" about today's match, as wll as the rest of the 10-game season.

Yu said the team's chances are good this year because the Minutewomen have an "excellent number one player plus depth."

The team's number one player is a freshman, Cathy Maher. Playing in the second and third singles spots today will be sophomore Carolyn Mooney and another freshman, Lee Robb.

Seniors Dawn Minaai and Jennifer Ranz will make up the first doubles team.

After today's action, UMass will take on Smith Wednesday. That match, along with the Sept. 24 match against Tufts and the Sept. 29 match against Mt. Holyoke, should be the toughest for the team, according to Yu.

The season will climax with the MAIAW tournament on Oct. 15-16 and the New Englands on Oct. 21-22. Last year the team had four players in the New Englands, all of whom are back on the team this season. They are Minaai, Mooney, Cathy Sullivan, and Martha Awiszus.

Other members of the team include sisters Jane and Chris Carlson, Debbie Halperin, Sherry Lurie, Jackie Isgur, Karen Holt, and Fran Meyers.

UM bowls over Bears

RUNAWAY — In this sequence, UMass fullback Henry Sareault blasts through a big hole opened up in Maine's defensive line (l), avoids a last-ditch tackle attempt (c), and races into the clear (r) during the Minutemen's big win. (Staff photos by Dave Rodgers)

Collegian Staff

Senior Bill Coleman rushed for two first half touchdowns and Chuck Balboni and Dave Douvadjian added two more in the second half to lead the UMass football team to a convincing 28-0 grounding of Maine in both teams' Yankee Conference opener.

The victory, before 8400 at Alumni Stadium, was the 12th straight for the Minutemen over the Black Bears. The shutout also kept another streak going, for it marked the eighth season in a row that the Black Bears have failed to cross the goal line against the Minutemen.

To only mention the names of those who scored the touchdowns would be an injustice because this was a true team effort — sparked by the play of the often unheralded offensive and defensive lines. The Minutemen front lines opened gaping holes on offense, as UMass gained 332 yards on the ground, while the defense shut off the Maine running attack, limiting the Black Bears to a net yardage of zero in 30 attempts. That's right — zero!

The play of Ross Schubarth, Gerry Greene, Mike McLaughlin, Bruce Kimball, and Jim Penta (recipient of the game ball) on offense, and the stubborness of John Willis, Phil Puopolo, Joe McLaughlin and Dave Bemis on defense was unquestionably the key to the UMass win.

"We felt all along that our strength would be in the line, both offense and defense," said UMass coach Dick MacPherson. "We feel we're good in other areas, but we have the ability to be great there. Those kids worked hard to add some strength this winter, and it really paid off today."

With the offensive line shooting off the snap of the ball, the Minutemen were able to sustain a steady, grinding ball control offense. UMass wasted little time establishing the tempo of the game.

The Minutemen marched 60 yards in 11 plays — all on the ground — off the opening kickoff to take an early 7-0 lead. Coleman completed the drive with a one-yard plunge into the end zone, but the big play in the series was a fourth down keeper by sophomore quarterback Mike McEvilly to sustain the march.

"That was an important series," commented MacPherson. "It was important to set the tempo early, especially since our missed opportunities hurt so badly last week. We did fumble on our second series, but that didn't hurt, where it could have been costly if we fumbled from the outset."

The Minutemen defense held the Black Bears in check and the offense went back to work late in the second quarter. With the help of a Maine face-mask penalty, the Minutemen drove 49 yards in just five plays for a score. The series ended on an 11-yard scamper by Coleman, and the Minutemen had themselves a 14-0 lead at the half.

UMass struck again midway through the third quarter when it put together its longest series of the ballgame. McEvilly and company romped 70 yards in 13 plays with Balboni going over from the two. McEvilly hit receiver John Gladchuk on a big third down play midway through the march, and may have caught Maine's underworked secondary napping.

McEvilly, who was three for nine in the passing department and received his plays from the sideline, was not disappointed with the coach's reluctance to take to the air.

"Sure it's fun to pass, but if you don't have to there's no sense doing it," said McEvilly.

The final UMass tally came with less than two minutes remaining in the game. The Minutemen went 50 yards on eight plays with Douvadjian, who woke up a rather dullened crowd with his slashing running style, carrying it over from the two.

For the Black Bears it was a long afternoon, and early into the fourth quarter their frustrations reached a climax. Maine's QB Jack Cosgrove, who ended the afternoon with a passing log of 12-20 for 15 yards, found tight end Bob Murphy for a 37-yard gain and a first down and goal situation. After two Maine running plays it was third and five and it appeared that UMass's streak

Rushing, line play key Minutemen's victory

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

The final rushing statistics of UMass's 28-0 win over Maine Saturday gave the Minutemen an overwhelming 347-0 edge. Individually, the UMass leaders were Bill Coleman - 127 yards, Henry Sareault - 81, and Dave Douvadjian - 60. But as the saying goes, "the battle was won in the trenches," both offensively and defensively.

The impression produced from this game is this: Last year, UMass was maligned offensively for failing to produce offensive drives. Maybe a couple of runs, a pass, and then a punt. But in Saturday's game against the Bears, time after time UMass had long-lasting offensive series start from deep in its own territory and ended up in either the Bears' end zone or close to it.

Credit should go to the six running backs Coach Dick MacPherson used throughout the game. Besides the three previously mentioned, Dennis Dent, John Romboli, and Chuck Balboni were used as various running positions. All six picked up a combined total of 347 yards.

But without the offensive line, nothing could have been accomplished. Gaping holes were given to the backs. Not just little openings for one or two yards but six, seven and even ten yard gains were produced by the five offensive linemen and either two tight ends and two wide receivers.

Guard Russ Cooke was missing from action due to a slight concussion, but that didn't stop the cohesion of the line as Ross Schubarth, Gerry Greene, Mike McLaughlin, Bruce Kimball and Jim Penta and either Kevin Cummings or Moses Williams were continuously driving their opponents several yards back from the line of scrimmage.

"There is no question the strength of our team is the size and strength of our offensive line. It's a credit to all the athletes' winter and summer conditioning and willingness to work as a unit," MacPherson said.

Defensively, the front line of John Willis, Phil Puopolo, Dave Bemis, and John McDonald was outstanding. Out of a total 12 Maine first downs, only one was produced by rushing. In 30 attempts, Maine combined for a net 0 ground yards.

"Defensively our linemen contained the run and it was exactly what we wanted. Our linebackers (Steve Telander, Peter McCarty, and Joe McLaughlin) were all over the field and our secondary (Kevin Sullivan, Steve McInnes, John Beerworth, and Todd Holt) did a good job containing the sweep," MacPherson added.

Offensively Maine outaerialed the Minutemen, 115-45, in net passing yards and also in passing first downs.

"We felt that Mike McEvilly (subbing for the injured Mike Fallon) would have more confidence in handling the running game. That was why his play calling was conservative. He was determined not to make mistakes and he kept his poise and did just that. As time goes along his passing confidence will improve," said MacPherson.

Quarterback McEvilly completed three of nine passes for 45 yards. His longest aerial was a 20-yard pass to receiver Kevin O'Connor for an important first down.

Coverage on specialty teams was noted by MacPherson for being "solid." UMass allowed only two total yards on punt returns and 27 yards in kick returns.

"Our confidence and enthusiasm were just great today," said a happy tight end Moses Williams after the game. "Everybody was pulling for each other. We knew that our loss to Army the week before was a mental defeat. There is no way we can outrush Army by almost a margin of 2-1 and have lost the game. Today we proved we can play and play without mistakes."

"Coming out of the Army game, we knew we had to eliminate the mental mistakes or know that if we make them, forget about them and keep plugging away but not just dwelling on that one mistake. Against Maine today, our confidence just oozed," said MacPherson.

Harriers tame Huskies; women romp in rain

By BRAD RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's cross country team had a rainy but relaxed time of it Saturday as it easily defeated UConn, 19-44.

Jane Welzel held off an early and surprising challenge from UConn's Kelly Nelson and finished first in 20:04.7 over the 3.2 mile course.

Nelson, a transfer from Penn State, was second in 20:43.0 after losing about 30 seconds over the last mile to the fast-finishing Welzel.

The next six places held a couple of pleasant surprises along with another verse in UMass' song of success, entitled, "Running With the Pack."

The surprises were in the persons of Tina Francario and Priscilla Wilson, two precocious newcomers, who finished third (20:54) and fourth (21:11), respectively.

The next four spots also saw red-clad harriers come home, as Sue Swartz, Barb Callanan, Beth Collins and Debbie Farmer combined to lock up the meet.

Frosh Linda Welzel (yes, Jane's sister) ran well in her first collegiate varsity race and ended up tenth.

Laurie Wolf, Bonnie Shulman and Kathy Kirkham notched 12th-14th places for the Minutewomen, as UConn was only able to put three runners into the top 14.

Coach Charlotte Lettis was pleased with her team's performance, and was "especially impressed by the freshwomen."

"They took control from the start and ran easily — well within themselves," she said. "They were a little jittery at the start, but they had calmed down by the first mile, where they were smiling and talking to me."

The biggest problem the UMass women had was staying on course, as the rain which didn't clear until race's end, had washed the lime markings away. The rain also made the footing treacherous and slowed the times somewhat.

"I think the course was a little longer than 3.2", explained Lettis. "I'm glad this first meet was slow, though, because now we can work up from here."

UConn was hurt at the front of the pack by the loss of Lavinia Muncy, last year's New England champ, who is injured and who will not be able to compete until indoor track season.

To further demonstrate its dominance of the meet, UMass kept three of its top runners at home, as Johara Chapman has a sore knee, Anne Bradshaw is sick and Eileen Everett hasn't had a physical.

Lettis expects to have Chapman, Bradshaw and Everett back for the team's next meet, on Friday at Williams College.

Lettis had nothing but praise for her women.

"Jane is in even better shape than last year," she said. "She ran easily and went up 'Heart Attack Hill' without any trouble. She ran a good last mile, which I was glad to see.

"The two freshwomen have looked good in practices, and I expected them to crack

MacKimmie voting called illegal

By LAWRENCE UCHMANOWICZ
Collegian Staff

Paul Yanowitch, student attorney general for the Student Government Association yesterday reported that Mackimmie House in Southwest has been illegally basing voting procedures for their house council on race and sex.

"Basing the right to vote on race or sex is illegal," he said.

The present method for electing house council in Mackimmie House is based on 16 members; eight white and eight third world students. This is further broken down, among the white seats, into four female and four male seats. The third world seats are not based on sex as there is an overwhelming majority of males among third world students there, according to Bruce Rose, Mackimmie head of residence.

"This is in direct violation of the one man — one vote principle of government," Yanowitch said. "The constitution of Mackimmie House has not been revised since 1971 and is outdated."

Rose, yesterday answered this argument saying "if all that stands in our way at the present time is simply having someone retype our constitution, we will do that.

"Our goals," he said, "are to develop a community that is sensitive to itself; a community that can bring about awareness on such subjects as racism, sexism, and gay rights. We can't be traditional and do this.

"We aren't trying to change things overnight," Rose said, "but if we can just open people's minds to the problems we face we will consider our system successful."

"This is the first we have heard of this system," Yanowitch said, "it can possibly be done legally, but I tend to believe that the system at Mackimmie does not meet the guidelines of the SGA constitution."

At present, according to Rose, the breakdown of third world to no-third world students in Mackimmie House is approximately 20 per cent to 80 per cent, respectively.

"If the SGA guidelines were followed," said Rose, "then the white males would have the overwhelming majority in our house, and with that we wouldn't be able to have the success with the programs that we have had in the past."

"The R.A.'s (resident assistants) have a complete set of goals that are reviewed weekly, and they have a high success rate," Rose said.

"I am hoping for adequate input from all sides in this issue," Yanowitch said, "but unfortunately I have to go with the law.

"There are other ways to do the same thing legally," Yanowitch added, "they could form a committee to steer the problems of the house, or they could just let each floor have two representatives and suggest to the students that one of them be a minority."

"I hope Paul has the respect to communicate with us on this issue," said Rose. "I'm sure that we can reach an agreement among ourselves."

Abortion funding revived

BOSTON [UPI] — The issue of state funding of abortions died yesterday in the State Senate, but was revived several hours later by the House.

The Senate upheld Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' veto of a bill to allow the use of Medicaid funds for abortion only to save the life of the woman.

The vote was 22-17 to override four votes short of the two-thirds needed.

The Senate then voted to reconsider its vote, but again failed by a vote of 22-16 to override.

Less than three hours later, the House voted 141-86 to adopt an amendment to the fiscal 1978 supplemental budget which would ban the use of all state funds for abortions except to save the life of the woman.

The amendment would affect state employes and legislative employes covered by health insurance plans paid up to 90 per cent by the state as well as Medicaid recipients.

The Alliance, a state employes union, has

Senate split on Lance

WASHINGTON [AP] — Senate committee members, concluding two weeks of hearings into Budget Director Bert Lance's financial dealings, disagreed yesterday whether Lance misled them during confirmation hearings nine months ago.

Sen. Charles H. Percy, R-Ill., said the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee never would have confirmed Lance if it had known about his bank overdrafts, bank loans, use of aircraft and other transactions. He called on Lance to resign.

But Sen. Thomas F. Eagleton, D-Mo., said "It's a little bit late in September to say, 'My Lord, if I had known of the overdrafts, I wouldn't have voted for Bert Lance in January'."

President Carter and Lance met privately yesterday. White House Press Secretary Jody Powell disclosed the meeting, but said he had no information on what was discussed or who requested the session.

In a related development, Deputy Atty. Gen. Peter Flaherty appointed three Justice Department officials to review the allegations against Lance and "make preliminary recomendations as to what, if any, further steps by the Justice Department are appropriate."

The Justice Department review will be conducted by Cono Namorato, chief of criminal prosecutions on tax cases; Edward Barnes, a criminal division attorney and John Kenney, an assistant U.S. attorney in New York who primarily handles banking and securities cases.

"I have directed this review team to go over all files, reports, records and other material in the various Justice Department offices" to arrive at their recommendations, Flaherty said.

The Comptroller of the Currency had referred material concerning Lance's allegedly improper use of bank-owned airplanes to the department to consider whether criminal charges should be brought.

The Senate committee yesterday took the unusual step of calling four of its employes to explain what Lance told them before he was confirmed on January 18.

Kent St. breaks ground

KENT, Ohio [UPI] — Giant earth movers yesterday began breaking ground for a gymnasium annex at Kent State University near the site where four students were shot to death during an anti-war demonstration seven years ago.

Opponents of the gym heckled police and hurled bags of red dye at construction workers.

Only one of the three bags of dye broke and the other two were dumped into a hole where some trees taken from the construction site were to be transplanted.

Between 25 and 50 demonstrators, members of the "May 4th Coalition", held a rally near the site and then moved toward the area chanting, "Cops off campus, move the gym."

They were pushed back briefly by Kent State security police who cordoned off the area.

The first piece of machinery was moved onto the construction site early yesterday with an escort of six university campus police cars.

One demonstrator stood briefly in front of the truck carrying the machinery but he was moved by police without incident.

Portage County Sheriff Al McKettrick said, "this is all I really expected" in regard to the number of demonstrators.

"We weren't expecting any trouble, and as is quite evident, we did everything possible to avoid a confrontation," said McKettrick.

"It is obvious the protesters are meeting with some resentment from students at the university now that classes have resumed," he said. "Some of the students are bad mouthing the protesters and it is obvious they don't like it."

"The moving of the gym site would cost millions of dollars more which would result in higher tuition, higher room and board and more financial difficulties for the people attending the university," said sophomore Karen Heckelmoser from Valley View, Ohio.

"The Coalition has tried to do some good in the courts but it has failed there and elsewhere.

"The Coalition is giving the university a bad name," she said.

Sophomore Paul J. Palsa, from Pittsburgh, said the majority of the students at Kent State have suffered because of a "small, selfish minority".

"I'm aware that the vast majority of this school is turned off, fed up and tired," said Palsa.

Archives: storehouse of past

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

Want to know what the University was like last year? Fifty years ago? The day it began? Then visit the University Archives on the 25th floor of the library and let Archivist Katherine Emerson guide you on your journey into the past, daily, 8:30 to 5:00.

The University archives contains all the records and publications by and about the university throughout its history. This includes annual reports, complete files on catalogues and course listings.

Emerson said the archives also contains every issue of the Collegian that has ever been published, including when it was first called Aggie Life from 1890-1901, and the college Signal from 1901 to 1914. These are available in most additions in both bound volumes and on microfilm. Loose copies are available from years since 1971.

Emerson boasts that archives contain almost all masters and doctoral theses submitted to the University for awarded degrees.

As she pointed to the theses, she gave a graphic demonstration on how the University has grown.

"From 1911 to 1962 there are only six - and - one - half shelves donated to these theses but there are over 98 devoted to them from 1962 to 1977," Emerson said.

As well as senior honors theses, archives also contains collections of papers from people who have been administrators, officials and faculty members here.

For people not directly interested in UMass history, the archives contain collections not relating to the University, such as the W.E.B. DuBois collection, the poems of Robert Francis, a well known Amherst poet, and the "Linguistic Atlas of New England", which are worksheets that show pronunciation and usage of the English language in different parts of New England.

"There is also a file on every University president, but there isn't one on all of the faculty," Emerson said. "We do have faculty files up to the 1950's but then it was dropped due to the expansion of the University's faculty. I would like to have many more faculty materials in the archives," she said.

Besides written material, archives has tape recorded radio shows of the faculty literary society which met during the fifties.

There are two series; one and a half-hour poetry show with 15 New England poets reading and discussing their material including Archibald Macleish, E.E. Cummings and Robert Frost.

The other features an hour series of authors and critics. Some writers such as John Steinbeck, William Faulkner and Robert Penn Warren read their own works. Copies may be taken out from the audio visual department.

Women's health info essential

By JULIE MELROSE
Collegian Staff

Editor's Note: This is the first in a weekly series of articles on women's health care by Julie Melrose, a University health aide.

In a land where the media have yet to say just exactly where on the female body a Tampax is supposed to go, women's health care information can be hard to find.

It's either locked in the closet with pornography or locked in the gynecologist's office with the professional journals. Either way, it remains largely inaccessible to the majority of American women.

Women are taught, from an early age, that their bodies and bodily functions are cause for embarassment and should not be discussed.... not even amongst themselves.

They are told that the only people qualified to deal with health problems specific to women are gynecologists, 95 per cent of whom are men. All women have to do is simply place themselves in their doctors' competent hands and health needs will be met.

These are some of the things that have happened to women who have placed themselves in those hands:

They have undergone hysterectomies (surgical removal of the uterus) which were not medically indicated. According to Our Bodies, Ourselves, a book written by the Boston Women's Health Book Collective (Simon and Schuster, 1975), recent studies estimate that close to 50 per cent of these major surgeries performed in recent years could have been avoided.

They have been given inadequately tested contraceptive drugs and devices which were later found to be dangerous. These were removed from the market after stock then on the shelves was distributed.

They have been told, upon complaining of severe menstrual discomfort, that cramps are imaginary or that they will disappear "after you have your first baby". Drugs helpful in relieving such discomfort have been removed from the market due to reported abuse while other, no less potentially dangerous drugs, have remained available.

They have been subject, following rape experiences, to such insensitivity on the part of physicians that some women have reported the medical examination to be as humiliating an experience as the rape itself.

They have been given a drug, diethylstilbestrol (DES), which supposedly prevents miscarriages, though it was already known to be ineffective at the time of prescription. As a result of this, several hundred young women whose mothers took the drug now suffer from vaginal cancer, virtually unknown in women under 50 prior to the use of DES.

They have routinely gone through the often devastating experience of having entire breasts removed because of cancer. Yet, according to Ellen Frankfort in Vaginal Politics, (Bantam, 1973) and Our Bodies, Ourselves, it has yet to be proven that radical mastectomy is any more effective than less drastic treatments for breast cancer.

They have been sterilized against their will. Poor women have often been duped into consenting to surgery and used as "practice cases" in teaching hospitals.

The list of atrocities resulting from poor quality women's health care goes on.

The past decade has seen a movement among women to reclaim the knowledge and care of their bodies from the male-dominated medical profession. Female nurse-practitioners now perform many gynecological procedures traditionally done by doctors.

Self-help workshops, in which women learn about their bodies and are taught to recognize the symptoms of many common health problems are taking place all over the country.

It is not enough to make new resources and facilities available to women. Our attitudes must also change, if women are to use these things comfortably.

A lifetime of negative messages about female bodies has left American women embarrassed to seek the medical help they need.

Many doctors believe that if every woman of menstrual age or above had a Pap test done every six months, cervical cancer could be totally eliminated in this country. Our Bodies, Ourselves reports that currently, one woman in 200 dies of the disease. That gives us some idea of the number of women not receiving adequate health care.

Whether we like it or not, medicine is a business in this country. The more informed women are as consumers, the more likely they are to receive the care they deserve.

The majority of unnecessary hysterectomies are performed by physicians in private practice who have a great deal to gain by recommending such costly operations.

Women's ignorance about their own bodies leaves them prey to such profiteers.

Women have a right to good medical care. They have a right to visit a doctor without fear of negligence or sexual mutilation. But those abuses won't end as long as the "medical mystique" is allowed to continue. Women must take doctors down from the pedestals and assume responsibility for their own health care.

Being informed is the first step.

Church saved from destruction by $1 sale

WASHINGTON, Mass. [UPI] — Church officials have decided to turn a 78-year-old Episcopal chapel over to residents of this Berkshire County town for $1 instead of razing the stone structure.

Church officials approved the proposal last week and town officials yesterday said they expected the agreement to be approved by Washington residents.

"We hope we can get everything squared away and have the chapel turned over to the town by the end of October," selectman Henry MacLaren said.

Both sides said their attorneys would meet soon to work out a deed agreement for St. Andrew's Chapel. There were loud protests from Washington residents when church officials earlier proposed tearing the chapel down.

About half of the town's 400 residents, including folk singer Arlo Guthrie, gathered at the chapel in July to protest the proposed destruction.

Western Massachusetts Episcopal Diocese Bishop Alexander D. Stewart yesterday said the church changed its plans for the chapel "in view of the large number of people who showed so much interest in the chapel."

Stewart, who had originally called for destruction of the building so that it could go to its "final reward," proposed the new agreement during a meeting of the church's Western Massachusetts Diocesan Council last week. The council approved the plan 16-1 with one abstention.

"If they want to take it over and take over the worry for it, then that's their privilege," Stewart said.

The agreement calls for turning over the church to Washington residents with the stipulations that the church be given first refusal rights if the chapel is ever sold, it cannot be leased or used for commercial purposes, and a commission of five people who are active members of churches be appointed to supervise the chapel's use.

MacLaren said town officials are "delighted" with Stewart's proposal. "We're quite satisfied with the selectmen and everyone in the town."

He said residents will use the chapel, which is the only church in the town, for non-denominational Sunday evening services.

"We plan on using it. It won't just sit there," MacLaren said.

He said selectmen discussed the church's acquisition during a Sunday meeting and decided "we will have to have a town meeting to appropriate $1 from available funds to buy the chapel. But I figure that will pass by about a 99-1 vote."

America's Cup Race

'Courageous' in splendid sail

By MEGAN O'REILLY
Collegian Staff

"If you don't get your boat out of the way you're gonna be in big trouble," yelled Coast Guard sailors lamely into their megaphones as they failed to hold back the frenzied flotilla of spectators with sharp blasts from their fire-hoses.

Through the thick haze of exhaust Newport Harbor this weekend resembled a flow chart of every conceivable sailing craft to ever float on water as adoring fans escorted the Courageous, 1977 America's Cup defending champion, back to its headquarters on Bannisters Wharf.

Winning the final race by a margin of two minutes, Courageous swept the four of seven race 4-0, as any one of thousands present can tell you. The New York Yacht Club retains its trophy as America bakes a new batch of heroes to characterize, idolize and then discard with over-use.

The level of sportsmanship displayed by the losing Australians is commendable considering their overall inability to get ahead after the first 10 minutes of each and every race.

Light winds and some tactical errors were the main problem acknowledged by the Australian skipper Noel Robins, but more likely it was the determination and superb sailing skill of Courageous skipper Ted Turner and a flawless performance by his crew that won them the race.

Again in the final race Courageous spotted wind shifts the Australians did not. In the 28 minutes of the race, Australia sailed in the wrong direction for 90 seconds giving the American 12-metre a lead even more than needed to win the race.

Australia lost the four races by a total of seven minutes, 48 seconds. The individual time differences were 1:48, 1:03, 2:32, and 2:25, in that order. Time ran out on Thursday's race as neither boat crossed the finish line within the alloted five - and - a - half hours due to light winds.

The New York Yacht clubbers looked on, mildly amused in their navy blue blazers as they stood high and dry aboard their humongous yacht. They were an interesting study along side the drunken derelicts in rotting Chinese junks, canoes, wind-sailcraft and engine propelled life rafts.

The most amazing thing about the America's Cup Race is the good feelings generated by the competitors and the crowd. It was like one big extended family related by a love for excitement and fine yacht racing.

Northampton mayoral race

UMass student on ballot today

By JOE MAGLITTA
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — Four Democratic candidates, one of them a UMass student, will appear on the ballot for mayor in a primary election to be held here today.

Because there are no Republicans or Independents on the ballot, the city's new mayor will be today's top Democratic vote getter.

Incumbent Mayor David W. Cramer, 48, last night told the Collegian his campaign effort "worked out very well" and that he fully expects to win re-election.

"Hopefully by this time (tonight) I will continue to be mayor," Cramer said. Cramer is seeking his second two-year term of office.

Jonathan Roche, 23, a student on leave from UMass, was an unsuccessful candidate for Northampton School Committee in 1973. Roche recently said he based his one-man campaign effort on "the idea that real campaign issues were not being raised by the other three candidates". He was unavailable for comment last night.

Harry S. Chapman Jr., former city councillor at large, last night said that recent surveys showed his chances to be "pretty good."

"Eighty per cent of Northampton is dissatisfied," Chapman said. "Whether or not this dissatisfaction is transferred into votes remains to be seen (today)."

George D. Tobin, 60, owner of a Florence-based construction firm and a newcomer to political races, last night predicted a tight race.

"It could go to any of the three candidates," Tobin said.

Tobin said Roche's young age rules Roche out as a serious contender.

Roche, on leave from UMass to earn money for next semester, has a plan to expand bus service within Northampton through private subsidy. He has also proposed the creation of a plan to purchase development rights to agricultural land in the area.

Chapman, owner of a Florence grocery store, has in recent weeks been a vocal critic of the Cramer administration. Chapman charged that Cramer had failed to provide the city with any direction. "Since last June, when I announced my candidacy, I have said the city is drifting from crisis to crisis. Right now we are losing momentum as a city," Chapman said, "but Northampton can progress."

Chapman ran third in a Mayoral primary race in 1975. Chapman has called for a streamlining of city government and greater governmental openness. "People in Northampton don't see government as a hostile force, but as an extension of themselves," Chapman said last night. At least two internal investigations in the department are now underway, according to Cramer. Last week a city patrolman was arrested on theft and federal firearms charges. Earlier in the week, one officer was discharged and another reprimanded for use of unnecessary force while arresting two teenagers last summer.

'Home Rule' stumped

By JOE MAGLITTA
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Board of Selectmen last night voted to include in the upcoming town meeting an article investigating possible appeal of a recent ruling against the enactment of a "Home Rule Bill" in Amherst.

Massachusetts Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti earlier in the month ruled against the bill, which if enacted would give the town authority to establish a "Security and Deposit Trust Account" for Amherst tenants and landlords.

The Selectmen last week voted to postpone action.

The Selectmen also reviewed 22 articles for inclusion in the upcoming October town meeting, announced participation in a statewide "Citizen Advocacy Week" to benefit the mentally retarded, and approved an article calling for the creation of a committee for town meeting to study gun safety in Amherst.

After a 45-minute executive session before their regularly scheduled meeting, the selectmen unanimously voted to turn the case over to town meeting's consideration.

Board Chairman Diana Romer said the selectmen's support of the article would be dependent on "subsequent information" on the legal cost involved in filing an appeal with the attorney general's office.

Rep. James G. Collins (D-Amherst) last week filed the "Home Rule Bill" with the state legislature.

Passage of the bill would allow for the creation of a trust account system to hold the security deposits of area tenants in interest yielding accounts. The account would be unaffected if an apartment complex were to go bankrupt.

The account would also protect tenant security deposits in any tenant-landlord disputes.

Discussion last night centered on the possible cost of having the town represented in the case by an attorney other than town consul.

Central Council proposes budgets

By BETH SEGERS
Collegian Staff

Budgets were proposed and explained for Central Area's programs last night at a Central Area Council (CAC) meeting. The information provided will be used next week when the vote on funds appropriation takes place.

The meeting of CAC representatives and program leaders involved description of the needs and services provided by the New World Center, Women's Center, Craft Shop and the Racism Awareness Program.

CAC is operating with a budget of $17,192, based on the 1800 students who lived in the area as of last November.

CAC receives $9.40 for every Central Area resident.

Other items on the agenda included plans for a trip to the Alpine Slide Run for Central residents, announcement of treasury elections on Sept. 28, approval of a Greenough sponsored movie, and discussion of the snack bar in Greenough and the greenhouse in Brooks.

Explanation of the budget for the New World Center was given by N Krumah Olenga, a graduate student who coordinates events for the group.

The New World Center provides cultural programs for Asian, African and Puerto Rican students in the area. Its name was changed from its former title, the Third World Center, because of "negative connotations," Olenga said.

Olenga's proposed $3,225 budget includes salaries, plans to continue the cultural programs, costs of travel and office needs, and the purchase of "Last Grave at Dimbaza," a documentary film on South Africa that helped influence the UMass Board of Trustees' vote last week to divest its South African funds, Olenga said. "Last Grave at Dimbaza," filmed illegally and smuggled out of South Africa, costs $400, Olenga said.

The Craft Shop, run by Greenough's artist in residence Ron Coler, is seeking a $3,400 budget for this year. The money accounts for salaries and supplies of silver, leather, ceramics, photo and tools.

Cynthia Thomas of the Womens' Center described the services her group would provide from its share of the Central Area budget. Films, workshops and colloques are offered to all area students as well as library and counseling services.

The Racism Awareness Program offers films and the use of the racism library to area residents while classes are also planned.

CAC approved plans for a trip to the Alpine Slide Run on Friday, Sept. 30. The trip, offered to 200 Central residents, will cost just $3.00 a person because of a group discount and a $200 donation from the CAC. Twenty residents in each dorm can sign up for the trip which will leave at 5:30 p.m. Rain date is Sunday, Oct. 2.

Elections for CAC treasurer will be held Wed., Sept. 28 at Franklin Dining Commons from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m.

Radio Club serves and enjoys

By ELLEN PLAUSKY
Collegian Staff

Contrary to popular opinion, ham radio differs from citizens band greatly, according to Amateur Radio Club member Jerry Quenneville.

Unlike the basic 40 channels of Citizens band, hams transmit on frequency space which they are holding for possible military use. Because of the vast number of frequencies a ham can operate on, their broadcasts are generally not interfered with, as can be the case with citizens band, Quenneville explained.

Whereas citizens band operators with loose federal regulations, ham radio operators are more tightly controlled. A prospective operator must pass two exams before being given a novices license allows the operator to use only Morse code on a limited frequency range.

So as not to discourage future hams, club president Tom Kopec yesterday said the only hard part about getting a license is waiting for it to arrive by mail. Hams are subjected to a system of incentive licensing, by which they are allowed more privileges as their technical knowledge and proficiency increase, Kopec said.

There are five levels of licenses a ham can achieve. The majority of club members are novices, but all levels are represented in the total membership

The Amateur Radio Club, a Recognized Student Organization, gives students the opportunity to enjoy themselves while performing the basic public service of transference of information.

Begun 30 year ago, the UMass radio club now has between 20 and 30 members. The majority are electrical engineering majors, Kopec and Quenniville said, who are willing to teach everything anyone needs to know about owning and operating a ham radio.

The clubs' purpose is to spark new interest in ham radios, to advise those interested in purchasing ham radios, and to help them to maintain those sets that they have purchased. Club members also have the opportunity to borrow the four transceivers owned by the club, Kopec said.

Mainly a service hobby, hams have a definite purpose, Quenneville said. In general, they provide a pool of technically skilled persons, enhance international goodwill, and prepare for possible emergency communication.

Hams can "pass traffic," said Kopec, and by doing so, can relay messages throughout the country in under 48 hours. In emergencies, hams can almost guarantee the transference of the message in under three hours, he said.

In the past, UMass hams have provided communication between organizers and workers at the annual spring concert. Kopec said the club also participated in a annual Emergency Preparedness Session, held in June, to demonstrate the relaying of emergency communication in case of an electrical shutdown.

Telephone Co. challenges petition

By BRAD GOVERMAN
Collegian Staff

An attempt has been made by New England Telephone Co. (NET) to prevent the inception of a Telephone Consumer's Action Group (TELCAG) by challenging the groups initiative petition on a technicality.

The petition to put the question "before the people" on the ballot in November was accepted as valid by both Secretary of State Paul Guzzi and Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti.

The challenge was made by NET Vice President Duane Aldrich on the basis the petition was "defective and not in conformity with the constitution ... " Evidence offered by NET to support this position was the failure of seven petitioners to include their home address on the same line as their name.

There will be a TELCAG petitioners meeting Sept. 20 at 7:30 p.m. in Campus Center 171.

The challenge of the petition is the latest counter by NET to clear itself of charges of "predatory and unauthorized billing practices" revealed and publicized in a survey conducted in March 1977 by the Public Interest Research Group of Massachusetts (MassPIRG).

Accorddng to Stephen Morgan, executive director of MassPIRG, customers have reported being "threatened with service discontinuance" if they question the legitimacy of the $1.50 charge.

Carter urges higher quotas

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Carter administration yesterday urged the Supreme Court to rule that blacks and other minorities can be given special treatment by a state medical school's admissions program.

The Justice Department said, however, that the high court should put off any decision on whether Allan Paul Bakke was denied admission to the University of California at Davis Medical School solely because he is white. Bakke had brought suit charging reverse discrimination.

In a 74-page legal brief signed by Atty. Gen. Griffin Bell and other top Justice Department officials, the administration endorsed in sweeping and general terms affirmative action programs that take race into account in order to overcome effects of past discrimination.

But while endorsing the use of "reasonably selected numerical targets" by such programs, the government brief said "rigid exclusionary quotas" could not pass constitutional tests.

"In making the difficult admissions decisions, reasonably selected numerical targets for minority admissions can be useful as a gauge of the program's effectiveness," the Justice Department brief said.

It later drew a distinction, not fully explained, between such "reasonable goals and targets" and quotas.

That argument did not go as far as some civil rights attorneys had hoped. Those attorneys argue that even quotas — rigidly reserved slots for minority applicants — should be ruled legal because they meet a "compelling state interest" in providing needed minority doctors and other professionals.

The argument probably will not draw rave reviews from opponents to affirmative action programs who see any use of racial criteria to help minorities as a type of reverse discrimination.

The government brief said the legal record in Bakke's case is not complete enough to be the basis of a Supreme Court decision that could determine the future of all affirmative action programs in education and business, and profoundly affect race relations.

Bakke, a white civil engineer from Sunnyvale, Calif., argued successfully before the California Supreme Court that the medical school's special admissions program deprived him of his constitutional rights.

He said he would have beem admitted if the special program had not allowed students with lower academic qualifications to be accepted ahead of him.

The state court ruled that the 14th Amendment, insuring equal treatment to all citizens, prevented the school from making race a factor in admissions. It said the amendment was violated by the program which reserved for minority students 16 of the 100 places in each year's entering class.

The Justice Department's position, except for its briefly mentioned opposition to inflexible quotas in such programs, followed closely the reasoning of the National Conference of Black Lawyers, one of more than 160 organizations and individuals to file friend-of-the-court briefs in the case.

"We think the government's brief in its present form is acceptable," said Victor Goode of the black lawyers group. "It's much better than we first had been led to believe."

Actually, the thrust of the Justice Department brief was the product of much internal debate and revision in the past several weeks.

The White House also issued a broad policy statement.

"Although we have made progress in eliminating discrimination case-by-case, the major civil rights laws have been effective for little more than a decade. The pervasive effects of past discrimination remain with us. The vast majority of our racial and language minorities remain poorer and less educated, suffer greater unemployment, and are less able to influence the forces — economic, social and political — that bear upon their lives than is the white majority.

Northampton police discipline officer

NORTHAMPTON [AP] — The much criticized Northampton police force has disciplined an eight-year veteran officer for allegedly driving his cruiser through a red light and then denying he did it, officials said.

Police Chief James J. Whalen said officer James E. Brennan was suspended for five working days effective Sunday for operating the cruiser recklessly, without using its flashing lights, and falsifying a report about the incident.

When contacted last night by telephone, Whalen told the Collegian he does not talk with college newspapers.

A second officer reportedly involved in the incident yesterday denied that his resignation had anything to do with the affair. Provisional police officer Michael Helems said he was planning to quit the force anyway. Helems was the beat officer on duty at the time of the incident on August 12, officials said.

A couple driving through a Northampton intersection that day complained to police that the wife, who was pregnant, had been badly startled by the cruiser running the red light, officials said. The names of the couple have not been released.

Northampton Mayor David Cramer last week said he would appoint a special commission to investigate the force, saying that public confidence in the department had been battered by a series of recent developments.

This month alone, one officer was charged for illegally selling firearms and stealing $10,000 from the police station and another was fired for allegedly beating up two teenagers.

★ Abortion bill alive

charged anti-abortion groups are using the amendment to hold hostage the supplemental budget which includes $17 million in pay raises and increased expense allowances.

Dukakis has said he would veto any budget which includes an anti-abortion amendment.

Rep. Raymond L. Flynn, D-Boston, who co-sponsored the original bill with Rep. Charles Doyle, D-Boston, and the amendment to the budget, said "while I support the state employes, in good conscience I cannot back down in our fight against abortion."

Doyle deferred responsibility of the state employes pay hikes to Dukakis, saying, "the governor has made a decision. He favors abortion... over giving state employes their well-deserved pay raises."

He added, "I think it is absolutely brutal the governor of Massachusetts is using the state employes as a whipping boy."

Doyle said, "I will guarantee the governor of Massachusetts the abortion issue will not die.

"This is merely the first battle in the fight. We will be relentless in our fight... until the unborn children of the Commonwealth are saved."

Before approving the Flynn amendment, the House rejected 135-87 an anti-abortion amendment by Assistant House Minority Leader William Robinson, R-Melrose, which would have exempted cases of rape, incest, certain diseases or where the fetus will suffer deformity or debilitation because of disease.

Doyle urged rejection of the Robinson amendment, saying the word "debilitation... constitutes abortion on demand."

Another amendment by Robinson to include only cases for treatment of rape and incest was rejected by a narrower vote of 118-108.

A third anti-abortion amendment, the broadest one offered and supported by many prochoice legislators, was rejected 147-80.

Senate Ways and Means Chairman James A. Kelly Jr., D-Oxford, said he was considering separating the amendment from the supplemental budget so state employees pay hikes would not be jeopardized.

Other sources in the Senate said there would be attempts to kill the Flynn amendment when the supplemental budget reached the upper chamber.

The House must still vote on several other amendments — one to reduce the meals tax from six to five per cent, and another to increase local aid — before the $17.9 million budget goes to the Senate.

Feminist lawyer ousts judge in recall vote

MADISON, Wis. [UPI] — A feminist lawyer garbed in a borrowed robe was sworn in yesterday to replace a judge she ousted from office for suggesting rape might be a normal reaction to women's clothing and society's permissiveness.

This feels very good, if you'd like to know," Moria Krueger said after reciting the oath of office as Kane County's first woman judge before a crowded courtroom that gave her a standing ovation.

"But what I see most clearly is the hundreds of people who worked so hard to make this day a reality," she said.

"I now accept one of the most important responsibilities that the people can bestow on an individual — that of sitting in judgment of others."

Ms. Krueger, 33, who out-polled Judge Archie Simonson by a 3-to-2 vote margin in an unprecedented recall election Sept. 7, had been unable to order a robe in time for the ceremony. The robes of other county judges were too large for her.

She was thinking about renting a graduation gown until a friend loaned her a robe.

"It's a minister's robe," she explained.

Simonson, 52, was voted out of office for the remarks he made about rape May 25 as he was about to sentence a 15-year-old boy to a year of court supervision at home for taking part in an assault on a girl Nov. 8 in a high school stairwell.

Simonson, who was not at the ceremony said he was not mad at anybody."

"If I have anyone to blame, it's the 52 per cent that chose not to go to the polls and vote," he said. I can only ask the Lord to forgive them, for they know not what they've been doing."

Among the friends and dignitaries present for the swearing in were Ms. Krueger's husband, Edward; her mother, Mrs. Robert Mackert of Nanitowoc; U.S. District Judge James Doyle and Justice Shirley Abrahamson, the first woman on the Wisconsin Supreme Court.

Never have I seen a turnout such as this," said Circuit Judge Richard W. Bardwell, who administered the oath of office and who said he had observed many investitures in his 21 years on the bench.

Attorney Eric Schulenburg, a friend of Ms. Krueger, said Simonson's recall would make all judges more careful about what they do and say on the bench.

"I do expect a great deal from you as a judge," he told Ms. Krueger. "If you do only half of that, you'll be an excellent judge."

Report says NE suffers from high levels of smog

BOSTON [AP] — The Environmental Protection Agency has released a report which says that New England continues to suffer from high levels of smog, despite efforts to control it.

The EPA, in its annual report on Environmental Quality in New England, said the federal health standards for allowable levels of photochemical oxidants, or smog in the air, in the region are exceeded at all their monitoring stations except in Berlin, N.H.

EPA Regional Administrator William R. Adams, Jr. said the figures show that "we do not have a handle on the smog problem and in order to protect public health, state and federal agencies are going to have to adopt more stringent regulations in the future."

However, Berlin was cited in the report for violating health standards by having excess amounts of suspended particles in its air. Other cities cited for such violations were Worcester, Mass., Rutland, Vt. and Springfield, Mass.

The report says that 50 per cent of the smog problem comes from automobile exhaust and the rest come from stationery sources such as dry cleaning, incineration, and printing and papering operations.

The report also says that many states are on their way to complying with federal goals for water quality and predicts that by 1983 at least 94 per cent of the region's waterways will be "fishable and swimable."

The report says that 62 per cent of Maine and Vermont's major waterways currently meet federal standards while Rhode Island boasts 64 per cent swimable. The report said that Massachusetts lagged furthest behind EPA standards with only 28 per cent of its waterways swimable or fishable.

The EPA also expressed concern about the levels of certain toxic substances being released into the environment in the region.

Of particular concern, it says, is the level of polychlorinated biphenyls, PCBs, found in the New Bedford, Mass. area. The report said the PCBs are being released into the Acushnet River, and could pullute clam flats in Buzzard's Bay.

The report also cites the Sprague Electric Co. of North Adams, Massachusetts for releasing PCBs into the Hoosic River.

Carter welfare plan draws criticism from both parties

WASHINGTON [UPI] — HEW Secretary Joseph A. Califano Jr. appealed yesterday for bipartisan help on passage of President Carter's proposed $31.1 billion welfare overhaul, but immediately ran into criticism from members of both parties.

Rep. Al Ullman, D-Ore., chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee which must approve welfare changes, called Carter's proposal "totally unworkable." And Republicans said it would lead to a welfare state.

As Congress opened a long round of welfare reform hearings, Califano asked for "all the nonpartisan wisdom we can muster" in preparing the first major revision of the welfare system since the Great Depression.

Welfare reform, he said, is "too serious to be turned into a partisan discussion."

Although some lawmakers had kind words for Carter's proposal, Rep. L.A. Bafalis, R-Fla., called the plan "a dream of some planner in Washington..... a plan to socialize welfare in this country." He said the cost increase was underestimated by more than $11 billion.

Carter would create a $31.1 billion package of jobs and supplemental income for the poor to replace current family welfare payments, food stamps and aid to the disabled. The administration says $2.8 billion is new welfare spending.

Carter is aiming for enactment of the plan by 1981. Congressional action is not expected this year.

Much of the initial skepticism on both sides of the aisle centered on the proposed system's increased costs and administration.

Califano said the plan had the support of governors. But several Republicans said governors are seeking fiscal relief through welfare reform. Rep. Steven Symms, R-Idaho, said the governors represent "a tin cup brigade."

The potentially most damaging criticism may have come from Ullman, who said at least 16 million of the estimated 32 million persons who would draw benefits under Carter's plan would be getting monthly welfare checks for the first time. "That's totally unworkable" administratively, said Ullman.

In addition, Ullman said he objected to Carter's Program for Better Jobs and Income for the same reasons he objected to Richard Nixon's Family Assistance Plan — because the amount in welfare checks is based more on family size and income rather than on whether able-bodied recipients are holding jobs.

According to HEW estimates, Carter's plan would reduce the number of persons eligible for welfare benefits from 40 million to 36 million but would increase the number receiving benefits from 30 million to 32 million.

Ex-FBI director Helms may be indicted

NEW YORK [AP] — The administrative director of a legal defense fund for FBI agents said yesterday he has been told by "the highest sources" that former CIA director Richard Helms will soon be indicted.

Marvin Liebman of the Ad Hoc Citizens' Legal Defense Fund for the FBI made the comment in response to a query about a statement former Treasury Secretary William E. Simon issued on behalf of the group Monday promising money for Helms' legal defense for his "possible indictment."

A subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee has recommended perjury charges be filed against Helms for his 1973 testimony on CIA activities in Chile.

"I have heard from the highest sources that the indictmen of Helms, which had been pending, would be handed up," Liebman said. "We don't say anything about the legal thing. We just want these guys to have the best defense possible."

Simon, in a telephone interview, denied being privy to secret information that a Helms indictment was forthcoming. But he said the ad hoc committee decided last Thursday "if that happened that we would expand our scope to cover that as well."

In January 1975, in secret testimony, Helms admitted he withheld from Senate committees some information about CIA work in Chile and withheld information about the Nixon administration's desire to have the Marxist government of Salvadore Allende overthrown.

During the first hearings Helms denied — usually with simple yes or no answers — involvement in the successful coup of Allende's government. However, at the 1975 hearings, Helms said he thought he should have answered the earlier questions "in a much more extensive way."

'Pavement princesses' on CB now

This call over the citizens band air waves is becoming familiar everywhere. "Are you a lonely trucker? If you want some action, meet me at ... "

It's a sales pitch being used by practitioners of the world's oldest profession. They have discovered the power of broadcast advertising.

The "pavement princesses," as CBers have dubbed them, now are operating as far north as Maine.

Maine State Police Lt. Reynold J. LaMontagne said there have been reports of "air traffic" involving hookers and motorists along the Maine Turnpike. But troopers patroling the turnpike from southern Maine to Augusta have not run into any brothels.

"It's a mobile thing," LaMontagne said. "No one does business in the same place."

Trooper Gary Phillips said he has heard such conversations on the CB waves.

"But," he said. "I couldn't pin it down. At times you'll hear people there making arrangements to meet each other and you can tell by the conversation they have never met before."

Phillips said he keeps a CB unit in his cruiser tuned to Channel 19, the truckers broadcast frequency. He said he traced one transmission to a trailer truck and watched.

"This sweet young thing climbed out of a car and into a truck," he said. "The truck sat there for several hours, and you know they weren't reading magazines."

Trooper Raymond Arkan, who patrols the Maine Turnpike, said there were a few incidents under investigation earlier this summer.

"Nothing ever came of it though, and we couldn't prove anything," he said.

Business at a certain point on the highway was lively for a while, he said, but has quieted down.

Prostitutes who use CB tend to concentrate their business along the highways, according to several police chiefs interviewed. The hookers know it is tougher for law enforcement officials to rack them if they keep on the move.

But there are some who prefer the comforts of home. According to some CB listeners, there are hookers who solicit business to their own apartments or motel rooms.

"Everyone knows it goes on — anyone who's been in CB for a while," one CB enthusiast said. "And there's a lot of lonely guys out there who aren't driving trucks."

Officials regulating CB admit the market is wide open for expansion. State police admit hookers have a free range along the interstate highways and a spokesman for the Maine branch of the Federal Communications Commission says, "We spend very, very little time on CB."

Prostitution arrest for males passes

BOSTON [AP] — Men, for the first time in Massachusetts, could be arrested for prostitution under a bill given final approval by the state Senate.

The bill was approved without debate yesterday. It has already won House approval.

The loophole in state law came to the attention of law enforcement officials after the conviction of a Brockton man on prostitution charges was overturned by the court.

The bill, which awaits only routine enactment in both branches, would also bring the state's prostitution laws into conformity with the state Equal Rights Amendment to the constitution.

SAN FRANCISCO — Rain — beautiful rain — poured down on Northern California early yesterday, bringing hope that the worst drought in the state's history may be ending. (UPI)

News in Brief

Tornadoes ravage Pennsylvania town

LAKE CITY, Pa. [UPI] — Two tornadoes demolished 12 houses and damaged 70 others in this small town along Lake Erie Sunday, leaving more than 100 persons homeless.

Despite the heavy property damage, police reported only two minor injuries.

The tornadoes, which struck during severe thunderstorms shortly before 3 p.m. EDT, also caused extensive damage to the unoccupied Elk Valley Middle School in Lake City and to a manufacturing plant in nearby Fairview.

Police in Lake City, a town of 2,100 persons, said 12 houses were destroyed, 20 severely damaged and 50 received minor damage. The Red Cross and area churches arranged shelter for the homeless.

Lake City Mayor Walter Cashdollar asked the office of Pennsylvania Gov. Milton Shapp for National Guard assistance, but the request was denied, Lake City police said.

One person was reported injured in Lake City, and one in the town of Fairview.

Strong, gusty winds accompanying the thunderstorms caused property damage tin other areas of Erie County and in adjoining McKean County.

Sextuplet chances good, say doctors

LEYDEN, The Netherlands [UPI] — Sextuplets born to a 28-year-old Dutch housewife have a good chance of becoming medical history's second set of sextuplets to survive, doctors attending them said yesterday.

"All is going well," said Dr. Jan Ruys of Leyden's University Hospital where Cornelia Jacoba Aafje Nijssen, the wife of a Dutch steelworker, gave birth Sunday to four boys and two girls by Caesarean section.

Mrs. Nijssen was eight months pregnant and the weights of the six babies ranged from 2.2 to 2.7 pounds. The birth of all six babies took only 70 seconds.

"The babies are in reasonable condition," Ruys said. "There is no early stage decline as sometimes happens with premature births."

Shortly after the sextuplets were born, hospital officials said they had a 75 per cent chance of survival.

The only set of sextuplets to survive more than a few hours after birth were born to Mrs. Susan Jane Rosenkowitz in Cape Town, South Africa, on Jan. 11, 1974.

Tax credits passed for home insulation

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Senate Finance Committee, in a see-saw vote that changed as absent members were polled, tentatively decided yesterday in favor of tax credits for home insulation.

But tax credits for solar, geothermal and wind energy devices received unanimous approval.

The home insulation tax credit first failed on an 8-8 tie vote, but was reversed when absent Sen. Daniel Moynihan, D-N.Y., later cast a yes vote. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Tex., the only member not voting so far, could change the outcome, but he is thought to favor the credit.

The closeness of the vote was an indication of the slipping popularity of the home insulation credit, which critics have charged would simply lead to higher prices for insulation and would pay homeowners for doing something they would have done anyway.

New plan offered for sprawled giraffe

MARWELL, England [AP] — Britain's Royal Navy came to the aid of Victor, the sprawled giraffe, yesterday with an imaginative plan to hoist the downed animal to his feet with a system of winches and scaffolds.

The report from Victor's keepers was guardedly optimistic as the 15-year-old, one-ton resident of the Marwell Zoo spent his fourth day sprawled, his lanky legs askew, out in the open on the floor of his cage.

Victor collapsed Thursday, apparently while trying to mate with one of his three female companions at the zoo, 70 miles from London.

Since then, his veterinarian owner John Knowles and interested observers around the world have tried but so far failed to come up with a way to get him back on his feet. Knowles said yesterday that Victor's condition was much improved following a Saturday night scare that the animal with an eight-foot neck was on the verge of death.

Conn. legislature called racist, sexist

HARTFORD, Conn. [UPI] — The Connecticut Legislature is racist, sexist and shows disregard for the physically handicapped in its hiring practices, Rep. Boyd Hinds, D-Hartford, said yesterday.

Hinds, in a memo to the Legislative Management Committee made public Monday, raised strong objections to a proposed affirmative action plan for the Legislature.

That committee is made up of both Republican and Democratic legislative leaders and runs the General Assembly.

He said the plan did not do enough for minorities and "reflects a callous position regarding the problem of unemployment in the state."

He said a study of full-time legislative employees and state-wide patronage showed "racist, sexist," and "anti-city practices," along with a "disregard for the problems of the handicapped."

Hinds has been a constant critic of the state's failure to move quickly enough to eliminate discrimination.

An 'oppressed' population remains unnoticed

By DAVID MOFFETT

There have been lots of columns written, speeches given, classes conducted and near riots started over the subject of expression and it seems to me that this situation is getting a little out of hand. No one, it seems, gets left out; not blacks, not women, not homosexuals, none of those popular and designated segments of out little mini-society are left alone in the endless search to abolish discrimination and replace it with numerical equality.

Well, I don't know about you folks but I'm rather sick and tired of hearing all of this stuff while I am a member of a much maligned, oft-misinterpreted and downright misunderstood segment of the campus population that never gets advocated; matter of fact most people don't even think of us as an oppressed majority. What I'm talking about (you knew all along I'd get around to it sometime didn't you?) is being a psychology major at this campus, or for that matter anywhere on this earth. My contention is that we're a persecuted and misunderstood bunch, for sure.

When I think of all the stereotypical things people say to me, of all the frustrating misconceptions that exist about us I feel like protesting the construction of everything, let alone gyms. "Oh, you're a psych major! That figures." What figures? This statement is often accompanied by wary glances and defensive looks as if I was armed with a red copy of Freudian Slips and was secretly picking apart personalities.

> Everyone assumes that us psych majors are brilliant incisive shrinks who sit around at parties observing and analyzing everyone's actions... I feel like a pre-med student at a social function...
> 'A psych major?? Oh, that explains it...

I can't even figure out my own dreams yet, which is a prerequisite to analytic behavior.

Everyone assumes that us psych majors are brilliant, incisive shrinks who sit around at parties observing and analyzing everyone's actions. People seem to think that WE think we're members of a superior race 'cause we know what's going on inside your skull and YOU don't hah hah.

"Ask Dave, he'll tell you why you just did that." I feel like a pre-med student at a social function, "Listen, Doc, I've got this little pain ... )"

"Hey, Dave, I had this dream last night ... " or "Hey, Dave, why doesn't George Scott feel mentally competent?"

I get the feeling people expect me to say that his problem goes back to his toilet training and that the Sox are a bunch of manic-depressives and that's why they're so streaky. Gooosh, I don't know why!

I've thought of telling people who are into chemicals or astronomy to avoid putting them on mental alert to protect their ego from my razor sharp analytical skills but then again I'd probably be expected to be able to rant with authority concerning those subjects ...

Another thing that worries me is that IF we don't fit into the 'Freudian Observer' characterization that people find handy then we might just as easily find ourselves relegated to the status of the 'He's Crazy Then' characterization. I know people who can easily explain insanity in terms of being a psych major; "A psych major?? Oh, that explains it ... "

And how about those wiseass chemical engineers and business majors (usually who are bemused with our low status on the job ladder) who are constantly exerting their superiority over us.

"Oh, you're a (snickers here) psych major, huh? That must be really interesting, huh? (Interesting — a key conversational ploy used to indicate a humorous attitude.) My brother was psych, graduated last year. (This is the bait — we all love to hear what kinds of jobs our fellow psych majors landed.)

Yeah, he's working for ITT driving a truck. Yuk yuk yuk. The business majors love it and I'm pissed ...

Another thing please; we are not all going to become psychiatrists either and yes I do know that they have the highest suicide rate because of the tendency to go bananas trying to figure themselves out.

And contrary to popular belief, 79 per cent of all psych majors declare their major prior to the spring semester of senior year ... Really, some of us are serious enough, short of becoming street corner counselors, about the field from the start.

While I'm on the subject, have any of you fellow psych majors out there yet discovered how to deal with friends' parents, especially female friends' parents (whose dads tend to think of all boyfriends as potential hubbies.)

"So what do you do in school son?"

Meek answer, "I'm a psychology major sir."

"Oh". Long pause here. "One of those huh? So what you gonna do with that, huh kid?"

So ends a once promising parent-future son-in-law relationship, I mean, who wants to be referred to as " ... one of those ... ", like it's a form of leprosy or something.

So anyway, just try to understand our oppression and deal with it within yourselves, work to free us from the bonds of your incredible narrow-mindedness and deal with it within yourselves, work to free us from the bonds of your incredible narrow-mindedness and just try to comprehend our motivations, empathises with our interactional perspectives, attitudinal considerations and personality configurations. It's easier than it looks.

And the rest of you psych majors, start asserting yourselves and come out of the closet.

ME — I'm gonna go into bad chemicals.

Mass confusion among the masses

By BOB GOLDSMITH

You haven't really lived until you've worked for CASIAC during registration week. Parked by the registrar's office, I discovered more about the university, the people who run it, and those who are over-run, than I had from going to classes and eating three years worth of quiche lorraine. It seemed as if every undergrad on campus had some problem with the registrar, the bursar, or both. When asked why they were in trouble, some victims argued that they had been shafted by the computer. Others admitted to their own demise. At this juncture assigning fault is pointless, but perhaps a look at some of the more common and lethal mistakes may save some needless agony next February. Contrary to popular belief, registration is not hard.

The most popular registration game this year had to be "Find the Credits". For some undiscernable reason, math majors were not overly thrilled about some of their courses being assigned equal credit with Badminton 100. In fact, one, believing that she had indeed snared a one credit calculus course, asked to apply for an underload. Apparently the blame for this particular mess belonged to the computer, who just might have been trying to underscore the fact that he's after all, only human.

Another factor which added to the confusion was lunchtime at the Registrar's. If you have ever added a Rhetoric class (did I miss anyone?), you know how hard the women in that office work, and I couldn't put in eight hours there without breaks. Even so, closing the office for an hour at the busiest time of registration day is only slightly more considerate than asking three freshmen to live in Hamlin's weight room. Why they couldn't have staggered their lunches, I'll never understand. Still there is some comfort in knowing that Whitmore holds about as many people as curry Hicks does, though not quite as comfortably.

As a sophomore I decided to change my major. Lots of people decide to change their majors every day. Registration day is not the time to decide to change your major. Very few people who dump their five Chemistry courses to look for a new life in Poli. Sci. make it to October with a full head of hair. A general rule is as follows: The emptier your add-drop form is, the better you'll sleep.

Among CASIAC's many registration duties is its role as campus traffic cop. An example of this function would have a freshman walk in the door and ask where Machmer Hall is. Upon being informed that he's in the right building, he might inquire where the CASIAC office could be found. Finally, secure in the knowledge that he does have the capacity to find his way around, he'll undoubtedly disappear out the door, opting to work out his schedule on a quieter day.

I suppose I could write a book on the irregularities of registration day, but even if I were to make my fortune selling it at the Annex, my final advice would be the same.

1. Do your planning at pre-registration time and you'll have less to worry about when your schedule comes.

2. Speak up if you have a problem. If your question seems stupid (very few are), put a bag over your head before coming in, but don't be afraid to ask! Someone in CASIAC can probably answer 90 per cent of your questions, and should know where to find answers to the rest.

3. Let your fingers do the walking. There is no use wearing out your Adidas "Joggers" over a problem that can be handled over the phone. You're paying $19 for the privilege, so you might as well use it.

4. DON'T PANIC! A scheduling problem is no reason to lose your appetite, even though DC dinners might. Even if you don't have a single course on registration day, a full schedule can be worked out if you sit down with an open course liting and methodically build your semester. The 14 day add-drop period is designed specifically for that purpose. If you're still in trouble after day 14, you have my permission for an anxiety attack. Come down to CASIAC first, though, and just maybe we can share it.

Words of wisdom?

By ELLEN PLAUSKY

While walking up to the UMass library reserve desk, I wondered how many flights I'd have to go up for a study room this time. In the past it had always been 16 or 18 floors. Today, though, I was lucky, I only had to go up to the tenth floor.

Trudging up the stairs I was determined to get some work done, but after turning the key, flicking on the light, and nearly collapsing into the chair I almost gave up hope.

As in all the other study rooms I've been in, the walls from floor to ceiling were graffiti laden. Why do I always feel a compelling need to "read the walls"? Only about 10 per cent of it was actually worth reading. It was basically a mixture of song lyrics, poetry, dumb questions, Bible quotes, profanity and "boredom" notes, nothing too impressive. (Still, the sailboat drawing did break up the monotony.)

By why can't they ever give me a room that I've "read" before? Maybe then I could study. It's just not fair.

Imagine if all the time spent writing on walls was added up. Boggles the mind, doesn't it? I have nothing against graffiti writers (I used to be a part time writer myself until I realized that it stunted my growth), but they should reconsider. Would they write this if they had to read it every day? And, if we pay for the right to have some place to study, shouldn't it not be a distraction?

But what can be done about it? The University's repainting them would only be a waste of time and money (unless Nazi-type guards stood watch.) Within a week, they'd look the same. But, how about letting the students help out? If students were issued tiny paint cans with their study room keys, consider the following suggestion ... Instead of commenting on another's graffiti that you disapprove of, (and thereby adding to the problem) simply paint it out, voicing your opinions while helping UMass.

I doubt that it would work though; the paint would probably be ripped off — but you never know. Can you imagine a clean study room wall? Were they ever clean? Were the workers building the library the first in a long line of contributors? Will I ever get to the point of this editorial? We may never know.

Actually, the only time that I feel the graffiti has ever given me any inspiration was to write this editorial. Please, though, remember that everything that you don't write will save time for the next person who feels compelled to read it. Thanks, I really would appreciate it.

On the new exhibitionism

Today you don't have to be a rich neurotic with an imported head doctor to revel in the sweet pains of confession. And you don't have to be a bearded Viennese guru to enjoy the privilege of minding other people's business. Today's message is let it all hang out — the farther out, the better. New liberation movements, pop psychology fads, laissez-faire standards of writing, all afford the opportunity to be intellectual (and hip) while opening your bleeding heart wide.

Even insanity is glamorous; since Sylvia Plath and Anne Sexton, every suicidal, depressed soul is a poet. Edgar Allen Poe may have been the archetypical wasted writer, but he had nothing on these two ladies as far as charisma is concerned. It would be difficult (at least) to read feminist interpretations into The Raven and El Dorado. Who needs spook stories anyway? As long as there's a nouvelle literary tradition to back you up, you might as well leave posterity a free verse history of your sex life.

Ah, sex! Partly because of women's lib and gay lib, the individual's sexuality is not only out of the closet and out of the bedroom, but out of hand. This is the age of Coming Out. Let it be known to all who's what: Mary's homosexual, Bill's a swinger, Orville's a reformed fetisher, Seymour's a transvestite. If you aren't sure what you are, just read about someone else's experiences as a hooker or closet queen, then decide for yourself. Or if you're too lazy to read books, ask a stranger on the bus. On the other hand, if you're a mature lonelyheart seeking that special someone to share your secret (?!) delights, simply place an ad in the personals column of any with-it newspaper.

Seriously now, I suppose there's nothing inherently wrong with social liberation movements or, for that matter, with confessional writing. I believe that in the long run the influences of feminism and gay liberation will improve our society, though I'm not sure that the common run of confessional poetry will add anything substantial to American literature.

What I deride gently is the overenthusiasm (with its personal and literary manifestations) which accompanies every new current in society. I am also amused by the commercial operations (viz. Werner Erhard, Rolfing, swingers' clubs) which profit from societal insecurity while fostering self-preoccupation in the name of self-understanding.

With time, of course, all passes. There will be another Victorian age, an era of buttoned dollars and tightly locked bedroom doors. Thirty years from now, we, today's young, will reminisce at card parties about the "shocking seventies" and our scandalous college behavior. Fifteen-year-olds will hide in their mattresses volumes of silly lesbian poetry that we yawn at today. But that's subject matter for another column.

Tsai chien, amigos!

Road to reality

By DREW CRANE

Everyone guides their life by some basic system of values, whether they realize it or not. The multitude of philosophies that have affected us are man's attempt to explain (or negate) reality. However, most people never bother to question the ideas they hold (or their source) and consequently their life is a confused jumble of various philosophies, resulting in their lack of purpose and self-esteem.

One aspect of your education here is to become aware of yourself and the direction in which your life is going. Not only should you use your acquired knowledge to question what you are learning in academics but you must also use it to identify and question the values guiding your life. For without a rational philosophy, self-doubt emerges from your subconscious mess of contradictions to chain you to a life of mediocrity and deny the greatness you could achieve.

It is the nature of mankind that we must use our minds to perceive the facts of reality and act to insure our survival. Unlike animals, we cannot rely on instinct for our existence and can only prosper to the extent that we use reason to guide our course of action. In order to do this you must have a fully consistent philosophic base to act from.

Novelist-philosopher Ayn Rand provides such a foundation in her philosophy of OBJECTIVISM. Its basic tenents, to quote Miss Rand, are:

"1. Reality exists as an objective absolute — facts are facts; independent of man's feelings, wishes, hopes or fears."

"2. Reason (the faculty which identifies and integrates the material provided by man's senses) is man's only means of perceiving reality, his only source of knowledge, his only guide to action, and his basic means of survival."

"3. Man — every man — is an end in himself, not the means to the ends of others. He must exist for his own sake, neither sacrificing himself to others nor sacrificing others to himself. The pursuit of his own rational self-interest and his own happiness is the highest moral purpose of his life."

"4. The ideal political-economic system is laissez-faire capitalism. It is a system where men deal with one another not as victims and executioners, nor as masters and slaves, but as traders, by free, voluntary exchange to mutual benefit."

"It is a system where no man may obtain any value from others by resorting to physical force and no man may initiate the use of physical force against others. The government acts only as a policeman that protects man's rights; it uses physical force only in retaliation and only against those who initiate its use, such as criminals or foreign invaders. In a system of full capitalism, there should be (but historically has not yet been) a complete separation of state and economics, in the same manner and for the same reason as the separation of state and church."

You can choose to mould your own personal philosophy to act as an inherent life guide or you can drift aimlessly throughout life, avoiding the questions of survival you face daily and suffering the consequences of blanking out. But it is a choice you cannot avoid.

Candles can be hazardous

To the Editor:

This letter is intended as an urgent reminder and a warning regarding the use of candles in residential buildings. One of the dorms in Southwest had a midnight fire over the weekend caused by an open candle flame left unattended in a student's room. In this case there were no injuries and damage was confined to the room. We cannot expect to be so lucky in the future. If you doubt the danger from such a fire in a "fire-proof" concrete structure, reflect on the fact that a similar fire ignited by a candle in a comparable Southwest dorm last year burned out the room completely, caused serious smoke damage to rooms along the entire corridor [with toxic fumes] and generated temperatures so hot that both floor and ceiling [concrete slab 10" thick] were cracked.

Candles are to be used in student rooms ONLY under the strict rules laid down by university regulations and fire prevention guidelines [if in doubt, check with House staff]. Any usage which fails to conform poses a grave threat to the safety of other residents. [The same point applies to unauthorized and careless operation of hot plates or other cooking devices.] Violations will be dealt with promptly and firmly. Penalties for causing a fire through misuse of candle or appliance will include recommendation for removal from the university, not merely from the dormitory system.

The residence halls at UMass-Amherst have never had a fatality due to fire. Thoughtful vigilence from everyone is needed if this admirable record is to continue.

Blacks, liberals back administration's stand in discrimination case

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Blacks and liberals gave lukewarm endorsement yesterday to the administration's stand in the case of Allan Bakke, a white man who said he failed to get into medical school because of reverse racial discrimination.

They were not totally pleased with the legal brief — which supports taking race into account in college admissions but neither endorses nor rejects racial quotas.

But they said it was an improvement over earlier proposals.

However, the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith termed the government brief "an unfortunate political push in the wrong direction."

Rep. Parren Mitchell, D-Md., chairman of the 16-member black congressional caucus, said the government's position "appears to be consistent with the statements of the President on affirmative action programs."

Members of the caucus saw an early "working draft" of the brief, Mitchell said, and the final product "is much closer to the position we wanted the Justice Department to take."

"The working draft had the Justice Department coming down against affirmative action programs at the University of California. This is a clear reversal that represents the bottom line," said Mitchell.

Joseph Rauh Jr., vice president of Americans for Democratic Action, said public pressure forced the government to change its position on the Bakke case.

"In a 180 degree shift, the government has now muted its opposition to numerical goals and quotes," Rauh said. "Although it is not the brief the civil rights movement would have written, it is a lot better than the draft circulated 10 days ago. We can live with it."

The Anti-Defamation League, which filed a friend of the court brief endorsing Bakke's stance, termed the government brief "the product of enormous pressure brought on the administration."

It said the government has "abandoned the position that every American is entitled to consideration for admission on the basis of his or her own merits."

HEW Secretary Joseph Califano said the government's brief "demonstrates the constitutional validity and national necessity of affirmative action programs."

"The brief underscores the need to remove the historic sttain of racial discrimination from our society through special admissions programs that seek out qualified minority applicants and that increase the number of qualified minority students in college professional and graduate education," Califano said.

White House Press Secretary Jody Powell said the Bakke brief "shows strong support for affirmative action programs to help rememdy the still-present effects of past discrimination.

"At the same time, it states opposition to rigid exclusionary quotas which make race the sole factor in reaching decisions without concern for qualifications."

Pair set for balloon launch

BAR HARBOR, Maine [UPI] — Two Colorado men, whose dream is to make the first successful crossing of the Atlantic in a balloon, yesterday readied their silver and black "Eagle," for a launch they hoped would come tonight.

Dewey Reinhard, 47, and Steve Stephenson, 44, both of Colorado Springs, planned to make a computer projection to determine if the weather was favorable to begin their 3,000 mile trip.

A decision to leave the Bar Harbor launch site will be made by Reinhard and Stephenson, according to a technical adviser for the $250,000 project.

The adviser said the balloonists would be trying to project prevailing winds to determine if they would be taking a southerly path — avoiding the chilling air and weather that defeated them earlier this month in a similar trans-Atlantic balloon trip.

Maxie Anderson and Ben Abruzzo, both of Albuquerque, N.M., launched their attempt Sept. 9 from Marshfield, Mass. But they became lost in a blinding snowstorm and ultimately ditched their balloon off Iceland Sept. 12.

Reinhard and Stephenson feel they have a better chance of making it because they have "the advantage of all the experiences of the 14 previous attempts," including five men who lost their lives.

Reinhard said he is convinced they will make it to Europe because they are well-prepared. But even he admits weather is the primary factor in the ultimate success of the trip.

"If we run into bad weather, that could be the end of the trip," he said.

Reinhard said he would give up the trip in such circumstances because "I love living."

The silver and black balloon, silver to reflect the sun, was designed by Edward Yost, who also attempted a trans-Atlantic balloon trip last year but had to ditch off the Portugal coast just 530 miles short of his destination.

Yost still claims a record for traveling farther than anyone else who has made the attempt.

The envelope is made of an extremely tough fabric, while the seven-by-15 foot red, yellow and orange gondola with "The Eagle" printed on it, constructed by Reinhard's wife and three sons, is made of fiberglass.

The gondola can be converted into a boat. It is loaded with safety equipment, including two marine radios, two aircraft radios, two emergency locator transmitters, a broadcast receiver, and a Loran navigation receiver for communications.

With this radio gear, Reinhard will try to remain in constant touch with his meterological adviser in Washington, D.C., who will be analyzing weather data from satellites and other sources.

Reinhard and Stephenson will also keep in contact with ships, aircraft, and ground stations in North America, on the Atlantic, and in Europe.

Should "The Eagle" — named after Charles Lindbergh's plane which crossed the Atlantic 50 years ago — be forced to ditch, Reinhard and Stephenson will try to sail the gondola towards the nearest land.

Carter meets Dayan for Middle East talks

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Carter administration opened a new round of Middle East diplomacy yesterday with Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan and said it would be willing to talk with the Palestine Liberation Organization if the group accepts United Nations resolutions recognizing Israel.

Dayan carried to President Carter and Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance proposals for a settlement that would return some territories to the Arab countries but maintain Israeli military control over the west bank of the Jordan River.

Administration officials, while not optimistic about a breakthrough in negotiations, emphasized a determination to get the Palestinians admitted to the peace table.

The administration said the United States "would be willing to talk with the PLO if they accept 242 and 338," the 1967 and 1973 Security Council resolutions implying acceptance of Israel's existence and promoting peaceful settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict.

But a State Department spokesman, in making the statement, said the United States "is not in the business of imposing our views" and that all parties to the dispute must agree on who can participate at the Geneva conference the administration hopes to have reconvened by the end of the year.

Throughout the summer the administration invited the PLO to accept the U.N. resolutions. President Carter in August said if the Palestinians took that step it "would open a new opportunity for us to start discussions with them."

The department's statement, in response to questions at the daily news briefing, appeared to go a step further by referring to the PLO directly.

Dayan arrived with some mystery surrounding his travels of recent days. After boarding a flight to New York in Brussels he disembarked secretly and went to Paris for a day before returning to Israel Sunday to confer with Prime Minister Menahem Begin.

"I thought it was worthwhile to report to him about the meeting I had on my way," Dayan said. "That's what I did. I went back to Israel and told the prime minister about it."

Supper club fire doors locked routinely—waitress

CINCINNATI [AP] — A waitress working in the Beverly Hills Supper Club the night a fire killed 164 people told a congressional hearing yesterday that fire doors at the supper club routinely were kept locked.

Janetta Johnson, who was injured trying to get out of the overcrowded Cabaret Room, also said aisles leading to the room's single exit were blocked by tables and chairs.

"It was like trying to get an egg into a Coke bottle," she said of the jam up at the door.

"I just knew that smoke was going to kill me. People were screaming and pushing trying to get through that single exit door."

Ms. Johnson, who prefers that designation, said she had seen the fire doors unlocked "perhaps eight times" in the two years she worked there. She testified she saw an employe unlock back fire doors the night of the May 28 fire.

She was one of a series of witnesses testifying about the fire before the subcommittee on Consumer Protection and Finance of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Ms. Johnson, of Erlanger, Ky., said people were very orderly at the outset, but "their speed was hindered by chairs and tables in the ramps and aisles. I looked back and the smoke was so black it was like crude oil rolling in the air."

The waitress said the aisles were so congested as the crowd tried to go through two single doors into a bar service area that she jumped atop a table and ran across tables to one of the doors.

THORENS TD 165C

This fully manual belt drive transcription turntable has for many years been the machine by which all others are judged. Low mass arm, superb suspension and German precision are but a few of its fine features. Fitted with an Empire 4000D1 cartridge, this turntable not only carries a suggested retail of $249.90 but will outperform all but the most exotic turntables. (Included in the package is the Monitor Audio Stylift that lifts the arm at the end of the record.)

marantz 2216

The marantz 2216® is an up to date version of an older but still excellent model (model 2215B) that one of our competitors still features in their antiquated systems. The main improvements have been phase lock loop FM, a cleaned up phono pre-amp section and a more durable power supply that allows you to keep the volume levels up, and trips to the shop (yes we have one in Amherst) down. At its advertised price of $249.95 the 2216 is an excellent buy, but as the head unit in one of our featured systems the value could be considered phenomenal.

TOTAL SYSTEM RETAIL $884.80
ONLY 16 TOTAL SYSTEMS AT $439

Audio Lab AL10's

If volume and concert hall realism is what you're after, this new speaker from our garage might just fit the bill. Our audio buyer selected the components to be an excellent balance between efficiency, moderate cost and outstanding performance. (12" woofer, 4½" midrange, 2½" tweeter plus a ¾" Piezo rear firing horn tweeter for that spacious sound) 5 yr. warrantee Value $300/pr.

The Ugly Duckling (from the business end)

We all know California styling tends to be a bit bizarre, but the designers at the Tushinsky Temple sound really outdid Liberace on the SUPERSCOPE® QR-450. In spite of themselves, behind those putrid pink dialights, is a pretty amazing two-four channel receiver by marantz® for SUPERSCOPE®. Made originally to sell in the $300-$350 price range, this receiver by virtue of the following specifications heads up our featured system of the week. The amplifier section puts out a modest 15 watts (measured by us) RMS per each 4 channel at a surprisingly low 0.1% THD in quad. However, strap it into stereo with a simple flip of a switch and it develops a healthy 33 watts per stereo channel. And its FM section is astonishingly competent with a measure 1.8 uv sensitivity and phase lock loop to keep it in tune with your tunes....

TOTAL SYSTEM RETAIL $795.00
OUR DELIVERED PRICE $319

Acoustic 10 Loudspeakers

An air suspension design we stole from one of the big five speaker makers and produce ourselves at a fraction of the cost. The 10" woofer and 2½" phenolic tweeter are warranteed for five years by us.

Promoter forces new court fight over 'Oh, Calcutta' ticket sales

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. [AP] — A new court fight over plans to stage "Oh, Calcutta!" here is scheduled for a hearing today, with the promoter of the nude musical attempting to force sale of tickets at the Civic Center.

Dyke Spear, of Hartford, Conn., earlier won a court decision halting an attempt by city officials to have the play declared obscene and banned.

This time, Spear is asking that the city be required to put tickets for the Oct. 8 performance on sale at the Civic Center box office. Hampden Superior Court Judge Paul A. Tamburello rejected Spear's initial request for a court order, but ordered the further hearing.

Mayor William C. Sullivan last week refused to sell tickets at the Civic Center, saying the play was not scheduled for performance there. "Oh, Calcutta!" is to be performed at Springfield Symphony Hall, one block away.

"I just said no, that we shouldn't be an agent for this play," Sullivan said.

Although Sullivan said tickets for Symphony Hall events are not ordinarily sold at the Civic Center, Spear contended that the practice is not unprecedented.

Flutist Joanne Tanner to give recital tomorrow

The Department of Music and Dance will present Joanne Tanner, flutist, in recital tomorrow at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

Mrs. Tanner will perform Bach's Suite in B Minor, Mozart's Concerto in G and a piece entitled Concerto composed by her husband, Dr. Peter Tanner, professor of Percussion. An orchestra conducted by Dr. Tanner and composed of area professionals, will accompany Tanner. The recital is open to the public free of charge.

Not only is Mrs. Tanner's husband participating in the recital, but also their two sons; Mark on the cello and Eric on the violin.

Environmental Science plans educational program

Further information concerning the program is available by appointment on the sign-up sheets outside of the following offices:

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

From UNITED Feature Syndicate
For release WEEK of Sept. 19, 1977

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 20 — Born today, you are a sentimental person given to much wishful thinking. Quick to forgive and forget, you are often disappointed to find that the rest of the world is not so. You are not the 'bossy' type and find it difficult to give orders. Though you realize the importance of tact and diplomacy, they are not virtues that come easily to you.

You have a healthy security drive, but you can't always tell when it is motivating you. Fear of not succeeding may keep you at a project that bores you, whereas what should be motivating you is a desire to work in a particular field or endeavor. Remember, a fear of not succeeding is not the same as a fear of failure; the former leads to frantic activity, while the latter may lead to no activity at all.

Inclined to moods of gloom and doom, you are not a terribly inspirational person. Young persons may go out of their way to avoid you simply because you tend to talk down their interests and provide nothing of your own interests to take their place. Beware when advising your own children; you could lead them quite far astray.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide. WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 21

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) — Make an effort to compensate another for having beaten him to the punch in a recent race for career success. Tact pays off.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) — Undue excitement could interfere with progress by day's end. Seek to lessen activity.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) — There are plenty of reasons why another finds it difficult to display affection openly. Encourage them to talk about it.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) — Don't be too matter-of-fact about your feelings, others may believe you are unfeeling. Express yourself openly.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) — Refuse to produce humor at another's expense. The young may cause concern today; discuss the day's problems freely.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) — Explanation may be in order. Choose the right time and the right words and all should be well at day's end.

PISCES(Feb.29-March 20) — An intense curiosity may bring you into conflict with another's privacy. Understanding is necessary.

ARIES(March 21-April 20) — Take time to study another's behavior more carefully. You may discover much to interest you. New horizons appear.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) — Take care that your concern for another's success does not cause you to appear overly critical of the efforts he or she is making.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) — Method and the wise use of time: these will guarantee you a good end to a bad beginning. Be wary of shortcuts to success.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) — There is nothing more detrimental to success than feeling sorry for yourself. Try to deal with failure in a positive way.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) — A detached approach is essential if you wish to analyze accurately the situation on the home front.

Michigan retains top spot in UPI coaches grid poll

NEW YORK [UPI] — The University of Michigan retained its No. 1 ranking and Southern Cal was again rated No. 2 yesterday, but there was a great deal of reshuffling in UPI's top 20 teams, selected by its board of coaches.

Michigan received an overwhelming 27 first place votes, compared with five for USC and four for Oklahoma. The Sooners moved from sixth to fourth in this second week of ratings, but the biggest leaps were made by Penn State, which moved from ninth to fifth, and Texas, which went from 13th to ninth.

Alabama and Notre Dame took the greatest plunges in the ratings, as they were both upset on Saturday. Notre Dame, which was the No. 1 team in the preseason balloting and dropped to fourth last week, fell to 15th as the result of Saturday's 20-13 loss to Mississippi. Alabama, which was No. 3 last week, dropped to 12th following its 31-24 loss to Nebraska.

Ohio State moved from fifth to third and Colorado and Florida moved into the top 10 — Colorado No. 8 and Florida No. 10. Texas Tech beat out Texas A&M for the sixth spot by just five points.

Several teams which were unranked last week moved into the top 20. They are: Nebraska, 11; Washington State, 13; Arkansas, 14; and West Virginia, 19.

NEW YORK [UPI] — The United Press International Board of Coaches Top 20 teams after the second week of the college football season with first-place votes in parentheses:

| TEAM | POINTS |
|---|---|
| 1. Michigan (27) | 370 |
| 2. Southern Cal (5) | 303 |
| 3. Ohio St. (2) | 279 |
| 4. Oklahoma (4) | 253 |
| 5. Penn St. (1) | 223 |
| 6. Texas Tech | 169 |
| 7. Texas A&M | 164 |
| 8. Colorado | 94 |
| 9. Texas | 82 |
| 10. Florida | 42 |
| 11. Nebraska | 31 |
| 12. Alabama | 22 |
| 13. Washington St. | 19 |
| 14. Notre Dame | 17 |
| 15. Arkansas | 16 |
| 16. Mississippi St. | 11 |
| 17. Brigham Young (tie) | 8 |
| 17. Pittsburgh | 8 |
| 19. Oklahoma St. | 7 |
| 20. West Virginia | 6 |

Note: By agreement with the American Football Coaches Association, teams on probation by the NCAA are ineligible for top 20 and national championship consideration by the UPI board of coaches. Those teams currently on probation for 1977 are: Kentucky, Michigan State, Redlands (Calif.), Western State (Colo.).

Sports in Brief

Sox acquire Bailey

CINCINNATI [UPI] — The Boston Red Sox have claimed Cincinnati Reds outfielder Bob Bailey on waivers, the Reds have announced.

In addition to the waiver price, the Reds yesterday also received left-handed pitcher Frank Newcomers, 23, from the Boston farm system. Newcomers has been assigned to the Reds Indianapolis farm club.

Bailey, 34, played in 49 games for Cincinnati this year, batting .253 with two homers and 10 RBIs. In 1976 he batted .298 in 69 games for the Reds.

Newcomers compiled a 6-15 record this season, pitching for Bristol, Conn., of the Eastern League. Last season he was 14-6 with Winston-Salem, N.C., of the Carolina League.

Birds get Briles

ARLINGTON, Tex. [UPI] — The Texas Rangers announced yesterday they had sent right-handed pitcher Nelson Briles to Baltimore for the $20,000 waiver price.

Briles, the Rangers player representative, had worked as both a starter and reliever this year. He compiled a 4.07 earned run average in 28 appearances and had a 6-4 record.

LA heading for title

LOS ANGELES [AP] — The Los Angeles Dodgers head toward the National League West Division crown with a home attendance record already established and a home run mark within sight.

As they go to San Francisco for tonight's game against the Giants, the Dodgers could become the only team in baseball history to have four players with 30 or more home runs in a single season.

Steve Garvey, Ron Cey and Reggie Smith have already reached the plateau of 30 and Dusty Baker is at 28 with a dozen games remaining in the campaign.

The record of three has been reached by 13 National League teams and four American League clubs previously. There never have been four on a single team.

Plimpton in goal?!?

FITCHBURG, Mass. [UPI] — The Boston Bruins opened training camp yesterday with 24 players and author-goalie George Plimpton.

Plimpton, who has worked out with professional teams in other sports and then written about the experiences, will be filmed trying to stop the Montreal Canadiens prior to an exhibition game with the Bruins.

Joining Plimpton at practice were veteran goalies Gerry Cheevers, Gilles Gilbert and newly acquired Ron Grahame, formerly with Houston of the World Hockey Association.

Since the Bruins signed Grahame after last season, reports have been widespread that Boston would trade Gilbert for a quality defenseman.

"When you have three super goaltenders, I feel like it's pretty tough to carry three all year," agreed coach Don Cherry yesterday. But I think we're going to start with three and go from there.

"If a trade does come up, naturally, we'll go for it. But I don't think there will be a trade before the season starts. We're just going to wait and see. Whatever goaltenders are stopping the puck (in the exhibition games), they're the ones that play. It's that simple."

Pacers ink Flynn

INDIANAPOLIS [UPI] — Mike Flynn, a third-year professional, signed his 1977 contract with the Indiana Pacers, coach Bobby Leonard announced yesterday.

Flynn averaged 8.2 points last season as a reserve guard. He also shot 71 per cent from the field.

Sox fans on NY City: 'Apple has a worm in it'

BOSTON [AP] — To hear Red Sox fans tell it, New York isn't even a nice place to visit.

"Boston's small, New York's big and they should have everything there, but they don't," said Boston rooter Dave Anderson of Canton before last night's Red Sox-Yankees series.

"What they got is the Son of Sam."

Cozy Fenway Park was packed for the two-game series that was do-or-die for the Red Sox, and the Boston fans surveyed before the game were boiling with frustration at what could be another near miss for the home team.

"If the Yankees win, they bought it," said Bob Sagnella of Providence, alluding to New York's purchase of free agents. "They should have run away with it."

"The Yankees are too lucky" said John Mintee of Boston. "They're lucky they didn't kill each other by now the way they fight in the clubhouse."

Bill Benson of Boston detected favoritism for the Yankees within the American League hierarchy.

"The Red Sox paid for Rollie Fingers and Joe Rudi last year but they had to give them back," he said, citing a decision by Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn. "But the Yankees shelled out money for everyone in sight and no one said boo."

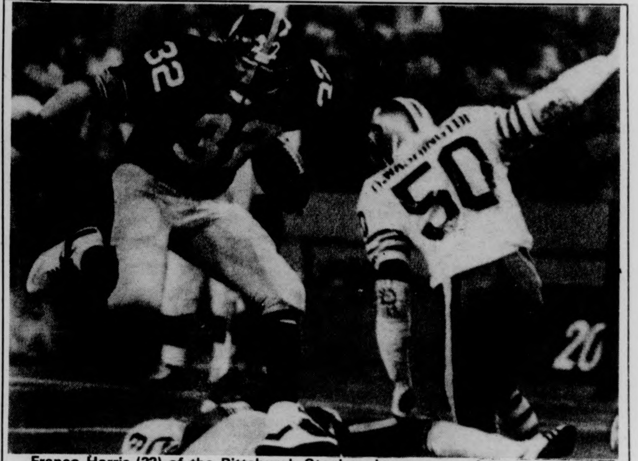
The Red Sox, however, didn't escape the fans' lash.

The consensus was that Boston's pitching staff of veterans had let the team down and that the Red Sox' own internal problems were damaging.

"They stuck with Scott too long," said Lorraine DeAmato of Somerville. "When he complained about batting seventh they should have taken him the hell out and put Yaz at first."

Bill Bryson of Boston blamed Boston Manager Don Zimmer for the allegedly chronic Boston managerial trait of being "too soft."

"I bet they (Red Sox) are down in the clubhoue having a couple of pops right now," Bryson complained as the Yankees clouted batting practice home runs.



Franco Harris (32) of the Pittsburgh Steelers, leaps over a fallen San Francisco defender and evades Dave Washington (50) to score on a 14 yard run in first half action last night.

Steelers rip 49ers, 27-0

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — Franco Harris ran for 100 yards and two touchdowns last night to become the National Football League's 20th leading all-time rusher and lead the Pittsburgh Steelers to a 27-0 victory over the San Francisco 49ers in their nationally-televised season opener.

Terry Bradshaw passed 15 yards to John Stallworth for another Steeler TD, while Roy Gerela added field goals of 49 and 47 yards and three extra points.

Harris' rushing performance, in 27 carries, game him 5,233 career yards, moving him in front on Lenny Moore of Baltimore for 20th place on the all-time rushing list. Harria, a six-year veteran, also moved into a tie with Jim Taylor of Green Bay for fourth place on the all-time list of most 100-yard games in a career, with 26.

Harris' touchdown runs of 14 and seven yards also made him the Steelers' third all-time leading scorer with 282 points on 47 touchdowns.

Gerela tied his own personal Steeler record for his longest field goal with his 49-yard kick in the second quarter. However, Gerela's all-time personal career record is a 50-yarder he kicked as a Houston Oiler, and the Steelers' longest field goal ever was a 51-yarder by Lou Michaels.

Cornerback Jimmy Allen set up two of the Steelers' touchdowns with interceptions. His interception of a Plunkett pass on the Steeler 38 that came 37 seconds into the second quarter resulted 10 plays later with Pittsburgh's first TD on Harris' 14-yard burst off-tackle.

Midway through the final quarter Allen picked off another Plunkett pass on the San Francisco, 13 and returned it to the 6. Three plays later, Bradshaw, who had been sacked for a 10-yard loss on the second play from scrimmage, hit Stallworth with his 15-yard scoring pass.

Harris' other TD with 4:25 gone in the final quarter capped a seven-play, 62-yard drive. Gerela kicked his 47-yarder for the only scoring in the third quarter.

The Steelers continued their success on Monday night home games, never having lost a game. The Steeler defense also stretched to 30 straight regular season games their record of not giving up a touchdown in the first period.

The Pittsburgh defense kept the 49ers bottled up deep inside their own territory the entire first half as Plunkett was able to take the team no further than their own 36.

Jays top Birds as Garvin shines

BALTIMORE [AP] — Jerry Garvin dealt Baltimore's pennant hopes a severe blow Monday night, allowing nine hits while pitching the Toronto Blue Jays to a 3-1 victory over the Orioles.

The rookie left-hander, 10-16, gave up a sixth-inning home run to Rich Dauer. He then eased out of an eighth-inning jam by getting Lee May to hit into a double play with runners on first and third, then retired three straight batters in the ninth with Orioles on first and third.

Elliott Maddox opened the eighth with his third hit and went to third on a single by Ken Singleton after Dauer fouled out trying to sacrifice. Veteran Doug Rader, playing his first major league game as an outfielder, slipped and fell on the wet grass when he appeared to have a chance to get Maddox at third.

Rick Cerone drove in two Toronto runs with a single in the second and a double in the ninth. Roy Howell's singled in Gary Woods in the third.

Linksters recapture YanCon title

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's golf team battled rains, steamy heat and less than ideal conditions yesterday, but prevailed through it all and regained the Yankee Conference Championship at Stowe Acres Country Club in North Central Mass.

The duffers, who last year lost the championship to a determined UConn squad, got solid performances from all seven players, and scored a whopping 13 stroke victory over runner-up Rhode Island.

The Minutemen tallied 464 strokes, an excellent score given the weather, while second place URI totaled 477. The Wildcats from UNH placed third at 481 while last year's champion UConn finished fourth with a 485 total. Vermont took fifth place at 487, while Maine pulled up the rear with a 507 aggregate.

The linksters, who had three of only ten sub-80 rounds, were led by co-captains Flynt Lincoln and Jim McDermott and surprising junior Jeff Orr.

Lincoln, a sophomore, collected four birdies en route to an amazing one-over-par 73 effort that won him low medalist honors. McDermott, a junior, continued playing the consistent golf that has been his trademark for the last two years. McDermott shot a 75.

The big boost for the Minutemen, however, came from junior unknown Jeff Orr. Orr playing in his first match for UMass, collected three birdies, and fired a super round of 74.

Freshman John Lien and Sophomore Vic Lahtiene shot 80's, while junior Bill Campbell played fine golf, from tee to Green, but had putting problems, en route to an 82.

Sophomore Mark Duggin shot an 86 that did not figure in the best 6 of 7 scores format.

New coach Ed Vlach was very, very pleased with his team's performance, and had especially high praise for Orr's effort.

"I knew that Orr was really going to help this team," said Vlach. "But I really did not expect him to come on this fast, I was pleasantly surprised.

"I expected to get solid performances from our two co-captains Lincoln and McDermott, but I was tremendously pleased with how well our young players were able to come through."

The next stop for the linksters will be the all important New Englands, coming up this weekend at Longmeadow Country Club. After that comes the Toski Intercollegiate Tournament, followed by the qualifying for the ECAC's.

They said it

—Compiled from wires by Dave Rodman—

Houston Oiler coach Bum Philips, after being presented a game ball by his players after their opening win:

"That's what I need, another (bleeping) football."

Tampa Bay coach John McKay after the Bucs opening loss:

"We played horse manure football. The offensive line refused to block. We can't protect the passer. We blew coverage in the secondary."

Michigan football coach Bo Schembechler on the officiating in Saturday's Duke-Michigan game, won by Michigan:

"I don't accept those delay of game penalties. I don't think we delayed. That fellow has a defective watch, he ought to get it fixed."

Joe Namath, when asked to assess his debut with the LA Rams:

"The only way I can assess it is that we lost. It's tough to think of anything positive when you lose."

Steeler QB Terry Bradshaw, before last night's game with the 49ers:

"I've got to win, I'm scared of losing. I hate it, I dread losing. I can't stand it."

Steeler cornerback Mel Blount, who returned to the team last week after an 8 week holdout:

"If they (49ers) throw at me, I'll pick off a couple."

Carlton Fisk of the Red Sox, after keying Boston's win over NY last night:

"I didn't hit that ball (3rd inning homer) real good. I hit five balls farther than that in NY last week and they were all outs."

"We've got to win tomorrow night — pretty soon you run out of tomorrows."

Yankee manager Billy Martin, after last night's loss:

"I'll be very satisfied if we win tomorrow night. A split is all we need here. I would have liked to have won both of these games here, but now I'll have to settle for a split."

Russ Smith

Records, streaks, and things

Records, streaks, and things.

Things existent in each phase of life.

Longest time married happily (record of five hours, six minutes held by a couple now serving time in a psychiatric ward); most dumb moves in a row by a person in office (held by an ex-president of the US), etc.

Sports also has its recorded streaks. Most wins in a row by a basketball team in the NBA (LA Lakers-33) Consequetive baseball victories in the major leagues (27, by the old N.Y. Giants, give or take a couple of games).

But it has come to the surface that there are those streaks which, although not officially recorded, should not be put into our subconscious cometery to be forever forgotten.

For those of you who might have forgotten or whose subconscious timetable of events has been in the cobwebs, consider this a quick refresher couse:

Most times choking in Super Bowl games: four — the Minnesota Vikings excel in this department, having looked pitiful each time, climaxing in the ridiculous contest last year vs. the New England Patriots well-loved Oakland Raiders.

The Vikings also hold the record in dumbest statements by a coach (one by one). Coach Bud Brant explained (in essence) — look how much money he's got because his team has been there so many times (through never coming away with an SB ring).

Funny, that's not how Viking fans feel — they'd rather see some rings on their boys' fingers than more money in their team's pockets.

Most frustrating seasons (for fans): seven straight, held by the American League Boston Red Sox between the years of 1968-74, inclusive, when the Sox couldn't buy a pennant.

During those years was an unforgettable occurance — when they ended the season a half-game back of the Detroit Tigers who had played one more game (baseball strike). The Sox had a chance still to win their flag but blew it three-quarters of the distance from third base to home plate.

And as if it's not enough, since they already hold the record, the Sox have started another bid at topping that streak.

Their 1976 season left many a disappointed fan stragging down the centerfield bleacher stairway. And then they went one step further (ignore the poor pun) and proceeded to blow the minds of thousands along the East Coast and Massachusetts by allowing fans to believe they'd make a comeback in '77 only to choke in the final month of the season.

Will they win a pennant by '84?

Will Don Zimmer ever lose weight and look like a manager?

Largest consumption of aspirin: 3,769 regular flavor, 182 orange flavored...by the Tampa Bay Buccaneers after each loss last season (only 14 straight).

Aspirin has proven ineffective enough, and the NFL Bucs are reportedly switching to a mild form of pain killer.

Unfortunately, the Bucs can't seem to remember to take the pain killers after their NFL contest and not before.

Least loyalty to a team: John Hannah-Leon Gray — one month.

These two ex-Patriots got to thinking one night after Foxboro was long locked up.

Though under contract, the two have taken upon themselves to take a hike because of a lack of enough funding.

Feeling underpaid and overworked, the teammates (or ex-teammates as they no longer are playing on a team) canceled their loyal bonds to their contracts as though they had signed them using invisible ink.

Hopefully the Pats can continue their winning ways without the loss of these loyal 'superstars.'

Biggest waterhole: The National Hockey League.

Once respected as a decent sport, with only a few teams and plenty of decent talent, the NHL has proceeded to put franchises in cities that thought a block of ice was a girl who turned down any guy that asked her to come up to his dormitory room and see his tennis trophies.

The Kansas City Scouts and Colorado Rockies are about as close to being hockey teams as the '76'ers are to baseball. I guess they really don't have to worry too much about that, though — their record could hover somewhere around 2-63-24 and they'd still make the Stanley Cup Playoffs.

Time's unbelieveable screwjobs: Tie between the following:

(A) what Larry Barnett did to the Sox the Cincinnati in '75.

(B) what refs did for USSR in basketball game vs. USA in '72 Olympics.

(C) what officials did for Oakland vs. Patriots in playoffs last year.

Fisk homer paces Sox

BOSTON [AP] — Carlton Fisk drove a three-run homer in the third inning and the Boston Red Sox held on for a 6-3 victory over the New York Yankees Monday night behind the pitching of Reggie Cleveland.

The triumph kept alive Boston's pennant hopes, enabling the Red Sox to move to within 3½ games of the Yankees in the American League East.

Fisk broke a 1-1 tie with his 24th homer, a line shot high into the screen in left. With one out, rookie Ted Cox looped a single into shallow right-center for his sixth consecutive major league hit. Jim Rice lined a single to left-center, sending Cox to second, and both runners moved up as Carl Yastrzemski grounded out.

Fisk leaned into starter Ed Figueroa's first pitch for his homer into the screen.

Dave Kingman pulled New York to within 4-3 with a pinch-hit homer in the eighth, his third in three games since being acquired by the Yankees last week. But Yastrzemski got that run back in lining his 25th homer into the center field bleachers in the Boston eighth.

Fisk followed Yastrzemski's homer with a triple to right-center and George Scott followed with an RBI single, shelling Figueroa, 15-10.

Cleveland surrendered a solo home to Thurman Munson in the first and another run on consecutive doubles by Roy White and Munson in the sixth. Then, after giving up the home run to Kingman, the Boston right-hander settled down to improve his record to 10-8.

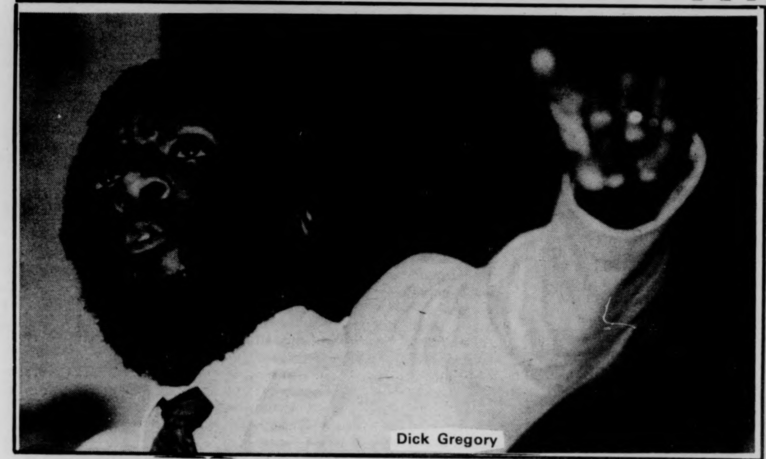
Institutionalized Racism Affects Both Whites and Blacks

Vukani Magubane



Dick Gregory

On Thursday, September 15, Dick Gregory spoke before a crowd of over 1,500 at the Fine Arts center auditorium. His talk was the first in a series of lectures sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors program.

Since his widespread popularity in the early 60's, Dick Gregory has been an outspoken and respected advocate for human rights in the United States. He has been involved in various student movements most recently in the Kent State issue. According to Gregory "The young have the power to change things". It was the young who decided to end the Vietnam war and it was the students here who led the fight to bring dignity to millions of people in South Africa. "People have an example, thanks to you." In his sharp and often humerous criticism of the American system, Gregory called for an end to the manipulation of the American people by the handful of "white super-rich pimps". He was especially hard in his attack of America's injustice to its black population. "No national group in this land could take what black folks here have taken from white folks for over 500 years." I am living in a country where the German who could have killed my daddy can come and feel more comfortable than my daddys boy." He also attacked the hypocracy involved in the Bakke case by saying "If I grew up in a land that detested segregation then I could tolerate someone getting upset with quota systems. I only asked for an equal education and you couldn't give it to me."

Dick Gregory called on both black and white students to "tell these institutions of higher learning that they exist to serve you, you don't exist to serve them." They gotta start educating you, not indoctrinating you." Institutionalized racism effects both blacks and whites.

Amidst the comedy and humor, Dick Gregory touched upon every social and political problem facing America today. America as Dick Gregory sees it, is headed for serious trouble and unless people get together and educate themselves to whats happening, we are all headed for self-destruction. Dick Gregory does not pretend to be a "prophet" as some have labelled him, but he does see himself as one person who cares and calls upon others to do the same... for humanity.

The Political Implications of the Bakke Case

The Bakke Case, a supreme court case which involves Allen Bakke, a 34 year old white man and resident of California, claims that he was unconstitutionally descriminated against because he is white, when he was denied entrance to the medical school at the University of California at Davis, while supposedly less qualified Black people and Hispanic people (oppressed Nationalities) were admitted under a special admissions program. The word "quota" is used in other articles to win sympathy for Bakke's claims.

The Bakke case is, in actuality, the tip of the iceberg, as for as attacks on the National Democratic gains of Black and other oppressed nationalities are concerned. Why? Because the United States, monopoly capitalist, imperialist system is in trouble. A world of trouble. Because of National liberation struggles of oppressed colonies, and the development of class struggle within neo-colonial states are causing the shrinkage of the U.S. world empire abroad. But in order to maintain the same level of profits the U.S. ruling class, acting through the U.S. state has found it necessary to pull back the resources (millions and millions of dollars) used for social programs and affirmative action programs. It has had to eliminate workers benefits, lay off many workers and simultaneously increase production (speed up factory and plant work) run away from those unions that are not corrupted, and begin to invest more money in its underdeveloped regions mainly the "New South."

Again concerning the Black Colony, the United States ruling class and gov't. has found our problems unsolvable and our demands unresolvable.

While large sectors of our population have constantly been held in a state of unemployment even more of our people have been thrown into this serious situation. Because of the wretched situation (poor, unemployed and landless) that our people are held in the overwhelming majority of Black people depend on Gov't. social services to say alive. This also serves to break up our families and keep us from rebelling. Cases such as the Bakke case serve as rationalizations for these attacks and cutbacks. How so? Even though there is clear evidence that Bakke is not being descriminated against (white people have been let into the school with scores lower than his).

Withing the last 2 weeks, the Carter Administration and the Justice department have thrown their support behind the contention that "racial quota" systems inherently descriminate against whites and are therefore unconstitutional. To quote the New York Times September 13, 1977 issue "...precise racial quotas amount to using race as a tool to descriminate against whiites." This means that any affirmative action or admissions programs can be viewed as "a total that descriminates against whiites."

Reverse discrimination, reverse racism, these are two of the biggest lies ever to be thrown on our people. To be racist the ruling class, gov't. and masses of a particular race must own and control institutions that create and carry out policy made in favor of their race at the detriment of other races.

Black and other oppressed nationalities in this country have no such power or the economic base to support it. This case is really just another blatent method of blaming the victim.

Other impications of this case reveal that National equality and civil rights for Black people and other oppressed, nationalities can never be a reality, or the solutions to our problems. This also implies that the viewing of racism as the main enemy of the Black people is erroneous. Racism is not only a thought process of white people it is a material benefit, that all white people benefit from. White skin privilege counts in job premotions and real estate transactions, etc..., supported by U.S. monopoly-capitalist system, the courts, and the dominant cultural superstructure. Therefore descrimination can only be ended with the "destruction of the material base of racism which can only come with the destruction of the sytem of capitalism."

Now in analyzing this in terms of classes inside of the Black colony, the Black Street force, unemployed Black workers, Black youth and tempenprolitariat have lived under these extremely miserable conditions for years.

UMass Rahman, A Critical Analysis of the Black Liberation Struggle, I.B.P.S. pg. 5.

If this attack on the social programs is successful it wil make their situation even worse. (already somewhere around 3.3 million to 3.5 million Black people are unemployed, this figure does not mention those that have given up looking for work) and the fuse will be lit.

What is also significant about this case is how will it affect the Black petty bourgeoise, who mainly because of the struggle of the 1960's have been able to ascend partly into the economic structure.

These answers we will have to wait for until the supreme court ruling.

In any case we must build a strong Revolutionary Nationalist Black Students movement to fight back against these attacks on our people.

In unity there is strength.

A History Lesson in Black Music

By KEVIN JONES

Frank Foster

September 22, 1977 — The music professors of Livingston College of Rutgers University presented a chronological history of African-American music at the Crown gymnasium at Hampshire College. The Colloqui, the President's Office and Hampshire's Afro-American Music Dept., sponsored this program which attracted a capacity crowd. Narrator Prof. Mark Crawford introduced six of today's finest musicians; Frank Foster on reeds, Larry Ridley and Vishnu Wood on double bass violin, Ted Dunbar on guitar, David Frederick Waits on multiple percussion instrument, and Kenny Barron on piano.

As Larry Ridley accompanied him on bass, Prof. Crawford explained the origins of Black Creative music. He brought the audience back in time to a village in West Africa (Nigeria). He described the importance of music in the Yoruba Nation as Master percussionist Freddie Waits performed a drum interlude in the motif of West African and Congolese rhythms.

Prof. Crawford explained the effect of slavery on the worksongs of the 1600's, pointing out that this was the beginning of Black classical music in the United States. Then, Blacks began forming their own churches and began singing spirituals. To accompany this information a trio of flute, bass and guitar played the well-known spiritual, "Nobody Knows the Trouble I've Seen."

Mr. Crawford carried the audience still further in time as he discussed music during the civil war which was the 'blues'. Blacks sang the 'blues' because they were still not free, even after the Emancipation Proclamation. Following this, the Rutgers Music Ensemble played a funky blues piece.

Supposedly, happier times came about with the 'gay nineties' and the expanding progress of Manifest Destiny. This time period gave birth to what is known as 'Ragtime; illustrated in a piano solo performed by pianist extraordinaire Kenny Barron.

In the early 1900's, Dixieland bands in New Orleans created songs like, "When the Saints go Marching In." Prof. Crawford continued his superb narration as he told of the movement of Blacks to the big cities of Chicago, Kansas City, New York. In these urban centers, 'Swing' was born, implemented by the creative efforts of big band leaders such as Count Basie and Duke Ellington.

After World War II, Benny Goodman became the "King of Swing"; Paul Whiteman was the "Father of Jazz." Black musicians began to react to whites 'stealing' their music. Musicians such as Theloniius Monk, Charlie Parker, and Kenny Clarke got together and decided that they would invent a music which no one could steal, called 'Bebop' because of its speed and complexity. 'Bebop' developed at many places in Harlem (Monroes, Minton's Playhouse etc.) where musicians thrived in a creative situation. The Livingston ensemble expressed this freedom as they kicked off a Dizzy Gillespie tune entitled 'Bebop'. No one could doubt the mastery of the musicians of the Rutgers Music Ensemble themselves as they played the music of a new era forefronted by John Coltrane. This new era does not have a name, simply because there is no one word to describe the music that Black musicians create.

As the ensemble finished out the program with 'Giant Steps', 'Naima', and 'Impressions', all by John Coltrane, one could feel the message which these six musicians had to deliver. This message was that African American Black Creative music is a music which is indigenous to our unique cultural history and any attempt to recreate this music by another cultural group and call it their own, shows a lack of respect for the Black musician.

Puerto Rico Must Be Free
Roy Brown in Concert

Roy Brown

Roy Brown, Puerto Rican cultural worker and independista, shared his musical expressions of the struggle with close to six hundred people this past Friday at UMass. The concert began a week of activities planned by the Commuter Collective, the Hispanic Council for Human Rights, and the Puerto Rican Solidarity Committee to educate the community about the Puerto Rican liberation struggle. Prof. Johnetta Cole of the Afro-American studies department spoke at the concert of the present reality in Puerto Rico: upwards of 40 per cent unemployment, 70 per cent of the families barely getting by on food stamps, 35 per cent of Puerto Rican women sterilized, 15 per cent of the land occupied by the U.S. military, 1.4 billion in profits extracted last year from Puerto Rico. The strong and powerful music of Roy Brown stated in clear terms that Puerto Rico must and will be free. Que viva Puerto Rico Libre!

All Third World Students are invited to celebrate Puerto Rico's first cry for liberation, El Grito de Lares. A dance and cultural evening is planned for Sept. 23rd at 8p.m. at Farley Lodge. This event is sponsored by the Hispanic Council for Human Rights and the Puerto Rican Solidarity Committee.

THIRD WORLD ORGANIZATIONAL FAIR AND FREE COMMUNITY DINNER

On Tuesday, September 20, 1977 the New Africa House Steering Committee is organizing and sponsoring a Third World Organizational Fair and free community dinner. The purpose of this Fair-Dinner is to bring the entire Third World community together and to recruit freshmen and upperclassmen alike into the various Third World organizations on campus.

Faced with the dilemma of limited student participation in Third World organizations, the New Africa House Steering Committee has sponsored this Organizational Fair to give students a chance to learn about, talk to and get involved with the many Third World organizations on campus. There will be speakers at the Fair representing the Asian, Latin and Black communities along with a free movie and a free dinner.

In order to make this event a success, we would like all Third World organizations to send a representative or two to this function. Tables have been set up so that each organization can give out information about its group and recruit students at the same time. We anticipate a large turnout so we would like to have all tables set up by 6:00 p.m.

The success of this program and our attempts to educate the Third World community depend upon your cooperation in making a strong community a reality. We need all the help we can get.

Where there is Unity — there is Strength.

Victory to the struggle of the South African Nationalist. On Wednesday, of this past week the Committee for the Liberation of Southern Africa won a victory for the struggle in South Africa. The organizers of the Southern Africa support Committee has been around for over one year. The victory was hard collective consisted work. There was very serious students involved with the groups work. We will be having a meeting to continue the struggle. The meeting place will be in the Collegian Thursday, Sept. 22, at 7:00. All interested people should come to this meeting. It also should be noted that the Collegian did not want to print Friday, the completed statement by the Committee for the liberation of Southern Africa to the Board of Trustees. I was one of the organizers for the Southern Africa Support Committee. The organization has been around for over one year. The victory was hard collective consisted work. The committee would like to thank all people who have supported efforts for the University to divest all its stocks in South Africa. Here is the statement read to the Trustees that aided their opinion to totally divest all of the UMass stocks out of South Africa.

STATEMENT TO THE TRUSTEES BY THE COMMITTEE FOR THE LIBERATION OF SOUTHERN AFRICA

As a representative of the C.L.S.A., I'd like to address myself to the position which you, as trustee of UMass (an equal opportunity employer), are taking in relation to our investments in corporations doing business in South Africa. We believe that your decision to review university holdings if eight of those corporations, to retain investments in five, and to divest three, is at best, a needless postponement, and at worst, an unlawful evasion of the university's legal and moral responsibilities. In answer to previous trustee statements, we do not believe that the specific practices of individual companies are a relevant issue. As the primary suppliers of critical technology and capital to the South African economy, U.S. firms operating there are actively and irreversibly involved in strengthening and perpetuating the system of apartheid which is, and has always been, the cornerstone of the South African economy. U.S. corporations' involvement in apartheid is not a matter of corporate policy, but it structurally inherent in the political and economic relations in South Africa. Therefore, we believe that in line with university regulations and our role as a promoter of social values, it is the responsibility of you, as trustees of the University of Mass., to divest all of the holdings in corporations involved in South Africa.

American corporations stress the positive advantages of the creation of jobs for some African people. They talk of training programs and workers. Today in 1977, 80 per cent of all Black South Africans live

Some U.S. companies paid as little as $40.00 a month to African equal pay. But the structure of apartheid is carefully designed to prevent equal opportunities for Black and White regardless of corporate practices. Corporate claims of reformism never speak to the fact that apartheid prevents Blacks from receiving a decent education and from organizing trade unions. It forces them to live in deprived areas, denies them any freedom of movement, or the right to vote, or to seek alternative and better employment. Government policy prohibits the ownership of land or private business by Black South Africans. The most striking example of laws that contradict such corporate promises are those that specifically prohibit Blacks from supervising any white workers. Individual attempts at equal opportunity employment are obviously futile under this system, G.M. advertises its administration of equal pay for equal work, but the government never allows equal work, so the issue of pay is irrelevant.

The spectacular economic growth of the past 20 years in S. Africa was and still is financed by foreign investment. The U.S. is the second largest investor in S. Africa, and has access to the capital and technology so desperately needed for the continuing economic expansion of the White owned and controlled economy. For a

South Africa May Not Make Atom Bomb

Although the Soviet allegation about South Africa's acquisition of an atomic bomb caused concern in many parts of Africa, the general mood was one of silence and disbelief — based not on South Africa's emphatic denial but on a better understanding of the situation.

The Soviet News Agency Tass, which broke the news on August 9 claimed that South Africa had made an atomic bomb and was about to carry out a test.

A few days later the Soviet Press was saying that thanks to the nuclear contract between South Africa and the French firm Framatone, Pretoria "was going to produce plutonium to fabircate 100 atomic bombs in the next year."

On hearing the news in Lusaka, Zambia, during his African tour, French Foreign Minister Louis de Guiringaud denounced the statements as absurd and without foundation, maintaining that the two nuclear reactors sold by France to South Africa would not go into operation until 1982.

But no sooner had the Minister arrived back in Paris than he expressed concern over evidence that he said had emerged to support the Soviet allegation. He warned South Africa of the "consequences" if it carried out tests.

However, African observers saw the Soviet allegation as not unconnected with what they call "Franco-Soviet quid pro quo bad play in African diplomacy".

The Soviets, it was believed, chose the moment of de Guiringaud's visit to Africa to make the announcement so as to embarrass the French — perhaps in retaliation for France's anti-Soviet policy in Africa, a policy clearly manifested during the recent invasion of Shaba province, in Zaire from Angola by Katangese rebels.

All in all, it paid off. In Dar-es-Salaam, de Guiringaud was given the worst reception "in all my life", which forced him to cut short his visit there, because the Tanzanian authorities refused to grant his request for an official apology.

While the French assessed the result of their shattered diplomacy there was, all the same, concern in Africa about South Africa's nuclear capability.

It is no secret that South Africa developed a technology for uranium enrichment in 1975 and that she also acquired the technical knowhow to make an atomic bomb largely as a result of six years' international espionage and perhaps the callaboration of certain Western countries.

In 1975, it was reported that a method developed by the West German scientist, Dr. E.W. Berker, which involves the forcing of uranium through the nozzle of high speed gas, was passed on to the South Africans.

Many attributed Berker's recent dismissal to his close links with the South Africans. This presumably was a move by the West German authorities to avoid embarrassment, yet the fact remains that there has been secret cooperation at the offical level between West Germany and South Africa in the nuclear field.

A handful of Africans however, who believe there are peaceful motive factors behind South Africa's quest for nuclear energy, hold that Pretoria is anxious to steer away from its heavy dependence on electricity generated in Black African states.

During Portuguese colonial days in Mazambique, South Africa helped to build the Cabora Bassa dam as a source of electricity for its industry. It also entered into a similar agreement with the Portuguese in Angola which commits it to build the connene dam to provide electricity to Ovamboland in Namibia.

South Africa's power needs in the next five years are likely to be so enormous that it might have to apply to Zaire, for example, for connection to the Inga dam and that would mean passing the cable through Zambia and either Zimbabwe or Botswana.

There are currently no threats to power from the Cabora Bassa dam, and coal remains the principal source of electricity for South African mines and industries.

All the same, South Africa's pursuit of nuclear energy as a precautionary measure has many implications.

First, it indicates that the apartheid regime does not envisage any change in its political system — a fact clearly shown in the last twelve months in spite of world pressure following the Soweto riots.

To many Africans military confrontation with South Africa is no longer merely possible but inevitable in the end and such a confrontation would be on the conventional level.

France's sale of two nuclear reactors did make Pretoria's acquisition of an atomic bomb a much more immediate possibility. Africans dislike the nipping consciousness of it and that perhaps may be the psychological effect the South Africans themselves want it to have on Black Africa.

Thus while South Africa's nuclear capacity is deplored, it is its acquisition of conventional weapons that is causing grave concern in the continent and here France stands out as an enemy. France has been noted as the principal supplier of arms to South Africa since the US and Britain began in the late Sixties to comply with the UN arms embargo.

Although France put its own embargo on air and ground weapon supplies to South Africa in 1975 and now says it would extend this to naval equipment when the last of the two submarines currently on order has been delivered in 1978, it is known South Africa can now manufacture French arms under licence.

A few weeks ago, Pretoria claimed it would soon be an exporter of arms. In the circumstances it is hard to see how relations between France and non-Francophone African states will improve. Indeed a constant reminder is the statement attributed to the then South African Defense Minister: "Where would South Africa be today without France?"

In recent weeks however, there has been a marked change in France's policy towards South Africa and this, in spite of France's post relations has been welcomed in some non-Francophone African states in that it could lead to total withdrawal of the French diplomatic support South Africa has for so long enjoyed.

De Guiringaud has already pledged that France will no longer protect South Africa from "justified condemnation" at the UN and it is porbably that South Africa's few Francophone friends like Presidents, Houphouet-Boigny of the Ivory Coast, Senghor of Senegal and Bongo of Gabon may re-appraise their policy of dialogue with South Africa — something on which they differ with many non-Francophone African heajs of State.

Victory to the Struggle

NO ARMS for APARTHEID SOUTH AFRICA

profitable business, corporations require stability in the countries in which they operate. Therefore, sound business practice requires U.S. corporations to oppose any disruption of the economy. In S. Africa this necessarily means supporting the repressive status quo.

In order to do business in S. Africa, a corporation must guarantee a given percentage of its income to the government, much of which goes to the military machine that represses all Black attempts at self rule. So, when this is recognized, that no matter what these corporations claim to practice, just through their active presence in S. Africa, they are directly supporting apartheid and the White racist economy.

These corporations are not in S. Africa to raise the African standard of living, they are big business doing just that — the biggest business possible, and apartheid is profitable. Today U.S. investments equal 2 billion in S. Africa. Rates of return on innestments are high — the world wide rate of return on U.S. investment in manufacturing is 10.8 per cent — in S. Africa the figure averages more than 18 per cent. Black-White wage gaps continue to widen. The average White worker makes 14 times as much as his-her African coworker. In 1972, only three U.S. corporations out of the 350 in S. Africa were paying their African workers above the poverty datum line. (approximately $140 a month). below the poverty level. So when we look at the returns gained from UMass' investments in 16 of these corporations, we are looking at the results of apartheid: the exploitation of the indigenous people as a cheap labor force. There is nothing in the history of S. Africa's economic development to support the argument that increasing industrialization must inevitably lead to improvement in the quality of life for everyone. The last twenty years of intensive economic growth have also been years of intensifying poverty, oppression and exploitation for Black people.

We must divest our university holdings in these corporations because they actively strengthen racism and oppression in S. Africa, and they also contradict our policies as stated in the university's "Guidelines for the Investment of the Endowment Fund".

The university will seek to invest in corporations that have a responsible posture in matters relating to: (1) the protection of the environment, (2) public health, (3) consumer protection, (4) equal employment opportunities, and (5) compliance with national and international law. The university will endeavor to take informed and ethical positions when ever it exercises its voting rights as a tock holder and may communicate directly with management when there is evidence that the corporation is not acting responsibly in the public interest. And when there is evidence that a corporation in which the university owns stock is persistently engaging in activities that grossly contrary to these guidelines, the Treasurer, after consultation with the investment counsel, will recommend the sale of that stock.

Our own criteria make these investments unacceptable from both a moral and legal point of view. And the Trustee position to retain our stocks in order to influence corporate policy through our voting rights, ignores the reality that our small holdings give us no leverage to direct or apply pressure on this multinational giants. Divestment is the only real statement available to us. Financially this divestiture will not be hazardous to the university, for it is a minimal investment, yet any holdings in corporations doing business in S. Africa support the apartheid system we all verbally deplore. Immediate and total divestment is obviously a realistic option for this uniiersity. Last month, over 50 university and church groups met at the university of California to organize their own divestment. The National Council of Churches has already divested over 10 million dollars worth of investments. Several city governments across the nation have successfully passed resolutions prohibiting city purchases from corporations working in S. Africa, such as ITT. And I have a newspaper clipping here from Wisconsin that speaks for itself.

Chancellor Bromery addresses demonstration after trustees vote to divest all South African stock.

Black South African, murdered by police, is removed by comrades. African struggle obviously affects U.S. Blacks.

MADISON, Wisconsin — In a surprise decision on May 20, the Wisconsin attorney general ruled that the University of Wisconsin's holdings in corporations in vesting in South Africa violate state law.

The ruling was based on a 1972 law that prohibits "Investments in any company, corporation, subsidiary, or affiliate which practices or condones through its actions discrimination on the basis, of race, religion, color, creed, or sex." The University of Wisconsin has $14 million invested in such corporations.

Last semester Hampshire College divested and this semester, here at UMass, student support is growing. We're collecting thousands of signatures, and there are teachins and rallies that have been widely attended in support of liberation struggles in Southern Africa.

We, the Committee for the Liberation of Southern Africa, and other members of the university community, found it quite absurd that you would go to the corporations to receive an objective view as to the corporations' own practices. And then base your decision on whether to divest or invest solely on their own response in self defense. I am sure you are aware that these corporations employ multi-million dollar public relation firms to deflect public criticism.

In answer to the corporate viewpoint we have decided to express some views of the Black South African people themselves, since democracy demands their opinions and requests be paramount. A resolution of the Black People's Convention of S. Africa atates:

"To reject the involvement of foreign investors in this exploitative economic system." Mrs. Fatima Meer of the Indian Congress of South Africa: "The apartheid government grows stronger by the day because of its solvency, which it gets from foreign investors. If the government had an economic shock, things might begin to change ... "

The late Chief Albert Luthuli, noble prize winner and president of the African National Congress: "The economic boycott of South Africa will entail undoubted hardship for Africans. We do not doubt that. But if it is a method which shortens the day of blood, the suffering to us will be a price that we are willing to pay. In any case, we suffer already, our children are often undernourished, and, on a small scale (so far) we die at the whim of a policeman."

We feel the role of the university is to educate and create a better society both on and off campus, and we resfuse to accept our contradictory participation in the blatant exploitation and denial of human rights of the peoples of South Africa. As citizens of UMass, we hold you, the Trustees of our university, responsible for the task of ending our support of the racist, settler, minority regime in South Africa. We demand that you divest all of our investments in the 16 corporations doing business in South Africa and publicize your reasons for doing so.

Lawmakers Search For Child Pornography Solution

Will Money Dictate Morality

By ABDUL SEIFULLAH and MUNIR UM'RANI

Child pornography is a tightly cloaked, multi-million-dollar racket.

By police estimates about 300,000 children nationally are sexually abused and used in porno films. Reportedly, these children are abused by a steady clientele of about 70,000 persons.

The preference seems to be for young boys, some as young as 3-years-old.

"A particular favorite source of subjects for the child abusers to draw on are the one million runaways reported each year," according to Congressman John Conyers, (D-Mich.) chairman of the House Judiciary subcommittee on Crime.

Conyers, who recently began hearings in Washington on the lucrative child porno racket, noted that many of the children, often lonely, hungry and a stranger in a new town, "are seduced with offers of friendship, money, drugs or just a good meal.

"Runaways, already disenchanged with their life-style at home, are an easy mark for persons hustling minor children for their own aberrant sexual tendencies and for the accompanying pornographic traffic in photos, films and related materials," a subcommittee release said.

Although there seems to be some Black children and adults involved in porno, the distributors and the participants are primarily middle and upper-class Caucasians.

Harold Thomas, commander of the Youth Division of the Chicago Police Department (CPD) said, "Very few black kids are involved in child pornography in the Chicago area."

He said, "The few blacks that are involved are 'regular gays' or adults. Thomas said an investigation conducted recently by his office revealed no evidence of child pornography currently in Bilalian areas of Chicago.

Robinson said when he walked a beat he would talk to the operators of porno shops to to determine the clientele.

"Most of the people I observed seemed to be middle and upper-class," Robinson said adding that he observed "doctors, lawyers, professionals and educated people.

"Some of the people involved in child pornography make million-dollar decisions every day," Robinson said.

"Black folks will take up anything that white folks do. I think that our challenge is not to be responding and reacting ... but rather to look at the strengths of the black community."

Finley said, "Black children need stable family lives or families in which they can grow up with a healthy attitude and feeling towards themselves and adults."

Dr. Na'im Akbar, prominent Bilalian, psychologist, lecturer, and author, said child pornography "shows how far out of the natural order of things that the human race has come.

"No animal in the whole animal kingdom will molest its young," Akbar said.

He said, "Psychologically it is very destructive to children — not only children involved in child pornography and abuse — because it shows a very oversexed atmosphere that is prevalent in the whole society: on television, in advertisement and everywhere. This is destructive to all of our youth."

The former head of the psychology department at Morehouse College in Atlanta, Akbar said child pornography is not prevalent in the Bilalian community.

"but if it is epidemic in the Caucasian community, I think it is just a matter of time until it becomes widespread in the Bilalian community," he said.

The noted psychologist pointed to the significant rise in the incidence of suicides committed in the Bilalian community as an example of the tendency Bilalians have to emulate "what we see the Caucasian communities doing.

"Suicide was almost unheard of in the Bilalian community ten years ago," he observed, adding that the problem of child pornography is symptomatic of the problems affecting society in general.

Carter Asks 4 in Cabinet For Jobs Plan

WASHINGTON — President Carter has set a 10-day time limit for selected members of his Cabinet to give him a report on what can be done with the Humphrey-Hawkins full employment bill "to make it work" to overcome ordered to give him the unemployment.

Ordered to give him the report so the legislation can be finalized are, Secretary of Commerce Juanita Krebs, HUD Secretary Patricia Harris, Labor Secretary F. Ray Marshall and Transportation Secretary Brook Adams.

The committee of four begins meetings with Senator Hubert H. Humphrey and Congressman Gus Hawkins immediately.

The Carter move in support of full employment legislation came Wednesday morning during a 60-minute conference in the Cabin3t Room with Congressman Parren J. Mitchell, chairman, and 12 Congressional Black Caucus.

The conference included Carter's admitting he was "horrified" at statistics released on record high unemployment among black citizens.

The accent on "what to do about the emergency" came at the insistence of the black Congressman and leaders nationwide who lambasted Carter for failing to back up his campaign promises and improve the lot of black citizens who are "always last hired and first fired."

Congressman Mitchell told the AFRO immediatly after the Black Caucus members emerged from the White House, they held an assessment meeting and agreed "Carter is clearly moving in the direction we want him to go, toward full employment legislation.

Mitchell said, "The recent figures on black unemployment caused the president to shift closer to the position we want.

"He said he wants to meet with the Caucus on a regular basis and suggests that the next meeting take place within two or three weeks.

"This will be after he gets the report from his Cabinet.

The Cabinet members will examine the whole of the economy because as Carter said, we can not make a piece-meal approach to unemployment. We must see how we can get the entire economy moving again."

Later Mitchell said the President expects criticism from the Black Caucus; the criticism has been valid and he expects it to continue.

Mitchell quotes Carter as saying it is his long desire and wish to work in partnership with the Congressional Black Caucus.

Mitchell also quotes Carter as admitting full employment had not previously been a priority of his administration but because of the state of the economy and the statistics released last week on black unemployment, the situation now has a high administration priority.

The Wednesday emergency meeting at the White House followed on a late night meeting the day before, when the Caucus decided to question Carter about his over-all plan and approach toward improving the economic situation of large cities.

Definite answers were asked on "What specific action will you take to lead us to full employment. What is your time table?"

Mitchell said the Caucus decided to call on all communities to immediately round up citizens for "putting pressure on the White House, mayors, governors and manpower programs for jobs for us."

He said the Caucus is calling for coalitions of ministers, labor, NAACP and Urban League chapters, students and all groups "to keep the pressure on" until we get jobs.

Mitchell said the Black Caucus notes that black unemployment by official figures was 40.4 per cent in August, 1977.

The Caucus told President Carter: "Far too many black families live in urban slums and rural shacks.

"We must eliminate income and unemployment disparities which continue to exist for black Americans.

"Government intervention can do for black citizens and the poor what it has done for the wealthier through the tax system and direct aid to business through grants and contracts.

"The President must assume the moral leadership of the War on Joblessness and federal machinery and private mechanism must be put into place toward implementation of a full employment economy.

"Heads of major federal departments, leaders from the black community, corporate executives, labor leaders, religious leaders, mayors and governors must be brought together under the leadership of the President to plan and coordinate all efforts to attain full employment."

Both Mitchell and Rev. Augustus Hawkins, D-Calif., co-sponsor with Senator Hubert Humphrey of the Humphrey-Hawkins Full Employment Bill said Carter is moving closer to support of the measure.

others of the 16-member Congressional Black Caucus.

Busing Protests Curbed in Chicago

CHICAGO, Sept. 14 [UPI] — The police started a get-tough policy today against demonstrators at schools involved in the city's voluntary school busing program.

And a circuit Court judge ordered the Chicago Board of Education to stop the transfer of 270 teachers in a faculty desegregation plan designed to meet Federal desegregation guidelines.

Under the new police policy, demonstrators will be allowed only across the street from the schools. More than 100 persons demonstrated peacefully today at four schools involved in the southwestern part of Chicago.

The new policy began after 300 Bogan High SChool students were suspended for walking out of school yesterday to protest the busing program. Thirty-three protesters were arrested for refusing to disperse, the police said.

Bused to White Schools

Black and Hispanic children are being transported from crowded inner-city schools to largely white schools in the southwestern part of the city. The program began with the opening of classes last Wednesday.

Joseph Hannon, the Superintendent of Schools, ordered the students who walked out yesterday to be suspended for three school days.

A policeman [illegible] a demonstrator at Bogan High School in Chicago yesterday.

"A bunch of young thugs and hoodlums are about to take over the streets," James Rochford, the Police Superintendent, said at a news conference. "Public safety is my responsibility, and the events of the last couple of days have caused a change in our strategy."

The police have also increased patrols in troubled areas and will strictly enforce the city curfew, barring persons under the age of 17 from the streets after 10:30 p.m. Mr. Rochford siad.

Preliminary Injunction

Judge Francis T. Delaney issued a preliminary injunction against the faculty transfer plan. He ordered the school board to return teachers to their original assignments.

The judge said there had not been enough testimony to show how the transfers affected the racial composition of teachers in both sending and receiving schools.

The suit was filed by the Chicago Teachers Union and five of the 270 teachers who were transferred because their previous schools were overstaffed.

The teachers were part of a group of 2,212 teachers reassigned in a plan adopted by the board last May after a Federal administrative law judge threatened to withhold $85 million in Federal aid unless faculty desegregation guidelines were met.

The union said the teacher transfers violated their seniority rights.

Foes Shot While Amin Rests From Surgery

NAIROBI, Kenya — Ugandan President Idi Amin was recovering from a brief operation late last week, as 15 of his foes were executed at a public square in Kampala, the Ugandan capital.

There had been reports of his being in a coma following the surgery, but that apparently was not true.

In Bonn, West Germany, one government source said, "If there was anything to that (coma) story, (our) embassy in Kampala would have sent us a cable. An awful lot of fanciful stories about Uganda have originated from Kenya lately."

Amin left Kampala Hospital last week following a very short operation during which he never lost consciousness.

The official, reached by telephone from Nairobi, said Amin had left the hospital for "security reasons" and went to an island in Lake Victoria.

Radio Kampala reported that Amin underwent an operation Sept. 7 for an undisclosed ailment and later denied clemency for 15 persons to be executed in public by firing squad today.

[illegible]

was through.

While there was no official ex-

Western residents of the capital said a film of the operation was shown on Uganda television the night of Sept. 8. The surgery incision on the back of Amin's neck, they said. Amin was seen to get up and walk away from the operating table when the doctor reported lasted a matter of minutes and Amin was conscious throughout.

The surgery consisted of a small planation of Amin's apparent disappearance since his surgery, western observers noted the unpredictable Ugandan away from public view, especially at times of crisis.

A firing squad executed the 15 Ugandans whom Amin denied clemency. They were blindfolded and tied to trees in a public square before thousands of spectators. Amin warned later that anyone who opposed him "is actually committing suicide."

The shots were heard ringing all over Kampala," one diplomat in the Ugandan capital reported.

The men feel dead in a single volley from the firing squad, according to the diplomats.

The diplomats in Kampala said the square around the clock tower began filling up with spectators early in the day and eventually the crowd swelled to "several thousand" jammed together to watch the spectacle.

News of the executions was read on the main evening television news program. Kampala Radio made only passing references to the shootings and said the 15 were executed as a "legitimate measure to maintain public order."

Affirmative Action

By BARRY ADAMS

Affirmative action very rarely works effectively; partly, because third world groups, Blacks, and women, who are supposed to directly benefit from federal affirmative action regulations, have little or no input into the actual affirmative action mechanism.

Laws have already been enacted for the provision of equitable minority enrollment, employment, and advance within a given framework, but loopholes, and various interpretations of legislation may allow certain others to side-step and to ignore affirmative action regulations. So, it's up to us to see that 'affirmative action' operates in our best interests by taking a look at everyday situations and participating in the 'affirmative action' process.

Here, at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst, we can observe the number of minority students in our classes to-and-from lectures, in specific academic programs, and major fields of interest. It's important to question whether or not the enrollment and advancement of minority students in Sociology, Psychology, Mathematics, English, Legal Studies, Public Health, Engineering, Afro-American Studies, Business Administration, Chemistry, Zoology, Education, Pre-med, and other major fields of interest reasonAbly reflect the need for the above kinds of expertise in Third World communities within Massachusetts and throughout the country. We should become more involved in recruiting students, faculty, and employees (including administrators), so that 'affirmative action' can work more effectively to benefit those who are supposed to benefit from affirmative action legislation.

Although UMass, Amherst has done comparatively well with the implementation of affirmative action regulations, there's still considerable room for improvement. But it is extremely important for us to become actively involved in the 'affirmative action' implementation process, so that issues, such as those raised in the Bakke-California Supreme Court — "medical school" case, and legal misinterpretation of affirmative action legislation will not stifle the progress of the Third World community, Blacks, and women with respect to getting an equal share of the resources.

Kent State Unrest

Kent State May 4, 1970, four students were shot dead and nine others wounded by National Guardsmen during a massive demonstration against the Vietnam war.

Kent State May 4, 1977 — seven years to the day after the shootings thousands of students begin a fierce struggle against the building of a gym. A gym that the Kent State Administration intends to build right on the site where the four students were killed, destroying the hill and burying — these murders and all they represent. Since May 4th students have occupied the hill where the murders took place, setting up a tent city. Hundreds have been arrested. The battle has gone on, on the hill, in the courts, and it still continues today. The University hoped to start construction over the summer when all the students were gone. But construction was halted all summer as each demonstration forced court orders against construction. And last Sunday, September 11, as the last court injunction was lifted, giving the go ahead to the bulldozers, 500 students from Kent and campuses around the country demonstrated at Kent giving a powerful indication that the struggle is far from over and that a new wave of it has begun.

Even though the courts have finally ruled in favor of the gym, the demonstration on September 11, gave this message: "We can't abide by a decision of the same courts that let the murderers of Kent — Gov. Rhodes of Ohio and General Delcorso, who ordered the shootings, go free. And even if construction begins the fight isn't over. We'll move it brick by brick to another site!"

And last September 11 these words were put into action as the five hundred demonstrators tore down the fences surrounding the site and took over the hill for 15 minutes, giving a taste of what's to come this September 24.

September 24. That's the day when the May 4th Coalition at Kent State University is calling on students all over the country to join students at Kent in a demonstration of thousands that will take back the site for good.

The Revolutionary Student Brigade, part of the May 4th Coalition at Kent State, is working on campuses across the country to bring students to Kent on the 24th.

What's Behind the Gym?

What's behind all this? Why are the Trustees, the government, the police, and the courts so determined to build the gym on this site?

Is is the cost of moving as they often claimed? No — its already cost them more trying to crush the struggle than it would to move the gym.

Is it the lack of land? No. The University purchased 17 acres of land away from the site of the shootings 10 years ago — expressly for this gym.

So what's going on? Why are they determined to build the gym — and why are thousands of students determined to stop it?

Because Kent State and Jackson State (where 10 days after Kent two Black students were gunned down) stand as a reminder of a time when the rulers of this country desperately want to cover up. They don't want to be reminded of the bloody war they launched against the Vietnamese. A war they tried to pass off on us as "defending democracy" which millions came to see for what it was. Many were beginning to see the real cause of it — the whole rotten system of imperialism under which the Rockefellers and Morgans drive us off to war to save their power and profits.

They don't want to be reminded of how people by hundreds and thousands militantly fought to end the war and went up against those that caused it. In fact, they want to forget the whole period of the 60's and early 70's that Kent State symbolizes. This was a time of tremendous upheaval and social movements — the Civil Rights movement, Black Liberation, and anti-war movement. The problem stood out, the lines were drawn, the sides were clear. And people stood up and rocked the country with their struggle against discrimination and the war of agression.

And they want us to forget their vicious response to protest. The shootings at Kent were not "accidents". These murders were exactly what the rich in the country wanted as a response to the rebellion sweeping the country.

This is why they want to stamp out the lessons of Kent and Jackson State. And then they dare to call the demonstrators who want to move the gym — "rabble-rousers living in the past". But if Kent is relevent only to the past, then what are they afraid of?

The truth is that when they're saying "build the gym" they are saying "forget the past". "It was a bad time. We need to heal the wounds and reunify the country. Things have changed."

But this is all a lie to save their own skins. And the lie rings out with every worker that is thrown out onto the street because a boss couldn't make a profit off his work. And a lie rings out with every attack we face on our schools, our hospitals, and every last thing we need to survive, because for the banks, investing in the cities it isn't profitable. And a lie rings out for Blacks and minorities as they here promises and laws of equality but face worsening discrimination everywhere, finding it harder and harder to survive. And a lie rings out in Southern Africa, Chile, the Mideast, where the U.S. capitalists hunger for profit, and war looms again in the future. And our rich rulers plea for "national unity" in the face of problems is just another lie when you think about its millions of us who do all the sacrificing and a handful of them who rake in the billions.

The lessons of Kent State stand out for us to grab onto and use to build the struggles we face today. We can't let them bury the memory of Kent State. It stands as a symbol of a time when the lines were drawn, the sides were clear, and people stood up and fought against what was wrong. And the profit-hungry system that people began to learn about in the 60's is still here. It hasn't changed its nature and we face its problems everyday.

"National Unity" isn't what we need. It's what they need to support their attacks. We need to draw the lines, and declare the two sides. And we need to call out our rulers and their system and decide that we can never stand in "national unity" with them and that we need to struggle against them every day.

Fellow students! The bulldozers are moving on the site where four students were murdered. With this gym they're trying to crush the spirit of Kent and Jackson State. We have to move that gym! We have to preserve that site, as it is, and remember what happened. We have to shine the light on our proud past so that it can illuminate the path to the future.

Come to Kent State SEPT 24 move the gym.

Moral Decadence of Society

Karien Zachery

The major and national focus in dealing with the moral decadence of society right now is on child pornography. "A multi-million dollar racket" and among the most morally destructive forces in society, child pornography has demanded more attention from public officials and aware citizens than World War II. If the masses realized the rapid moral and mental death society is coming to, pornography being one of its worst enemies, a major panic would sweep the country overnight.

Over 300,000 children a year are abused in the propagation of pornography, some as young as 3 and 4 years old. Where are the laws and leaders that protect society against such influences?

"Although there seems to be some Black children and adults involved in porno, the distributors and the participants are primarily middle and upper class Caucasians. Some of the people involved in child pornography make million-dollar decisions everyday," Renault Robinson said, executive director of the Afro-Americans Patrolmens League. (AAPL)

It's quite clear in which direction this "White Supremist" orientated society is growing or declining. With our only future, the youth, being mentally destroyed by an oversexed society, there is little hope for the survival of this culture.

As the production of sexually suggestive entertainment steadily increases, Western culture will soon produce a nation of unbalanced sexcrazed youth, totally destructive to humanity.

Child pornography, rape, incest, sexual mutilation and abuse, sodomy, adultery, fornication... all constituents of the World Society of today and major causes for its rapidly growing moral decadence. Western culture is well known for its many different forms of pornography, for its number of invented sexual devices, for its number of Farrah Fawcetts and "Playboy" contestants, more so than its recognition for the number of diseases cured or its methods of wiping out crime and molesting of its youth.

She was also seen in the annual Jabberwock Shows sponsored by the Delta Sigma Theta Sorority.

After receiving her Bachelor Degree in Speech Therapy in 1963 from Ohio University in Athens, Ohio, she became the wife of Nelson Stevens. They lived then in Cleveland, Ohio, where Lynn was employed as a speech therapist by the Cleveland Board of Higher Education. Later she and her husband attended Kent State University where she received her Master's Degree in Communication and he in Art. Now a family with son, Marc, they moved to Dekalb, Illinois, where Nelson taught Art at the Illinois North University. In 1972, they moved to Amherst, Massachusetts, where Nelson became Art Professor and Lynn, Professor in Communications, and decided to get her Doctorate in that field. Had she not become seriously ill in November, 1975, she would have received it in June, 1977.

She is the daughter of Matthew L. Fairfax and the late Bobbie Baker Fairfax. She is survived by her husband, Nelson Stevens, and eight year old son, Marc, and father, Matthew Fairfax.

From the poem-
Some Time At Eve

... A few who have watched me sail away will miss my craft from the busy bay;
Some Friendly barks that were anchored near,
Some loving souls that my heart held dear,
In silent sorrow will drop a tear —

But I shall have peacefully furled my sail

In moorings sheltered from storm or gale,
And greeted the friends who have sailed before
O'er the Unknown Sea to the Unseen Shore.

"And to the Republic for which it stands ... one nation, under God, indivisible ... with liberty and justice for all." This quote obviously taken from the "Pledge of Allegiance" to America, is perhaps better known as "the American dream," as we have so often heard of. For it has yet to even resemble a reality. The mere thought of America distributing true liberty and justice to all, is truly in itself a rather far fetched idea. Not only is it your dream that you would be liberal and just. America. All of us who are not native born Americans wish to God ... that you were liberal and just.

Due to the injustice the American system is built on, over half of its population, who are not white and not of European heritage, are always either misrepresented or not represented at all.

To the Third World community ... this is not your country. And the American system of government was not structured to protect and develop Third World people. If we do not represent ourselves within this country, we will continue to either be misrepresented or not represented as being a "living" body of people. "Living" in the sense that there is definite positive motion within our community. We cannot look to the media of this country to work in our favor, when the oppressed population is the strength of this country.

The media is the most vast and widespread means of communication available. It is America's vital source of control over the masses. In being so, it is crucial that we as Third World oppressed and misrepresented people organize and represent ourselves. If we fail to fulfill our own responsibilities we cannot blame America for our conditions.

The media of Third World people on the campus of UMass urges the support of all Third World students. If we don't support ourselves, we will continue to be looked upon as a lifeless, leaderless, powerless, body of people ... and we will be treated as such. Our immediate organization is crucial for our survival in this country. In hopes perhaps that we will "crown thy good with brotherhood, from sea to shining sea."

Lance asked official for "clear record"

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Bert Lance personally asked a federal banking official to lift a disciplinary action against his family-owned bank last November so he would have a "clear record" when he became budget director, according to new testimony revealed Tuesday.

The written testimony from an attorney in the comptroller of the currency's office conflicted with sworn statements by Lance and Donald Tarleton, the banking official who lifted the disciplinary action 11 days before Lance's appointment was announced last Dec. 3.

In the testimony — given under oath to the Internal Revenue Service — attorney Michael Patriarca said Tarleton recalled Lance saying: "Jimmy Carter wants me to be the head of the CMB and I want to go into it with a clear record, so I just wondered if you could see your way clear to lift the agreement on Calhoun First National Bank."

Patriarca's statement also indicated that Lance — after making a request on behalf of his bank — told Tarleton to come to him if he ever found anything in government that was not "right."

Patriarca said he did not hear Lance's comments personally, but was informed of them by Tarleton during a dinner conversation in February.

The attorney's testimony was made public by the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, which said it received the document from the IRS yesterday morning. The committee completed nine days of public hearings on the Lance affair Monday.

Patriarca told IRS agents he and Tarleton discussed Lance on Feb. 23 in Cye's Rivergate Restaurant in Miami.

Patriarca said Tarleton swore him to secrecy and he agreed "he would treat their discussion confidentially." He said he "did not come forward" sooner with the information because of his pledge to Tarleton.

"His decision to divulge this information voluntarily to IRS investigators was prompted by the fact that testimony before the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee did not accord with the information Mr. Tarleton had previously told him," the IRS report said.

The date of the Lance-Tarleton meeting was not included in Patriarca's testimony to the IRS. But a spokesman for the Governmental Affairs Committee said it occurred Nov. 22, 1976.

Students to attempt state lobby

By CHARLOTTE TRENCHARD
Collegian Staff

In a fourth attempt to organize a state wide unit lobby for students, 16 out of 30 invited state schools showed up for this year's first Mass. State Student Association (MSSA) conference held here in the Campus Center this past Sunday.

It was an extremely encouraging turn out," said Jon Hite, co-president of Student Government Association, "The schools responded on very short notice, and that's probably why more didn't show up.

"Anytime you can get 16 people up here on a Sunday afternoon, you know you're making progress. We're expecting even more people to show up when we meet again at Bunker Hill Community College on Oct. 9 to discuss a constitution for the MSA," Hite said.

The keynote speaker of the conference was Rep. James G. Collins (D-Amherst) vice chairperson of joint committees on education. Collins urged students to unite and offered his assistance if students need help.

Representatives then discussed the problems of student trustees, how they could increase voter registration among students, and a bill proposed by Secretary of Education Paul Parks, which calls for "vertical integration."

If the proposal is adopted, the state would be divided into five geographical regions, schools would then be forced to compete against each other for state funds.

"It's not a good plan," stated Pinky Batiste, also co-president of the SGA. "We asked people what they thought of the proposal and nobody was in favor of regional segregation. Reorganization is badly needed, it's just a matter of finding the right plan."

The three previous attempts at forming a statewide student lobby all folded after minor successes said Hite. The first tried to combine public and private schools and didn't work because the interests of the two were not the same he said. The second failed because it was too radical, and the third folded due to lack of interest, Hite said.

This time it can work, according to Hite, but it's going to take commitment, money, and hard work.

"If we get together, we could have a very powerful lobby," Hite said. "There are 99,000 full-time students and some 30,000 part-time students enrolled in state institutions of higher education. When 99,000 people are talking, someone is listening. Students can no longer afford the luxury of not having a lobby in legislature."

Attending schools included representatives from North Adams State, Greenfield Community College, Westfield State, Springfield Tech., Holyoke Community, Fitchburg State, Worcester State, Framingham State, North Shore Community, Salem State, UMass Boston, UMass Amherst, Bunker Hill Community, Mass. Bay Community, Southeastern Massachusetts University, and Mass. Maritime Academy.

Unionists see hope in Bromery

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

Students involved in the unionization effort said yesterday in a hastily called meeting they were encouraged by Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery's remarks at the Conference on Student Empowerment this past weekend.

Bromery said students should examine the "mechanism that now exists" for student action before changing it. Jim Starr of the Legal Services Office said he felt Bromery was "raising problems, saying here's what I think you should look at."

Starr said he found Bromery's tone more encouraging than when the chancellor spoke at the last unionization conference "one or two years ago." He said Bromery was then saying it wouldn't work.

Michael Pill of the Campus Center Board of Governors was not pleased with the chancellor's suggestion that students turn to the present system of governance to bring about their wishes.

"Chancellor Bromery has a lot of chutzpah pointing to the existing governance system when he has been deliberately avoiding and ducking the existing system. He has gall to point to that as an alternative."

The chancellor had also said that labor unions can bargain only for wages, hours and conditions. Starr said Bromery "didn't point out that frequently other things are bargained for which are optional."

One of the options open to students is to press the legislature to recognize a union of students, which was suggested at the conference by Bromery. "He made it sound like it was the only one (option)," Starr said.

Starr called this "a typical managerial argument with organizers; what we have now works or what you want is difficult to obtain". Starr said students also had the options to negotiate contracts on different levels of the University; with the department heads, for example.

Another option, he said, would be for students to convince trustees to negotiate in campuswide contracts each year. These contracts would cover issues such as tuition and the date of the first day of classes.

Chapman wins Northampton mayor race

By JOE MAGLITTA
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — The city has a new mayor today.

Harry S. Chapman Jr. 39, edged David W. Cramer in a primary election yesterday to win his first two-year term in office. "I'm just elated, I just don't know what to say," Chapman told the Collegian last night.

Since no Republican or Independent candidates ran in the mayoral race, top Democratic vote-getter Chapman won the position.

Six other city races were also decided yesterday because only Democrats appeared on the ballot. Eight remaining contests will be decided in a November election.

With all 14 wards in, Chapman collected a total of 1986 votes; Cramer had 1811 votes; George D. Tobin, 60, owner of a Florence construction firm placed third with 1648 votes. UMass student Jonathan Roche finished a distant fourth with 284 votes.

The city clerk reported 5,877 of the city's 14,000 registered voters turned to vote in the cold rains yesterday.

UMass chemist John H. Matteson, 47, was soundly defeated in his third bid for the Ward 5 council seat by a 679-190 margin. John E. Fitzgerald Jr. will fill the seat vacated by a retiring council president.

Two at large school committee seats were decided from among three candidates.

Christine F. Grab, 19, a Smith College economics major, edged out UMass philosophy professor Robert P. Wolff, 43, on a 2,522-2,491 vote. Top vote-getter John D. Lawlor, 46, lead the group with 3271 votes.

Chapman, an unsuccessful candidate against Cramer in 1975, in recent weeks had openly criticized Cramer for letting the city "drift". He charged that Cramer had failed to provide the city with any direction during his two year administration.

Cramer also called for the resignation of Police Chief James J. Whalen following recent departmental troubles. Last week a city patrolman was arrested on theft and federal firearms charges, and another discharged for the use of unnecessary force. Another patrolman was handed a temporary suspension Monday for the reckless operation of a police cruiser.

Chapman said last night he didn't know how much of a role police department disturbances played in his election.

Cramer said last night, "I called (Chapman) and wished him the best of luck. I told him I would be glad to help in the transition period." He declined further comment.

SWA turns down Kent State money

By MATTHEW KOVARY
Collegian Staff

The SouthWest Assembly (SWA) last night defeated a motion to allocate $250 for student transportation to Kent State to protest the construction of a gymnasium on the site of the May 4, 1970 student killings, according to Diana Fessenden, president of the SWA.

Chuck Pooler, of the Revolutionary Student Brigade, defended the bill before the vote saying, "Over half of the 91 students who signed up for the trip to Kent State Friday were from SouthWest."

Mark Cavanaugh, former communications coordinator for the SWA, spoke against the bill saying, "If the supporters feel as strongly as they say they do, they should be happy to spend $10 or $15 for transportation to Kent State. I really don't think it's a good idea for the assembly to set a precedent of funding non-SouthWest groups."

Fessenden expressed dismay with the assembly's decision after the meeting. "Although the money wouldn't have been spent in SouthWest, it still would affect the lives of the students. The Kent State administration is trying to pull the wool over it's students eyes, and the UMass administration could try the same thing," she said.

Bruce Berkowitz, vice president of the SWA, was also upset with the vote. "Since the assembly frequently deals with moral issues and since we are trying to foster a more humanistic atmosphere in SouthWest, I feel it's our duty to allocate funds for the trip, he said.

The motion to fund $250 for bus transportation to Kent State Friday was defeated 7-11 on a roll call vote.

Yom Kippur

Today is holiest Hebrew day

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

Beginning at sundown tonight, Jews the world over will observe Yom Kippur, the day of atonement, the holiest day in the Hebrew calendar.

"Yom Kippur is marked by refraining from material comforts such as eating, drinking and washing from sundown to sundown to bring out the essential goodness that is in man through abstinence and prayer," said Rabbi Israel Derren of Amherst's Chabad House on 30 North Hadley Rd.

The evening service tonight, called Kol Nidre, refers to vows made between man and God and asks for annulment of these vows and is likened to a legal document. When read, three people stand with the torah (five books of Moses) representing a court of law or a Beth Din.

Rabbi Derren cautions, "Kol Nidre is only for transgressions between man and God, for those between man and man Yom Kippur will bring no attonement unless the injured party is appeased and forgives the transgressor."

During the following day, the general theme of the prayers are regret and repentance for the past years actions, but no matter what point a person is in his or her life, they can always turn back to the true goodness that is in one, Derren said.

"The concept of the day of atonement is characterized not as much through repentance, but rather return," Derren said.

The closing prayers, known as the Ne'ila, refers to the closing of the heavenly gates that were particularly open and receptive to prayer on Yom Kippur, and as such, close and complete that particular period of the year, Derren said.

Rabbi Derren added a historical note explaining why Yom Kippur is observed at all, and said on the first Yom Kippur the Israelites were pardoned by God from the sin of the Golden Calf and that day has been known as the day of atonement ever since.

On campus, services will be held in the Student Union Ballroom tonight at 7, tomorrow at 10 a.m. and Ne'ila at 5:30 p.m. followed by a break the fast snack.

More traditional services will be held at Chabad House, tonight at 7 and tomorrow at 10:30 a.m. with dinner at 8:15 p.m.

PIRG launches phone petition

By BRAD GOVERMAN
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG) launched its "Phone Fighter Campaign" today, to establish a special Telephone Consumers' Action Group (TELCAG) through the initiative petition process.

Hundreds of students from 18 colleges affiliated with MassPIRG will begin gathering 90,000 signatures, of which 57,000 must be certified and sent to Secretary of State Paul Guzzi by Dec. 7. From there the petition is sent to the legislature where it is enacted as law or placed as a referendum question on the November, 1978 ballot.

The drive by MassPIRG to establish TELCAG was further bolstered by an updated report on New England Telephone Co. (NET) released exclusively to the Collegian last night.

According to the 49 page report, in one year, "Massachusetts consumers have been socked for 80 million more dollars in additional telephone rate increase allowance".

The report explained that rate hikes for residential service users are subsidizing the marketing of expensive business communication equipment that is underpriced for competitive reasons. The report also indicated that since 1970 rates for noncompetitive residential service increased 193 per cent while rates for competitive business equipment increased 84 per cent.

In response to a preliminary report bearing similar statistics NET called the charges "hogwash".

The update report also warned of service representatives using hard sell tactics to push three-phone packages and giving customers misleading information about cheaper service options.

Another report on the results of a MassPIRG survey conducted last March charged NET with conducting "predatory and unauthorized billing practices". The survey reveals that NET "is billing thousands of residential customers who own their own phone (one not bought from NET) a $1.50 monthly charge, despite the fact no Department of Public Utilities (DPU) tariff or regulation authorizes such practice". All charges made to NET customers must be cleared by the DPU.

According to Stephen Morgan, executive director of MassPIRG, customers have reported being "threatened with service discontinuance" if they question the legitimacy of the $1.50 charge.

NET called the charges of the March survey "just another sham" and "a blatant attempt to gain publicity and no notoriety."

But in an April 29 meeting between representatives of MassPIRG and NET, Morgan proved the results of the March survey by phoning randomly customer service representatives, both of whom quoted the $1.50 unauthorized monthly charge. Morgan also released to NET representatives at the April 29 meeting

Red Cross still needs blood

By FIFI BALL
Collegian Staff

"A much higher percentage of the population at UMass are potential blood donors than the general population, because of age; because everybody's healthier here," said Jane Murphy, director of Donor Recruitment for the University.

The Northeast Regional Red Cross Blood Program, for whom Murphy works, has moved its UMass headquarters from the Health Services Building to the Public Health Building, room N344.

The Center here is "the only permanent center on a college campus in the northeast region," said Murphy. Their hours are expanded this year also to Tuesdays and Thursdays from 5-9:30 p.m., and Wednesdays from 2-8 p.m.

This week the Collegian is sponsoring a blood drive, for the third consecutive semester. Last year, Murphy said, "there was always room for more" at the center. Walk-ins are always welcome though it's more efficient to make an appointment, said Murphy Donating blood usually takes about one hour.

To make an appointment to give blood today or tomorrow, come down to the Collegian business office and sign up.

"People who've never given before shouldn't be scared away," said Murphy. "It's not a difficult thing. It makes you feel good."

To give blood you must be in good physical health, weigh atleast 110 pounds, have eaten a well-balanced meal within four hours before donating, and be between 17 and 66 years of age.

The Red Cross doesn't make a profit at all on the blood you give, said Murphy. They sell it to hospitals at their cost.

The Red Cross has a new system whereby every Massachusetts resident, no matter where they are in the country when they need it, is guaranteed blood.

The Northeast Regional Red Cross Blood Program services more than 220 hospitals in Maine and Massachusetts. Last year the Red Cross collected about 360,000 pints in this region while local hospitals needed more than 400,000.

Two years ago, in the UMass center's first year of operation, about 1100 pints of blood were collected. Last year it was 1547, and this year, because of this increase in the number of hours the center is open, an increase is again expected.

Five centers help women

By DEBBIE GRAFF
Collegian Staff

Every year there are rapes on this campus. And every year there are many women with drug or alcohol related problems. But none of these people have to handle their problems alone, because at UMass there are five women's centers all ready and able to help out.

There is a women's center in every residential area on campus, each providing a counseling service for any women with just about any problem. Whether you just want to talk about something personal, or be referred somewhere for specialized help, the women's center is the perfect place to go, according to counselors at Northeast-Sylvan Women's Center.

Each center has a library, with room to read and relax. They have a wide selection of books ranging from feminism to health to women's history.

The women's centers also hold workshops in various dorms at different times. These workshops are on many diverse subjects such as non-competitive games, male-female relationships, contraceptives, and natural childbirth. Many of them include films, guest speakers, discussions, and of course, refreshments, according to Marielizabeth LeBlond, a counselor at the Northeast-Sylvan Area Women's Center.

The Northeast-Sylvan Area Women's Center offers colloquia on several different topics including assertiveness training, women's health issues, self-help, and consciousness raising. The Orchard Hill Women's Center will be offering a three-credit course during the spring semester on assertiveness training and leadership skills. Some of the centers hold coffeehouses throughout the year featuring female musicians.

The Northeast-Sylvan Area Women's Center has been in operation for about four years now, and provides counseling for drug and alcohol abuse, peer sex education, human awareness, academics, rape, and lesbian counseling.

But even with all the activities offered there, it is difficult to get students to work at the women's center. It seems as though it's hard for students to commit themselves, said LeBlond but the hours of the women's Centers are flexible, so anyone interested in working at one should look into it. Certain centers have both day and night hours.

Next week there will be coffeehouses held in each dorm of the Northeast-Sylvan Area by their own women's center, to acquaint women with some of the counselors and to announce what some of this year's plans are, LeBlond said at yesterday's meeting.

Yanowitch to resign

By DAN HUSE
Collegian Staff

Student Attorney General Paul Yanowitch will submit his resignation effective Oct. 5, to the Undergraduate Student Senate at their meeting tonight. Applications for the attorney general position will be accepted until noon Sept. 26.

The Student Government Association co-presidents will appoint a nine member Search Committee, to be approved by the senate, which will review the applications and recommend three candidates to be attorney general. Of these three the co-presidents will choose one, to be approved by the senate.

At tonights meeting, the senate will consider a motion to allocate funds for the transportation of a group of students to Kent State University. The purpose of this trip is to join in a nationwide protest against the construction of a gym on the site where four students were killed by the National Guard in May, 1970.

The senate will also vote on a resolution to extend the selection process for boards and committees to include the entire Coordinating Committee. Up to now, selection for these positions was carried out solely by the office of SGA president. The intent of the resolution is to make the selection process "more participatory and decentralized".

In other business, the senate will consider the establishment of a Collective Bargaining Committee. The purpose of this committee would be to select a candidate for the position of Undergraduate Student Observer at the bargaining sessions between the faculty union and the administration. The committee would also create a Negotiating Sub-committee to represent students in the event of negotiations between students and other parties on a University wide level.

Student senate elections for the upcoming year will be held on Sept. 26 and 27. The deadline for submitting nomination papers is noon Thursday.

People's Alliance to protest Bakke decision

By CAROLYN GUERRA
Collegian Staff

The People's Alliance (formerly The Fourth of July Coalition) will hold a meeting tonight at 7:30 at 21 Market Street, Northampton, to form a coaltion to overturn the Bakke decision, stemming from a recent case questioning admissions policies of universities, appealed to the Supreme Court by the University of California at Davis, California.

A spokesperson for the proposed coalition said the theme behind dissatisfaction with the lower court's decision is the idea of institutionalized racism, a term denoting the fact that discrimination has been so accepted for many years in American institutions that it is a very real part of the institutions.

The University of California at Davis Medical School was one such institution until the Affirmative Action (government) program was created. This program recruited the participation of institutions of higher learning to enroll a certain number or "quota" of minority students, said the spokesperson.

UC Davis Medical School, in its first couple of years on existance, is purported to have only accepted three minority students out of 87 admissions. A study by the Association of American Medical Colleges, research has shown, states blacks who had successfully completed the first two years of medical school had lower Medical College Admission Test (MCAT) scores than whites who had not made it through. Bakke claims discrimination because — the Affirmative Action Program having been expanded at UC Davis — some of the 16 minority students accepted to the program in 1974 were "less qualified" than him.

Bakke is a 37-year-old engineer. He applied twice unsuccessfully to the UC Davis Medical School; once in 1973 and again in 1974. The discrimination suit filed in 1974 came to a conclusion in 1976 when the California Supreme Court ruled in favor of Bakke for his discrimination charges of "reverse racism" in the admissions policies of the medical school.

Reverse racism is a term used to describe a way of looking at the compensating civil rights programs established in education, housing and related areas of constitutional rights during the 16 geared to assist black Americans. The coalition spokesperson attributes the trend of whites challenging affirmative action to the unemployment situation in the country today.

A spokesman for the proposed coalition to oppose the California decision through building a mobilization to speak out against the decision when it comes before the Supreme Court, says the idea of reverse racism isn't the question. He states that Bakke is trying to say that color shouldn't enter into admissions policies, but the people who oppose the decision feel that until institutionalized racism is counteracted by programs such as the Affirmative Action Program, the initial racism will always be a burden to us all.

There is another underlying concept and accompanying question in this conflict, the spokesperson said, and that is the concept of the need for more good medical schools and the reason why the medical profession has been kept so closed to many people of all races who have a strong desire to offer professional health care assistance to the American people.

Perhaps the "monopoly" on the service professions by associations seemingly aimed at remaining elitist should be questioned the spokesperson said, and the professional schools expanded and opened up to more people who have the desire and ability, as Bakke states he has, while continuing their affirmative action policies. But, the coalition organizer stated, until this is a reality, because of the economic situation in the country, and the advances of the past decade in civil rights for minorities should not suffer because of this situation.

The Murder of Fred Hampton

Bill Hampton to speak at UMass

Bill Hampton, brother of Fred Hampton will be speaking at UMass this Friday, September 23, in Room 163 of the Campus Center at 7:30 p.m.

Bill Hampton is leading a national campaign to see that the killers of his brother are brought to justice.

Fred Hampton, one time Black Panther Party leader, was murdered by Chicago police in 1969. Almost one hundred shots were fired into his apartment while he lay asleep. The court cases that followed revealed: Hampton's bodyguard was an FBI agent; this agent provided the police with a plan of the apartment including an X marked "Fred sleeps here," the raid took place after J. Edgar Hoover ordered the FBI to "cripple" the Black Panther Party on June 20, 1977. U.S. DISTRICT COURT JUDGE JOSEPH SAM PERRY, AFTER PREVIOUSLY ACQUITTING THE FBI AND OTHER AGENCIES OF INVOLVEMENT IN THE CASE, ORDERED A HUNG JURY TO ACQUIT THE SEVEN POLICEMEN WHO TOOK PART IN THE RAID.

The following is an extract from an interview with Bill Hampton published in the July issue of Socialist Worker, national newspaper of the International Socialist Organization.

Hampton: "My brother was a rising young leader who was killed at the age of 21... He was not just a leader of Blacks, but whites as well. While he was chairman, the Illinois Black Panther Party were organizing free medical centers, free breakfast programs, free clothing and free busing to prison programs.... If the Panthers were dope dealers or criminals, they would not be such a threat. But the Panthers, the things they were doing, were exposing the system. When you live in a corrupt system, you can't expect the people who are corrupt to send the corruptors to jail. It is more or less a law of who has the most clout. Everyone's help is needed. A victory would not be just a victory for the Clark and Hampton families, but for all the countless working people, Black, yellow and brown people that have been murdered by the Government.."

Also at the meeting, the film "The Murder of Fred Hampton" will be shown.

Bill Hampton's visit is being sponsored by the Internatinal Socialist organization. The public is invited.

Reviews of the broadway play, Bubbling Brown Sugar

By MARIO A. BARROS

There was a packed house at the Fine Arts Center Sunday night to be both entertained and educated by the smash Broadway smash, BUBBLING BROWN SUGAR. BUBBLING BROWN SUGAR is a musical tour through Harlem at a time that is warmly referred to as the "Harlem Renaissance." After WW I, Harlem was the center for all phases of Black culture, it was alive with new music, jumping with new dances and most importantly, it was filled with starry-eyed Black writers, directors, actors and musicians who were certain that a Black artist's hope and home was Harlem as he-she walked off of the subway and through the fabled "Purly Gates" at 135th St. and Lenox Ave.

BUBBLING BROWN SUGAR captures all of this and more. From the uptown Speakeasies to the Savoy Ballroom, BUBBLING BROWN SUGAR is there with the music, the dance and most importantly, the vivaciously captivating feeling of the time and place. When one was in Harlem, one lived like he-she never lived before. BUBBLING BROWN SUGAR takes you through the Harlem Renaissance years and allows you to do a little living too as John Sage and Checkers (Bobby Hill and Glover Parham) take you to all the hot spots with Jai Oscar St. John setting the scene for each spot with a song and a dance that captures both you and the feeling of the Harlem scene.

BUBBLING BROWN SUGAR literally bubbles over with the excitement and beauty of post WW I Harlem. It conveys also the hopes and dreams that created all those musical milestones and works of art. The show is truly a smash and truly warrants the seal of enthusiastic approval.

Remark on blacks by New Hampshire Gov. brings criticism

MANCHESTER, N.H. [UPI] — Gov. Meldrim Thomson said Wednesday a threatening demonstration protesting his attacks on black leaders would involve persons who "don't believe in the orderly processes of government."

Thomson was reacting to criticism from New Hampshire black leaders of his refusal to answer a telegram which urged him to tone down his remarks critical of U.N. Ambassador Andrew Young and the late Dr. Martin Luther King.

The Rev. Ralph Henly, pastor of the New Hope Baptist Church in Portsmouth, said Sunday some form of "demonstrative action" would take place Wednesday if he did not receive an answer by then. The telegram also asked for a meeting with the governor.

"A demonstration would indicate the kind of people they are," Thomson said. "It's not because they're blacks, but because they are a stripe of people who don't believe in the orderly processes of government."

Thomson said he wouldn't be intimidated by anyone and said he would be coming out with more criticism of Young in his U.N. Proclamation. He said he had not yet read the telegram and would respond to it when he got the time.

Henly, pastor of the state's only black Baptist church, said Tuesday the church's seven-member ethics committee would decide Wednesday what course action to take.

"It could be a rally or something like that. But whatever it's going to be, it will be public so the governor can see our sentiments," Henley said.

He said he would detail the church's plans at a news conference.

In a related matter, a spokesman for the black leaders said Tuesday that Coretta King, wife of the slain civil rights leader, would not be able to attend a Sept. 27 rally in New Hampshire.

Mrs. King had tentatively scheduled a visit to the state to react to some of Thomson's criticism of her husband. But Melvin Bolden said he understood Mrs. King would not come because she will take on a job at the United Nations.

Bolden said black leaders were trying to get the Rev. Ralph Abernathy to speak at the rally.

Bubbling Brown Sugar made its appearance at the Fine Arts Center, Sept. 18 for two performances at 3 and 8 p.m. This broadway hit has been highly acclaimed by critics. Its brilliant and tantalizing performances has dazzled audiences from Boston to Washington.

Its message, unlike past plays which tends to be art for art sake, reveals the untold story of black stars from the 'roaring twenties' to the 'explosive sixties' who helped shape the American entertainment world. Unfortunately because of racism that existed and still exists, these stars are not nationally recognized for their contributions.

The play delivers its message by walking down memory lane in Harlem where it all began. We see the Harlem that drew the 'jet set' to its theatres and night club doors. We see the thousands of blacks that came from the south to pursue a better future. We see Cab Calloway, Bessie Smith, Billie Holiday, Lena Horne, Bill Robinson, and many others that made Harlem the black cultural capital of the world.

The actual production was marred by the poor acoustics of the Fine Arts Center. Due to this it is hard to accurately judge the quality of the performance, particularly the singing. What was audible did not deserve the standing ovation or the continual applause. The singing was average and only twice did it make my spine tingle or send chills down by back. First was when Francine Claudia Moore sang "I Got It Bad." The second time was, "God Bless The Child" sung by Mable Lee. The costumes and dancing was well designed and choreographed. This is what pulled the show through.

On the whole, Bubbling Brown Sugar was good for a touring company, but there have been better companies and also worst.

Carter admits to black unemployment problem

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Carter administration, acknowledging the problems posed by rising unemployment and sluggish growth, indicated recently it is prepared to spend more money to stimulate the economy if current efforts falter.

Labor Secretary Ray Marshall said it is already clear that a bigger effort is needed to find jobs for unemployed blacks and youths. He said the administration may seek to expand its efforts under the Comprehensive Employment Training Act, under which 725,000 jobs already are being created.

The move toward stimulus follows a three-month decline in the leading economic indicators and an August jump in the unemployment rate to 7.1 per cent, with the administration acknowledging the jobless rate is 40 per cent or higher among urban black youth.

Over-all black unemployment hit 14.5 per cent last month, matching a post-World War II high set during the depths of the recession in September 1975.

The Third World Women's Center located in B16 Baker House in Central Area, is currently organizing its agenda for the fall semester. This organization, develops and utilizes the creativity, intelligence and energy of Third World people in activities that contribute to positive development of Third World sisters at the University of Massachusetts.

The majority of the 1976-1977 school year was spent meeting and recruiting women for the Center. There were two very successful workshops, dealing with relationships between Black men and women.

During the Third World Women's Week (April 19-24), some events included "Distant Voices" (a play) and "360 Degrees of Fashion" (a fashion show), written, planned, and developed by sisters on and off campus. Featured guests included Dr. Francis Welsing, Vinnie Burrows, and a concert performance by Melba Moore. Other activities of the year included movies, speakers, and a Third World Women's Pot Luck Dinner.

This year, the Center has taken an active part in showing "Malcolm X" and planning the Umoja Cabaret, to be held Saturday, Sept. 17th. We need more ideas and support for planning our calendar for the rest of the school year. The first meeting of the Third World Women's Center will be Sunday, September 25th at 3:00 p.m. All officers and members are urged to attend. Any sisters (especially freshmen) interested are welcome. Come with your ideas!

For further information contact: Cheryl Watkins-Third World Women's Center Coordinator, calling from off-campus 253-9961 or on-campus 545-6388.

Announcements

CCEBS

All CCEBS students interested in pursuing a career in law should note that on Monday, September 26, CCEBS is sponsoring a field trip to the Western New England Law School in Springfield, Ma. All interested CCEBS students must sign up for this trip in room 208 with Brian Maher, Career Coordinator of the New Africa House. The last day for signing up is Wednesday, September 21. For anyone in the CCEBS Program who is thinking of going to law school this trip is a must. All those signing up for the trip will meet at 8:00 a.m. in the second floor lounge of the New Africa House on Monday, September 26.

DRUM MEETING

There will be a Drum staff meeting Wednesday, September 21, at 7:00 p.m. in room 425 of the New Africa House. All old staff members and editors must be there. Anyone with experience in newspaper or magazine layout are welcome to attend. Contact Vickie 545-0794 for additional information.

Get Down to the Best Disco in town

The Asian American Students Association is sponsoring a disco at the campus center 10th floor on September 23 at 9:00. The disco will benefit the Kenney Chin-Liz Young defense fund. They are Asian Americans who were unjustly convicted for a crime they never committed. Like so many other third world community organizers, they have been the target for police repression. They were used as scapegoats for the secret service's incompetence in the supposed assassination plot on Japanese Emperor Hirihito's life. It is not only an issue for Asian Americans, but also of the entire Third World community. Please come and support this worthy cause. Admission $1.00.

African Martial Arts

All those interested in joining the African Institute of Martial Arts, sign up sheets are located at the Malcolm X Center, and the New Africa House Cultural office.

On Wednesday, September 21st, Hoyt Fuller, Editor of First World Magazine, an international journalist of Black thought will deliver a lecture "The Need for Black Criticism in the Arts" at 8:00 p.m. at Converse Hall, Amherst College.

Mr. Fuller was the former editor of Black World Magazine. He was an assistant editor for Colliers Encyclopedia, and was an associate editor with Ebony Magazine. He is listed in "Who's Who in America", Black American Writers Past and Present, and is author of "Journey to Africa".

The public is invited.

Affirmative action upheld

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The administration Monday said universities should certainly take race into account in admitting students but it stopped short of endorsing rigid racial quotas to compensate for the effects of past discrimination.

The stand was made in a long-awaited legal brief the Justice Department will file with the Supreme Court in the case of a white man who claimed "reverse discrimination" against him by the University of California.

"The position of the United States is that we favor affirmative action," Attorney General Griffin Bell told a news conference.

"We do not think the case involves, except in a secondary way, quotas. There is a line between goals and quotas, and if you cross the line we would not be able under the Constitution to enforce the quotas."

"The President's attitude is the same way," he said.

Carter's nuclear bill killed in Congress

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The House yesterday dealt President Carter a severe setback in his bid for worldwide moratorium on plutonium production, rejecting overwhelmingly an administration amendment to terminate the Clinch River nuclear breeder reactor.

Members also killed a compromise move by Rep. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., that would have authorized $75 million to keep the project in its current status while the administration considered its policy for another year.

The vote against the administration amendment was 246 to 162. Dodd's compromise was defeated 277 to 129.

The action came during floor consideration of a $6.7 billion authorization bill for the Energy Research and Development Administration.

The Clinch River liquid-metal fast breeder reactor at Oak Ridge, Tenn., has become a focal point of Carter's plan, announced April 7, to seek international cooperation for a halt in proliferation of plutonium which can be used readily for weapons.

Carter's original budget asked for $150 million, but after the April announcement, he requested that Congress reduce the amount for fiscal 1978 to $33 million for completion of design work and phasing out the project.

The Senate already has voted to fund $75 million for the one-year "status quo" position. No money was included in appropriations bills for fiscal 1978, but proponents plan to seek a supplemental appropriation to cover the new amount authorized.

Rep. George Brown, D-Calif., pushing the administration amendment, argued the Clinch River breeder is not needed to meet the nation's energy requirements, and also is "inherently more expensive" that either light-water reactors or coal-fired plants.

Dodd said his compromise was best because "we owe the new administration a fair chance to test its non-proliferation policy."

But supporters of the breeder, which produces more plutonium than it uses during the process, said the United States should gain the technology from further development of the demonstration project on commercial uses of the breeder.

"What we're doing is buying an insurance policy," said Rep. John Anderson, R-Ill.

Chairman Olin Teague, D-Tex., of the House Science and Technology Committee, said he talked with officials of France, Great Britain, West Germany and Japan, and all said they planned to go ahead with development of the breeder despite Carter's call for a moratorium.

Primary results: Mayorial elections

By The Associated Press

Voters braved heavy rains yesterday to whittle down the number of candidates for city offices in 10 Massachusetts cities, and the weather seemed to dampen voters' enthusiasm.

Worcester voters were trying again to decide whether to build a $14.9 million downtown civic center, rejected Feb. 15 by a margin of about 2,000 votes from 36,000 cast.

Five cities had contests for mayor, and in two where incumbents are not seeking re-election, the fields were large.

Six candidates were vying for the two slots on the November ballot to succeed Fall River Mayor Wilfred C. Driscoll, and nine were running for a chance to replace Revere Mayor William Reinstein.

Reinstein announced he would not seek re-election after he was indicted on charges of accepting kickbacks in connection with the construction of the city's $15 million high school.

In Quincy, embattled Mayor Joseph LaRaia drew five opponents, including state Sen. Arthur H. Tobin, who is also president of the city council.

LaRaia has been criticized because he sought information from confidential police reports, information the police chief said could reveal the identity of undercover agents infiltrating organized crime.

U.N. opens to world wide strife

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. [AP] — The 32nd General Assembly opened yesterday in a swirl of colorful costumes worn by many delegates from more than 140 countries. There also was a foretaste of the haggling to come.

Formal opening of the session was delayed almost two hours in a dispute over whether Cambodia should be given a vote. Sources said the new Communist government of Cambodia, now listed as Democratic Kampuchea, is refusing to pay $36,984 in back dues incurred by the ousted regime of Gen. Lon Nol.

The problem finally was set aside and Lazar Mojsov, deputy foreign minister of Yugoslavia, was chosen president of the assembly for this session by acclamation. His election had been assured as the East European choice for the rotating presidency.

Hard blows are expected at Israel and South Africa during the three-month session, with Israel hitting back and South Africa sitting it out.

Israel has become the target of many U.N. members — including its traditional ally, the United States — for expanding Jewish settlements on the West Bank of the Jordan River. South Africa is a perennial target for its racial policies and for not yet granting independence to the disputed territory of South-West Africa.

For the third year in a row, South Africa is boycotting the assembly to avoid getting ejected, as happened in 1974.

On recommendation of the Security Council, the assembly's next action will be to admit Vietnam and the former French African colony of Djibouti, swelling U.N. ranks to 149 members.

Blackout in Montreal

MONTREAL [UPI] — A massive power failure blacked out Quebec, Canada's largest province, for more than two hours yesterday, trapping thousands of people in Montreal's elevators and subways and causing hundreds of minor traffic accidents.

A spokesman for the Hydro-Quebec power utility said the blackout — apparently caused by a transformer malfunction in the far northern part of the province began at 3:25 p.m. EDT. "A good part — if not all — of the province has been wiped out," he said.

Two hours after the blackout began, a Hydro-Quebec spokesman said power was being restored quickly throughout the province.

"It's back up almost everywhere," spokesman Andre Saindon said. "It's getting back up very fast across the whole province."

Child abuse bill approved

BOSTON [UPI] — The Senate yesterday gave initial approval to a bill which would, under court order, authorize the emergency transfer of a child authorities believe is being abused.

The child could be removed from the custody of his parents or guardian when the youth is found to be suffering from, is in danger of, or needs treatment for serious abuse or neglect.

The child would be turned over to a licensed child care agency or individual for 72 hours. After three days, the parent or guardian would have to appear before the court to prove why they should regain custody.

The bill now awaits near final approval from the Senate.

Yom Kippur meditation

By CATHY JO SHULMAN

Nazi Germany, 1944. 12,000 Jews were killed daily at the Hell on Earth, Auschwitz. The total consequences of the "Final solution" brought death to five and a half million Jews and horror and misery to the millions of survivors and their families.

South Africa, 1977, there is a mortality rate of 53 per cent for Black babies between the ages of one and five years old, because their daddies can't make enough money to fill their little bellies. Eighty per cent of the total population (who are Black) live on 13 per cent of the land which is dry barren and forbidding. The White population lives on the remaining 80 per cent, enjoying the highest standard of living in the world.

I study these human atrocities because they fill me with wild emotion which I eventually transmit into positive energy. Sometimes I feel crushed under the heavy weight that falls on me, all the tears of those that cried, becomes a vast ocean, which engulfs me and I find myself drowning, sinking.

But I can learn from the past and present plight what has happened to my brothers and sisters around the world. I know that I am young, and still very impure and really don't know all that much, but I do know that these are lessons, warning us to follow a new path and rid ourselves of hatred, class distinction and human injustices. Maybe the way to do this is by compromising all our differences. That is up to everyone, together to decide, and surely if we don't reach some mutual agreement it could mean (nuclear?) disaster.

I try to let my heart be my guide, even though it burns with sorrow and torment sometimes, it paints a bright and beautiful future that we can achieve by realizing that we all must be directed by love and sincerity and not greed and selfishness. Although I will continue to cry, and to sleep with restless, nightmare filled dreams, I will wait until I become fully educated (by life and school), and possess the capacity to touch each person's heart, so that together we can overpower the evil force which is contaminating our Earth by emulating goodness and love. We should strive to once again become harmonious with nature and free our beautiful souls.

I believe that this can occur through educating ourselves, with our hearts as our motivating factor, and our past as our teacher. I believe in the GOOD POWER, OF THE PEOPLE!

Waste not, want not

By JAMES M. KOZLOWSKI

You do not have to look far to see the waste of food. Look around and you will see at various dining commons at UMass people's trays littered with foodstuffs such as meat, salads etc. This type of attitude to food really appalls me. Why can't we take only what we can eat? Why do we have so little regard for food?

We believe that we have an abundant food supply with no need to worry about a possible food crisis, yet we continue to waste food. We waste food because we feel carefree, lazy and apathetic that our abundant food supply will not change. The fact remains, many changes do affect our rich food supply such as the environmental plights of drought, flooding, and soil erosion.

At the dining commons food is often wasted. How can this action be justified? This behavior is irrational because we are not open to the pressing worldwide problem of starvation. Starvation exists because underdeveloped countries are extremely poor in land, water and grain. Their methods for farming and land use are poorly utilized. America is looked upon as a food provider in solving the world's food shortage problem, yet this attitude cannot be justified. We can help underdeveloped countries by showing concern in developing their resources through advanced farming techniques and better land utilization.

On a smaller scale, we should be food conscious in the United States by not being watchful. We should be more concerned about others' needs and not just our own. Some common misconceptions about food must be examined. We complain bitterly when our own dining commons serve a meal that we do not like, yet people in the underdeveloped countries would be extremely happy for one of our disliked meals.

Attitudes such as "I do not care about underdeveloped countries as long as I am well fed" or more simply "Who cares?" are selfish. Our attitudes must be re-evaluated. We cannot solve this serious problem by being unconcerned. We have to take an active stand against food waste by taking only what we can eat and by thinking before wasting.

The Kent State affair

With only two more days before at least 70 UMass students, a figure that will probably at least double by Friday, leave to demonstrate against the desecration of the scene of the 1970 murder of four students by the Ohio National Guard at Kent State University, it feels like the approaching end of some kind of weird, non-traditional political campaign.

jim paulin

This is an issue that was brought to prominence by the Revolutionary Student Brigade's table variously located in the Student Union and on the Campus Center concourse, with its banner, leaflets, petitions and most recently, a film about the Kent State incident.

Ever since school started, the Collegian has provided saturation coverage about the gym and its opposition. Collegian reporters have traveled to Ohio every weekend this month, and twice they hitchhiked at their own expense. When the Collegian has been unable to have reporters out there, it has relied upon that huge, multi-mouthed beast with invisible anonymous antennas, the wire services. Though we use both the AP and UPI wires, I use the singular "beast" instead of the plural "beasts," because, for practical purposes, they are Siamese twins. Nearly everyday since school started, Kent State has been in the pages of the Collegian, frequently on the front page.

Another campus organization that has given its support to Kent State has been the Undergraduate Student Senate. SGA Co-President Jon Hite, along with Senate Speaker Brian DeLima and RSB member Charlie Bagli, co-sponsored a motion that passed almost unanimously sending a strongly worded telegram of support to the May Fourth Coalition, the group opposing the siting of the gym. Also, the senate funded a van to go there two weeks ago.

The University of Hawaii, DeLima's former Alma Mater, also sent a telegram of support.

Professor Bagli is now writing a bi-monthly column in which he will educate all you oppressed people having such a good time out there as to the nature of the class struggle, with an occasional concession to Good Time Socialism.

Many cheap shots have been taken at the RSB. I am not a member, and neither Mao nor Trotsky is my patron saint. RSB has its own particular social-economic analysis which they are entitled to, though not many people agree with it. However the most ridiculous charge being made is that "all this Kent State stuff is just the RSB" is nonsense, because, last I heard, they've only got six members, contrary to the letter to the editor recently, signed by " ... and 25 other RSB members." Someone goofed there.

But, like Tom Hayden said Marx said, "American radicals are crotchety and sectarian." They sure are. No one is happier to criticize one leftist group than another leftist group. If someone wanted to destroy the American revolutionary left, all he-she would have to do would be to call a convention for the purported reason of offing the pigs, distribute machine guns to the various sects and individuals, and they'd all be dead before they left the hall. The Spartacus League would open fire on the RSB, and the YIA would open fire on the Sparts, and the Communist Party U.S.A. would shoot at the YIA, and the radical feminists would mow down C.P.U.S.A., The Yippies, anarchists and independent radicals would fire at will randomly. Revolutionary pacifists would be used as shields.

The cheap conservative pricks who accuse the senate of pissing away money by funding trips to Kent State, and therefore, they imply bankrolling RSB, should take a close look at "normal UMie type things" in the SGA budget if wasted money is what they're really concerned with. I think it's just a red herring. Express your support of this protest to your senator and area government for transportation dollars.

The "Love it or leave it" crowd should consider the countries where it's been presented as a choice. When I was in Miami, I didn't see any of those bumper stickers on any gusano (right wing Cuban exile) cars.

Furthermore, I urge that a tent city be established on Haigis Mall next to Whitmore this weekend in support of the one being erected on the gym site. Civil disobedience at KSU is optional this weekend. Many people, including myself need to be back on campus next week and not in jail. But if I didn't need to work on getting the hell out of here, I would definitely step over the line.

Anyone interested in going should go to the meeting at the RSB office, Student Union balcony, above the candy counter. Also read Julius Lester's immensely significant poem in tomorrow's Below the Salt, "The Kent State Massacre".

Jim Paulin's columns appear every Wednesday in the Collegian.

Sports: more than a game

"Sport is equivalent to religion in modern society in that its chief function is to reinforce traditional boundaries and definitions of reality. It reinforces the belief that by being competitive, disciplined and hard working one can arrive at the American Dream, which is manifest in individual achievement."

American sport is everything obnoxious in the world of sports. It is also everything obnoxious in American life.

The myth of American sports is indeed the myth of the American dream, the myth that through competitive effort one can rise to prominence and perhaps even domination. Those who would put forth this view of sports fail to remind us that only a tiny minority of players ever make it in professional sports, and that pro sport is one of the prime examples of corporate monopolization in this country.

But the most damaging aspect of sport is not the myths it maintains for prospective athletes, but rather for its fans. Many sport fans are naive enough to believe that professional athletes and their coaches and management play for the love of the game. Well it is true that in American sports "Winning is everything." This is because winning is roughly equivalent to money (lots of money), and sports are played for the love of the money.

Sport is the great American escape. As a form of entertainment it has no more redeeming value than "Kojak". It occupies the minds of millions with statistics and mock battles that serve to divert the mind from real problems. Why concern oneself with SALT talks, labor issues, or Kent State when the pennant race is so close in the AL East?

Now don't get me wrong. I do enjoy recreational, participatory sports. You might even catch me viewing a Sox game now and then if there isn't a good movie on the tube. But those addicts (some of whom even claim to be progressive thinkers) who spend hours a week in front of the set with a six-pack of beer probably have no idea how much these "games are" warping their minds.

And warping it is. Sport epitomizes the oppressive stereotype of masculinity. A man cannot be a man unless he is willing to risk his well-being in the arena. Thus the stigma of the loser — "I've got to win, I'm scared of losing. I hate it, I dread losing. I can't stand it," as it was so eloquently put by Terry Bradshaw, quarterback of the Pittsburgh Steelers. Losing seems to diminish one's masculinity, but no one even questions why there must always be winners and losers, and especially why there are always so many more losers in this world than winners.

Should you doubt my words on this issue, I urge you to check out a Little League baseball game sometime. Or figure out how much money the city you live in has spent on constructing civic centers so that psychopathic fans will be able to throw bottles at the opposing ball players with greater convenience. Or count the number of hours you spend pursuing the box scores and listening to Dick Stockton's play-by-play. Were Marx alive today he would no doubt describe a new opiate of the masses.

Unionization story

To the Editor:

I was extremely disappointed in the Collegian's coverage of the Student Unionization Conference this weekend. The success of the events were greeted with a negative response, apparent by the Collegian's choice of the front page headline in Monday's paper: "Bromery discourages union." Bromery's response can be seen as a positive reaction, in that he is responding seriously to a potentially viable tool for student empowerment. Yet, the headline was not exactly inspiring. Nor was Bromery himself. A more fitting headline could have been, Bromery Bores Crowd of 100. Bromery did not come out against Student Unionization, but he did nothing to encourage students, did not answer questions sufficiently, nor did he offer alternatives.

I saw the conference as a positive and inspiring learning experience, and my criticisms of the conference necessarily stem from that base. Tom Hayden, who strongly advocated unionization and drew a crowd of 400, deserved front page coverage.

Story inaccurate

To the Editor:

The administration of Kent State University certainly seems determined to build their gym on the site of the May 4, 1970 murders. They have used every weapon at their disposal — courts, arrests, injunctions, and police harassment. Now they turn to yet another part of their arsenal — the distortion of truth, the twisting of facts.

Yesterday's front page story "Kent State Breaks Ground" was riddled with misinformation designed to slander the just struggle of Kent students against construction of the gym. "The moving the gym site would cost millions of dollars more which would result in higher tuition ... " This is very interesting, especially in light of the fact that the Trustees have spent more money on lawyers and court fees in their attempt to put down the struggle against the gym than it would have cost to have simply moved it. Why wasn't it built on the 17 acres of land that they purchased for it in the first place?

"The vast majority of this school is turned off ... [by the anti-gym protests]." Then why did a poll taken in February, 1977 show 70 per cent of the Kent State student body opposed to construction of the gym?

"The Coalition has tried to do some good in the courts but it has failed there and elsewhere." Then how is it that the coalition has delayed construction since last spring — through the summer, when there were so few students on the Kent campus?

What has "failed" at Kent State is the administration's attempts to bulldoze the spirit of Kent State into oblivion. What Kent students are "turned off" by is repeated attempts by the University to cover up what happened on May 4, 1970. The only "millions" involved here is the outrage of millions of people across the country who support the just demands of the May 4th Coalition.

The Kent Administration is making every effort to portray the May 4th Coalition as a handful of rabble-rousers who are isolated from the students of Kent State. They do this precisely because the Coalition has been successful in mobilizing students in stopping construction. They do this precisely because they themselves have become increasingly exposed and isolated through the course of the struggle to move the gym. For example, K.S.U.'s President Golding was soundly defeated Tuesday morning in a debate with Al Canfora, a member of the May 4th Coalition and one of the students wounded at Kent State. This debate took place before an audience of nearly 800 Kent students.

Long Live the Spirit of Kent and Jackson State!

On to Kent State, Demonstrate Sept. 24!

Continuing the struggle

To the Editor:

On May 4, 1970, four students were killed and nine others wounded by National Guardsmen at Kent State. The guardsmen opened fire on a rally called to protest the war in Vietnam, the invasion of Cambodia which had been announced four days earlier, and the presence of guardsmen on campus.

Now, seven years later, Kent State University is attempting to wipe out the memory by building the world's largest gym on the site of the shootings.

Why is the unviversity so intent on covering up the site? Why is it important to keep the site preserved?

After the shootings at Kent State, over 700 universities across the country closed down, forcing the U.S. out of Cambodia within 60 days of the invasion. Kent State became a symbol of the nationwide struggle against the war and against oppression. Kent State 1970 proved that students uniting can change things. Here at UMass students have seen examples of student activism accomplishing its objectives, first with the protest in Pierpont, then with the protest over South African stocks. What they are trying to do with the gym is make us forget that we have the power to change things.

The main reason for the importance of Kent State today, though, is the fact that things haven't changed that much since 1970. The main difference now is the feeling that nothing can be done, that it's not worth it to try to change things.

The administration at Kent State has been attempting to stop the protest without a direct confrontation that would attract publicity. Instead they have attacked protesters through police harassment and kangaroo courts. Protesters have been jailed for burned out tail light bulbs, faulty exhaust pipes, and other minor traffic violations. The police incited four students to charge the protesters in a jeep. Eight students are now in court for occupying the site. The judge has ruled that no mention is to be made of the murders on the site, and no mention is to be made of the gym i.e., no evidence is to be presented by the defense. The defense challenged one of the members of the jury that was a National Guardsman. The judge wouldn't accept the challenge. This is this country's version of a fair trial "by an impartial jury" guaranteed by the sixth amendment.

Students! Our past is being bulldozed over in order that we forget that we have the power to stop oppression, but the oppression still continues.

Remember the Past.

Continue the Struggle.

Come to Kent State on Sept. 24!

Representative letters will be printed in a later issue.

Siege ends in Portugese prison

OPORTO, Portugal [UPI] — Ten convicts who had vowed to fight for "liberty or death" released 20 hostages and surrendered yesterday, ending a 24-hour siege inside their maximum-security prison in return for transfer to another jail.

One convict died, the prison warden and chief guard were seriously wounded and four other persons were injured in a gun battle that began the escape attempt. After the prisoners surrendered, police said guards had caused all the casualties, but they gave no further explanation.

Vorster dissolves white parliament in South Africa

PRETORIA, South Africa [UPI] — Prime Minister John Vorster yesterday dissolved South Africa's all-white parliament and ordered general elections Nov. 30 to seek support for the government's racial anf foreign policies.

In announcing the snap election, which comes 18 months ahead of schedule, Vorster accused certain "governments, world organizations," and other bodies of meddling in South Africa's internal affairs.

"What I am asking the electorage to do is to say whether they agree with my standpoint and that of my ministers that no other country has the right to interfere in our affairs or to prescribe to us," Vorster said.

The election announcement came after months of widespread calls for change within South Africa from high ranking visitors such as U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Andrew Young and British Foreign Secretary David Owen.

Canadian police give abductors more time

Sherbrooke, Que. [UPI] — Police knuckled under yesterday to a threat to behead kidnap victim Charles Marion and agreed to give his abductors up to three hours to escape with a quarter-million dollar ransom.

In a bid to save Marion's life and prevent a "crime war" against credit unions across Quebec, police accepted the kidnapers' demand for a three-hour delay between delivery of the ransom money and the release of Marion, a credit union manager.

The swift acquiescence by police, acting on behalf of Marion's employers, the Caisse Populaire de Sherbrooke, followed a threat from the kidnapers that unless their demands for the three-hour grace period were met within 48 hours Marion would be beheaded.

FBI paid informers

WASHINGTON [AP] — The FBI says it paid more than $1.6 million to informers who spied on the political and financial affairs of the Socialist Workers Party during the past 16 years, according to documents disclosed yesterday.

The cash payments were made periodically from 1960 through 1976 to 301 volunteer informers who joined the party or its affiliate, the Young Socialist Alliance, to gather information about the Trotskyite groups' activities, the docutments showed.

The Political Rights Defense Fund, which is financing the party's multimillion-dollar lawsuit against the FBI, made the documents public. The material shows the FBI was "passing out big chunks of cash for political dirty tricks," said Sid Stapleton, the defense fund's national secretary.

The defense fund noted that the documents "provide information only on FBI payments of money from 1960 to 1976 to informers who were members of the SWP or YSA."

The FBI has acknowledged having 309 informers who joined one group or the other, and documents show that all but eight of them were paid.

In addition, the FBI has acknowledged using more than 1,000 other informers to spy on the party at various times during the 16 years although they did not join it. The bureau has provided no information on the amount of money paid to those spies.

The documents are the FBI replies to interrogatories from party lawyers seeking information about the informer payments in the course of the damage suit. The suit accuses the bureau of illegal harassment and disruption of legitimate political activities.

In response to court orders, the FBI previously provided limited descriptions of the informers' work and the type of material collected.

In both instances, the bureau identified each informer by a code number in a procedure approved by the court to protect the informers' identities. By matching the code numbers in both sets of documents, it is possible to determine what the FBI apparently got for its money.

For example, the documents show that informer No. 306 was paid $34,779 from 1968 through 1976 and fed the bureau more than 200 party letters and memos, budget statements, list of party members, political strategy papers, newsletters and publicly distributed leaflets.

CIA trips and falls

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The CIA spent $247,000 buying poison African mushrooms for experiments in the 1950s and 1960s, Dr. Charles Geschickter, of Georgetown University in Washington, told a Senate subcommittee Tuesday.

Geschickter, head of a medical research fund, said he became involved with the CIA in 1953 when the agency expressed interest in financing research on anti-cancer drugs.

He said the National Institutes of Health also was involved in some CIA projects, including a study on concussion and the use of radar to induce drowsiness in monkeys.

The CIA, he said, spent $247,000 on poisoned mushrooms from Africa and $127,000 analyzing them.

Why Africa, asked Sen. Richard Schweiker, R-Pa. "We have mushrooms in Pennsylvania."

"These were poison mushrooms," Geschickter replied. Why, he was asked.

"Apparently to poison someone," Geschickter answered. "I didn't follow up."

Another $177,000 was spent by the CIA in "trying to cure chronic alcoholism," he said. "I don't know how successful this was."

A former CIA official, Philip Goldman, told the panel he developed a long string of dirty tricks for the CIA's technical services from 1958 to 1968. These included melting swizzle sticks, glass ampules and launchers for tear gas and stink bombs, gas capsules which could cause violent sneezing to be concealed in carpets and doctored hamburger to incapacitate guard dogs.

The dissolving swizzle stick, he said, was designed to contain drugs which would be assimilated in a cocktail as the stick disintegrated.

"It would be undetectable," he said.

Another item, "which worked perfectly," was a fine hypodermic needle which could inject substances into corked wine bottles without detection.

The DPU, according to a MassPIRG press release also found NET billing practices "inadequate, unreasonable, and unfair."

In an attempt to head off the inception of TELCAG, NET Vice President Duane Aldrich delivered a challenge Sept. 14 to Guzzi and Attorney General Francis X. ## Court battle is dropped: 'Oh Calcutta on tour

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. [AP] – A renewed court battle over plans to bring the nude musical play "Oh! Calcutta!" here ended Tuesday when the promoter dropped his lawsuit.

Dyke Spear, of Hartford, Conn., said he was withdrawing his suit against city officials to avoid further legal proceedings. He had wanted to force the sale of tickets for the play at the Civic Center box office.

Earlier, Spear won a courtroom clash with the city when a judge dismissed a suit by municipal officials who wanted the long-running Broadway play declared obscene and banned.

Last week, Spear filed suit at Hampden Superior Court seeking to reverse the city's rejection of his application to sell tickets through the Civic Center box office. Officials noted that the play is scheduled at another city-owned auditorium, Springfield Symphony Hall, not at the Civic Center.

Spear, promoting a tour across the nation of the musical, will bring it here Oct. 8.

His promotion of the play, which includes skits spoofing sexual mores and simulated intercourse, has brought legal snags elsewhere.

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

From UNITED Feature Syndicate
For release WEEK of Sept. 19, 1977

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 21 – Born today, you are one of those restless individuals who may have difficulty adjusting to any kind of routine. You thrive on change. You do not work well in an open-ended situation, but need to know that there is a definite, achievable goal. You work quite happily when you know that a change of effort is ahead and when it will occur.

Although many think of you as a emotional person, you are actually quite capable of keeping your emotions under control. Your love of variety and a fanciful imagination encourage you to play with your emotions, not always feeling deeply those you show to others. Your serious emotions you keep to yourself.

You are a tolerant and understanding individual, seldom annoyed by other people's quirks. Indeed, you are usually more curious and friendly with people others may consider more than a little unusual. Not an especially social person, you have from earliest childhood enjoyed your own company more than that of anyone else. For this reason you will probably choose a career that at least gives you periods of work away from people.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 22

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) – Seek out areas of compatibility rather than conflict in your associaton with another. Bring peace to a relationship.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) – You can greatly enhance your relationships on the home front if you will leave authoritarianism behind you.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) – Seek the happy medium in your dealings with others. Otherwise, you may commit yourself to more than you can handle.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) – You may have a difficult time coping with the consequences of another's upset nervous system. Problems grow at evening.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) – Chances for a happy and productive day increase as you bring your feelings of disappointment under control.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) – Another's appearance may be intriguing but may not tell the full story. Look beneath the surface for valuable qualities.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) – You may get more than you bargained for today if you insist upon doing your own "thing." Seek help from another.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) – False friends prove a hindrance to progress. Don't expect much from one who has disappointed you before.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) – Your aspriring nature combines with ambition to move you a long way along the path to success in your particular field today.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) – You can get what you want from a close friend today. Keep his best interests in mind, however.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) – Aspects of another's character which cause you pain or embarrassment should be discussed, changed. But don't push.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) – Though another may encourage you in a wish to shirk your duty, you would do well to keep a promise. Complete a goal.

Reds reflect on 1977 players too confident

CINCINNATI [UPI] — The Cincinnati Reds, having fallen short in their quest for a third straight world championship, have supplied some interesting answers to the question, "What happened?"

In lengthy interviews, manager Sparky Anderson, George Foster, Pete Rose, Johnny Bench and Joe Morgan gave their opinions. Excerpts:

Anderson: "The club was careless. I was careless. I don't think it started in spring training as some claim. I think it goes as far back as 1975. We finally won a world championship, something no other Reds' team had done since 1940.

"I think I got careless in the way I started handling players in 1976. But we were so strong that despite this carelessness, we won again. I got carried away and bragged and bragged about the team. And by so doing, I put things into their heads that wouldn't have been there.

"This past spring I helped put all of us on an ego trip. Now I realize the carelessness started all over again. It set the tone for the whole year.

"I've made notes in a book. This has been the worst season I've ever seen a club have in missing signs. I have other things in the notebook that I'll correct.

Foster: "I feel I haven't been hitting in clutch situations as I did in the past. Last year I hit only 29 homers, but I went more for contact.

"Last year I had more discipline. I knew when and when not to go for a home run with two strikes on me. If a home run doesn't mean a tie or a victory and there are runners in scoring position, I should try to make contact with two strikes on me instead of swinging for the fence.

"Actually, I've hurt the club more than helped it. I don't feel like I've been as consistent as in the past."

Rose: "I believe I've played as hard as I could under the circumstances. It was hard to keep psyched up when we kept losing.

"Anyone can play when you're five or six games on top. I would like to have more hits than I've got. I try to play harder when we're losing because we look so bad and we're getting a closer look from fans.

"I had a couple of slumps where I went one for 10 against New York and two for 15 against Chicago even though I felt I hit the ball hard. It gets you down."

Bench: "We created a worldwide-known big red machine. But like every machine it doesn't always function perfectly. Mainly because this machine is made up of people and they're susceptible to mental problems and lapses.

"After all the glory and riding the crest, sooner or later gravity will pull you back to earth. Hell yes, I wanted to win. But we didn't. It's now not a one-team league."

Morgan: "My feeling is we lost because we lacked the consistency we had the last five years — consistency in pitching, fielding, clutch hitting and the mental aspects of the game.

"Statistics are deceiving. Pete Rose, Ken Griffey and I can all be hitting .300. But if we're not hitting .300 at the same time, it doesn't mean a whole lot.

"We had a chance to do something special — be the first national league team to win three straight world championships. That's what hurts. We as a team didn't do the job.

"What makes me the unhappiest of all is that we didn't make the Dodgers earn the (National League West) title. In honesty, I have to say we gave it to them."

Kingman disappointed; Red Sox washed out

BOSTON [AP] — Slugger Dave Kingman took one look at Fenway Park's famed "Green Monster," the 37-foot left-field wall — and was disappointed to learn he was not in the starting lineup.

However, the New York Yankees' newest strong boy got a chance to show what he thought later Monday night when he golfed a towering shot off a light tower above a high screen atop the wall for a homer.

Despite Kingman's blast, the Boston Red Sox went on to a 6-3 victory, moving to within 3½ games of the Yankees in the American League East.

Kingman, who played for the New York Mets, San Diego Padres and California Angels before being picked up by the Yankees last Thursday, looked forward to another shot at the wall last night. However, he had to wait as heavy rain postponed the 1977 season finale between the Yankees and the Red Sox until tonight.

"I had seen Fenway Park many times on television and had heard stories about he left-field wall," Kingman said. "I knew the wall was close, but it was more than I expected. It's something else."

Kingman, playing out his option to become a free agent next month, felt he would be right at home at chummy Fenway, but emphasized that his future services will be available to the highest bidder.

"With wind blowing out, Wrigley Field in Chicago is a home run hitter's dream, but Fenway is by far the easiest to hit in," he said. "I mean for base hits, not just homers. You can just tap the ball and get a hit here."

After taking batting practice in his first visit to Fenway, Kingman was disappointed when he learned that New York Manager Billy Martin didn't have him in the starting lineup.

"I kind of thought they got me for this series in Boston," he said. "I was a little disappointed, but I'm not criticizing Martin. He has 25 guys who got him this far.

"He's got his reasons. I'm not sure what they are, but I'm not second-guessing him."

With Mickey Rivers hobbled, Martin started Paul Blair in center-field, explaining: "I believe in pitching and defense. Blair is one of the best centerfielders in baseball. I'm not going to take him out for a home run hitter," Martin said.

"I also didn't consider using Kingman as the DH (designated hitter), either. Take out Lou Piniella? Not on your life. Piniella is hitting .332 and I want him as the DH."

Kingman has appeared in four games for the Yankees. In 10 times at bat, he has three homers and a double, scored three runs and driven in five. He also has struck out five times.

Pats begin week healthy but with much work ahead

FOXBORO [UPI] — The New England Patriots entered a long week of training Monday with a healthy squad and a great deal of work to accomplish.

Nose tackle Ray Hamilton suffered a sprained ankle and Sam Hunt received a 10-stitch-gash in the side of the face in Sunday's 21-17 win over Atlanta. Both were expected to play next Monday night against the Browns at Cleveland.

Of more concern to Coach Chuck Fairbanks was the ease with which Kansas City moved the ball both on the ground and in the air. The Chiefs gained a net of 180 yards rushing and 219 passing.

"We didn't think they'd run that well but then, we didn't tackle as well as we did in the pre-season games," said Hamilton. "I'll tell you, we don't expect to give up that much yardage every week but I do think Kansas City has one of the best offenses we'll see."

Fairbanks agreed. Kansas City "presented the most severe test to us so far" but added "our defense made the big plays."

The coach also spoke kindly of his offense, which gained 241 yards ground behind fill-in starters Pete Brock and Shelby Jordan on the left side of the line.

Brock, a second year player from Colorado, is relieved the first-game pressures are over. "I wanted to play well," he said, "because if we lost, I didn't want to be the excuse."

Rains bring big problems with winter olympic site

LAKE PLACID, N.Y. [UPI] — Measures designed to prevent soil erosion at the site of the 1984 Winter Olympics began Monday, the Lake Placid olympic organizing committee said.

LPOOC President Ronald M. MacKenzie said the measures were being implemented in the area where the athletes' housing complex will be constructed at Ray Brook.

The problem at that area has been compounded by recent heavy rainfalls, at the same time construction reached into the ground water and clay levels of earth, Ramon Lopez, project general manager for the Gilbane Building Co., said.

The Gilbane Company is the project manager for the games and brought in an outside erosion expert to study the problem.

"With the combination of these two factors, the run-off problem became significantly worse," Lopez said, "and we realized that an outside consultant must be engaged expeditiously."

Organizers said Lopez toured the olympic village site this past weekend with the expert, Dr. Lynne H. Irwin, Assistant Professor and Highway Research Engineer, of Cornell University.

Dr. Irwin recommended a system of filter fabric sediment fences, winter hardy vegetation and the use of wood chips to relieve the problem, the committee said.

Irwin added that the problem could become a serious one if it were allowed to continue.

He added however, that "the measures I have recommended to Mr. Lopez will alleviate the soil erosion at this site."

Organizers said the erosion problem was only evident at the housing site, which is scheduled to be completed in two years.

After the games, it will be turned into a federal youth corrections facility for the northeast.

Booters kick off 1977 season

By MARK MARCHAND
Collegian Staff

UMass soccer team will be traveling to Bridgeport tonight to kick off their 1977 season with a 7:30 contest. The team finished the preseason with a 3-2 mark.

UMass co-captain Ed Niemiec said, "Bridgeport has always been a perennial powerhouse in the New England area."

Thus far this year, though, Bridgeport has an 0-2 ledger, having lost to Southern Illinois University and UConn. However, both those teams are ranked high in national and New England polls, respectively.

Niemiec said UMass has never beaten Bridgeport in their brief two-year series, having lost to them last year by a 4-2 score in overtime.

"Bridgeport has a very good offense and an excellent defense including a real super goaltender in Eric Swallow," said Niemiec.

So, the Minutemen will be up against a tough, experienced team that has most of its high scorers back from last year. But, the fact that the Minutemen have never beaten Bridgeport in the past should add to the team incentive to get their initial win against Bridgeport and start their season off on a winning note.

Under the coaching of Russ Kidd, the booters have been preparing for this opener since the close of last season. Team members feel that this year could be a big season, possibly resulting in a berth in the New England playoffs.

After tonight's contest, the booters will travel to the University of Maine for a 10:00 a.m. game on Saturday.

They will then travel to Keene State for a game on Sept. 28th before returning here for their home-opener on Saturday, Oct. 1 against the University of Vermont.

Wet women's tennis team floats onto Smith court

By ED POWERS
Collegian Staff

Rained out of its initial match of the fall season against Springfield College, the UMass women's tennis team hopes to open its schedule today against smith in a 3:30 match at the Smith College courts. The Springfield match has been rescheduled for Sept. 28.

Although rain has hampered practice sessions, coach Bill Yu was very confident and excited about the possibilities of a strong showing this fall by the women's tennis team.

Associate Athletic Director Bob O'Connell said, "The girls were very excited after their initial practice session last Thursday afternoon with their new coach."

Yu, after examining the schedule, expected the toughest matches of the season to be against Smith, Tufts, Mt. Holyoke and possibly Dartmouth.

Except for freshman Cathy Maher at the number one singles spot, Yu is unsure about the remainder of the lineup. He hopes to become quickly acquainted with each of the girls' tennis abilities in order to put together the best lineup he possibly can.

Yu said he is also looking forward to the Massachusetts Association of Interscholastic Athletics for Women (MAIAW) tournament in the middle of October. The women will be represented by two singles players and one doubles combination.

One prerequisite of the tournament is that those entered must have played a majority of their matches in the position they are entered at. For this reason, Yu hopes to set his lineup for the ten match fall season as soon as possible.

Downpour dampens Hose; Yanks finale set tonight

BOSTON [UPI] — Nature has delayed the Boston Red Sox destiny for at least a day.

An all-day downpour yesterday forced a one-day postponement of the Red Sox' season finale against the New York Yankees, a game Boston must win to stay in the American League East race. Boston, with 12 games to play, trails New York by 3½ games.

If the weather allowed — and the forecast indicated a day dotted with drizzle and downpours — the Red Sox were to send Luis Tiant, 11-8, against Mike Torrez, 16-12.

Another rainout tonight could force a rescheduling to Oct. 3, the day after the regular season ends. The game would be played only if it affected the outcome of the pennant race.

With the game meaning so much to the Red Sox, it would seem a rainout would make them fidgety. But second baseman Denny Doyle, who suffered through three straight days of wet weather that delayed the 1975 World Series between Boston and Cincinnati, shrugged off any possible added pressure.

"I've been involved in too many big games that have been rained out to worry about this," he said. "You know, a day of rain is like coming to the park and finding out that your baseball shoes haven't been polished. There's nothing you can do about it. You just put up with it.

"There have been times when the pressure was greater. You can't let a few drops of rain bother you," Doyle said.

He was among a handful of Boston players who hung around after the game was called off. Most of the Yankee players never left their hotel.

"There's nobody here," said pitcher Catfish Hunter, as he looked up from his card game with Yankee coaches to discourage any media inquiries in the quiet Yankee dressing room.

The day of rest figured to help the ailing right leg of centerfielder Mickey Rivers, a last-minute scratch before Monday's night game. Paul Blair started in Rivers' place in the first game, won 6-3 by the Red Sox.

Without Rivers, the Yankees are down to one centerfielder, a fact that kept Manager Billy Martin from pinch-hitting for Blair in the first game.

"I hope Rivers isn't feeling better until Thursday," said Boston captain Carl Yastrzemski. "They say that guy has problems in the field. Well, we haven't seen any. He's been tremendous."

Boston shortstop Rick burleson added: "Rivers is one of the top candidates for MVP. He's been underrated defensively and he's their catalyst offensively. He makes things happen."

After tonight's scheduled game, the Red Sox go to Detroit for a four-game series that starts tomorrow. The Yankees have tomorrow off before playing a three-game weekend set at Toronto.

Turner sailed thru $$$ on his way to cup win

NEWPORT, R.I. [AP] — The King's Point Syndicate, which backed the America's Cup efforts of Courageous and Independence, ran short of money late in the campaign, says Atlanta Braves' owner Ted Turner.

Turner, who skippered Courageous to the 23rd defense of the prestigious sailing trophy, said yesterday he had to pay $10,000 of his own money to buy sails for the 12-meter yacht.

Contacted by telephone in Atlanta, Ga., Turner said he purchased two new jibs and two spinnakers after being told the King's Point Syndicate couldn't come up with the money.

"They were trying to raise additional money and I figured there was no way they would be able to buy me some new sails," Turner said. "So I went ahead and got them on my own."

Real estate developer Alan Bond, head of the Australia syndicate, had to mount a fundraising drive back home to finance new sails after his yacht defeated Sverige and became the challenger.

The cup campaigns for three American yachts and challengers from Sweden, France and Australia cost more than $12 million.

Meanwhile, Courageous was still tied up Tuesday at a Bannister's Wharf pier while a few remaining crewmembers cleaned out their gear and prepared the yacht for her departure.

George Zacharkow, chairman of the King's Point Fund board of directors, said the veteran sloop would be leaving Newport on Thursday for the U.S. Merchant Marine Academy.

Zacharkow said Courageous and Independence would be put on display Sept. 28-Oct. 1 during the academy's alumni weekend. Then they will be put in storage at Minneford's Yacht Yard, where both were built.

Turner, who beat Australia by 2:25 Sunday for a 4-0 defense shutout, is interested in buying Courageous to mount another campaign in 1980, independent of the King's Point group, according to a crewmember.

Zacharkow, however, said the syndicate did not intend to sell the yacht, which successfully defended the cup in 1974 in another 4-0 shutout of an Australia sloop, Southern Cross.

"Our intention is to retain the yacht if at all possible," Zacharkow said. "We don't want to sell off a winner."

Meanwhile, the mast was removed Tuesday from Australia so she could be towed to New York for shipment back to Perth. She was scheduled to leave Newport on Thursday.

Palmer cools Toronto; Orioles still kicking

BALTIMORE [UPI] — Rookies Eddie Murray and Rich Dauer smashed homers behind Jim Palmer's seven-hitter and 18th victory last night to help the Baltimore Orioles edge into second place, three games out of first place in the American League East, with a 5-2 triumph over the Toronto Blue Jays.

Palmer, 18-11, saw Murray snap a 1-1 tie with his 23rd homer in the fourth inning. Dauer's third homer against Toronto, and fourth this year, came in the fifth.

Ken Singleton's two-run, bases-loaded single in the seventh chased losing rookie starter Jim Clancy, 4-7, for Tom Murphy. Walks to Mark Belander, Pat Kelly and a single by Al Bumbry loaded the bases.

Gary Woods tripled across Toronto's first run in the second and Dave McKay singled home a second run in the seventh.

Only 4,301, the second disappointing crowd in as many nights, watched the Orioles keep their pennant hopes alive by boosting their record since August 29 to 18-6. It was Palmer's fifth straight win.

FALL SPORTS SPECIAL '77

Men's cross -country

Harriers run for roses through green pastures

By Mike Burger
Collegian Staff

No matter how well the UMass men' cross-country team does this year, one thing's for sure. The Larriers will have a lot of company with which to share it. Providence, Northeastern, and UMass represent the top three teams in New England. The Friars are coming off an awesome year which saw them place ninth in the country.

UMass coach Ken O'Brian said the competition is so intense in the East that probably six teams,(Penn State, Rutgers, Villanova, Providence, UMass, and Northeastern) will hold down six of the top 20 spots in the national rankings.

Locally, Providence is the team to beat. The Friars one-two punch last year was All-Americans John Treacy and Mick O'Shea, both products of Ireland. O'Shea graduated but Friar coach Bob Amato picked up super freshman Gerry Degan (13:36.5 time for five kilometers), who is tabbed as being able to surpass O'Shea's times before he graduates.

Treacy returns along with another sophomore All-American -Dan Dillon- and veterans Ed Hartnett and Gerry Crooke.

"Providence is a rich team. One would think that losing somebody like O'Shea would hurt them as a contending team but they may be stronger depth-wise this year," said O'Brien.

Providence may be the team to beat but for some reason, topping Northeastern is a "sweet thing," according to O'Brien. Unlike any other New England team, instead of a one-two punch, the Huskies have a one-two-three attack with Jon and Bob Flora, plus Bruce Bickford.

Bickford, the United States' best under 20 years of age steeplechaser, came on like gang busters last spring and may turn out to be the best Northeastern runner. The Huskies have depth but are not as deep as UMass. If their four through seven runners even approach the level of the top three, the Huskies could be a serious problem for UMass and Providence.

Harvard was the surprise team last yaar as it captured the Eastern championships (IC4A's) when all seven runners peaked on one afternoon. Harvard is still an enigmatic team with no real one-two punch, but is a team that runs well together. On one good afternoon Harvard may surprise as it did last year in the IC4A's.

How does UMass compare with these teams? "We can hold our own with anybody and that includes any team on the East Coast. I think anyone of the three local teams (Providence, Northeastern and ourselves) can be number one in New England. It willbe close," O'Brien said.

Schedule-wise, the Harriers meet the cream of the crop in the first three meets of the season. After opening against Brown and Boston College this Friday, Harvard and Providence will be the competition next Tuesday. Four days later, Northeastern and St. John's will go head to head with UMass. A week later, Manhattan and Syracuse, and UConn will meet UMass at Van Cortland Park in New York.

After two Yankee Conference meets, the championships battles will be waged. The Yankee Conference, New Englands, IC4A's, the Eastern Eights, and the NCAA's will determine just how far UMass will go.

"There is no doubt in my mind that we have the talent to be among the best in New England and maybe the East. We just have to put our heads together, strive for consistency, and work hard. But the potential is there," said UMass captain Mike Quinn.

Competition should run strong

By Mike Berger
Collegian Staff

You walk into cross country coach Ken O'Brien's office and immediately you see on theledgeoftheblackboard,fourAll-American plaquesaccumulatedin the pastthreeyears.

The fifty-six year history of Massachusetts cross country showsa record of 259 winsand 119 loses for a .690 winning percentage.

Under O'Brien the harriers have won 74 dual meets, lost 23 and have captured a record seven straight Yankee Conference crowns (1970-76) aswellasthe1973NewEnglandand 1974 IC4A titles.

No fall sport, save women's cross country, can claim as much success as O'Brien's roadmen. This year, the pattern should be continued, and maybe to further heights.

Despite the loss of All-American John McGrail, this year's squad returns five of the top seven scorers plus an All-American transfer from Providence College.

In the past three years, O'Brien has had two 'frontrunnig' All-Americanstoleadhissquad. This yearagain the pattern remains. Lastyear as UMasssweptto a 10-1 dualmeetseason, its seventh straight Yankee Conference crown and runner-up in the New Englands; sophomore Mike Quinn came of age asan awesome runner.

O'Brian and assistant coach Arnie Morse knew Quinn was a good runner andalsoknew hehadagoodchancetoimprove. Butlastyear Quinnopenedup theyearwinninghisfirstrace, beating All-American teammate McGrail. After that, everyone had a feeling that no one could ever predict Quinn's success that year.

Quinnwonfouroutofthefiveracesheranina dual meet competition, won the Yankee Conference meet, and climaxed the season with a record shattering second place finish in theNewEnglands. Histimeof23:13forthefive-mile Franklin Park course wasseven seconds behind one of the best national collegiate runners in the country - Providence's John Treacy.

Two weeks later, in the nationals, Quinn became the first UMass cross country runner to earn All-Americanstatusasasophomore.

In the summer of 1976, O'Brian learned that ProvidenceAll-AmericanStetsonArnoldhad transferredtoUMassbut wouldhavetositouta year because Arnold was recupperating from hepatitis. Arnold is set to run again, and according to O'Brian, should regain the running form that made him one of New England's top runners in 1975.

"Onceanathleteofnationalcalibersitsouta year, he hastolosesomething," said O'Brian. "ButArnoldisanextremelyskilledrunnerwho has worked hard to regain theconditioninghe had in 1975. Wearepleased with his progress and know it may be a month or two before he gets all of his timing together."

The key to this year's team is depth and the pre-season prediction is thatitisthebestever. Following the one-two punch of Quinn and Arnold, is a group of seven runners.

Co-captain Frank Carroll suffered a serious cold last season that prevented him from reaching the running form that was predicted of him. Presently ranking as theschool's fifth fasteddistancerunnerever, onlysurpassedby four All-American teammates, Carroll is expected to regain the form that also makes him a potential All-American.

The freshman cross country team begins another fall campaign with great expectations of retaining its title as the best sub-varsity team in New England.

"It's our deepest talented group," commented third year coach Arnie Morse, "Whereas our two other championship teams had 4 or 5 strong individuals, this team has 7 or 8 good runners."

A boost to Morse's optimism is 3 competitors who are following in the trackshoes of older brothers who competed for UMass. Bob Hunt, 6th in the N.Y. States, is younger brother of Jim Hunt, successful New England half-miler. Last year's Central Mass. champ Mike Dorion enters UMass in the shawdow of long distance brother Paul. Runnerup from Western Mass., Craig Arnold hopes to duplicate brother Stetson's honors as All-American.

Other front-runners include Acton's Matt Anderson, New Jersey's Kevin Molteni, and Connecticut's Jim Gallagher, all top finishers in their respective state championships. Early season injuries to New Jersian Joe Lagan and Garde Wells of Newton force them out of action for several weeks. Both Logan and Wells were runners-up in their state'scompetitinn and should pose a serious threat to the top five positions when healthy.

Completing the freshman squad are Tim Beauparlant, Dan Berkowitz, Peter Dreisens and Tom Gildea, all top runners for their high school teams.

The season opens against Boston College and Brown, Friday at Franklin Park in Boston, just one of three meets at Franklin Park in a span of eight days. Mid-season invitationals in Poughkeepsis and Albany, N.Y. comprise the only competition before the New England's Nov. 5 in Boston. According to Coach Morse the tradition of fine cross country teams at UMass will be carried into another year.

Women's cross country

Women harriers strive to keep good thing going

By Dave Rodman
Collegian Staff

New women's cross country coach Charlotte Lettis probably explained it best when she said, "the upper-classwomen like Jane (Welzel) and Johara (Chapman) had to go through a mental thing of accepting themselves as women runners. Now, we have new women coming in who say 'I'm a runner, so what•"

What that means, according to Lettis, is that women's track and cross country is growing in both quality and quantity, on the New England level as well as at UMass.

What it also explains is how the Minutewomen could lose three of their top ten runners and be "a better team than last year, and definately as deep," according to Lettis.

Lettis said the 1977 squad has 19 women out for the team, "the most ever," for the third year team.

At the end of last semester, cross country head coach Ken O'Brien was faced with replacing Julie Lafreniere and Maggie Crowley, two of his top seven runners, who graduated. Junior Bonnie Bukowski would also be gone for the fall, on exchange in the Midwest.

At the beginning of this semester, O'Brien discovered sophomore Monica Scott, who ran consistently in the top ten last season, would be taking the semester off from school.

Since the women's cross country program does no recruiting, all the coaching staff could do was wait and see what September 1 would bring.

What it brought was seven freshmen, three of whom have turned out to be outstanding runners. Two of the three had the credentials that announced them as potential frontrunners, but, as often happens, an unheralded walk-on has appeared to challenge even the veterans.

Eileen Everett of Watertown is the dark horse of the season.

"She was completely unknown to us," said Lettis, "but she's been a pleasant surprise. She's a strong runner and has been keeping right up with everyone."

Everett has not had a physical, so she did not run in the team's first meet last Friday, a 19-44 win over UConn.

Tina Francario is one half of the frosh "Dynamic Duo." Last year she ran for Brockton High, which took second in the state girls' cross country meet. She has also run 11:18 in the two mile and finished second in that race in the state girls' track meet.

Francario made an auspicious debut into collegiate varsity competition when she finished third last Friday, beating all of her "more experienced" varsity teammates except Welzel.

The second half of the "DD" is Priscilla Wilson of Mohawk Regional High, last year's state girls' cross country champions. Wilson, Mohawk's number one runner, finished seventh in the state cross country meet, according to Lettis

Another frosh, Linda Welzel of Hopkinton, has followed her sister Jane to UMass. She also had an encouraging introduction to collegiate running by finishing 10th against UConn.

Ten veterans form the backbone of the team, which was undefeated in four dual meets last season, along with winning the Lowell and Brandeis Invitationals and finishing second in the New England's, third in the Eastern's and 14th in the nationals.

Welzel, a senior, appears to have regained the form which made her the number two runner in New England in 1975. Lettis said she ran "easily" in winning the UConn meet, and she has returned from the summer in good shape.

She had good seasons in both cross country and track last year. She was a consistent top ten finisher in dual meets, was 17th in the NE meet, 37th in the Eastern's and 160th in the nationals in cross country. On the track, she was fourth in the indoor Eastern three mile (17:42.8), placed in the top five in the outdoor Eastern three mile, was fourth in the UMass Relays two mile (11:26.4) and won both the two mile (11:48.3) and the three mile (17:42.7) in the Albany Invitational.

Junior Sue Swartz is the "most consistent runner on the team, who is always in the top five," according to Lettis. She never finished lower than eighth in a dual or invitational meet last year, and finished a fine season by finishing 11th in the NE meet, 26th in the Eastern's and 117th in the nationals. She also had a good season on the track, placing in the top five in both the indoor and outdoor Eastern's three mile.

Lettis said sophomore Barb Callanan has looked "fantastic" in pre-season workouts, and that she may turn out to be the most improved runner on the team. Callanan was consistently bettering her times last season until an ankle injury late in the campaign kept her off the traveling squad for the postseason championship meets.

Beth Collins put in some hard work over the summer, after being injured last fall, and it paid off in the UConn meet, as he finished seventh.

Junior Debbie Farmer is another consistent runner who ran her best time of the year last season in the nationals. She finished eighth in the UConn meet.

The remaining veterans include track half-milers Laurie Wolf and Sue Mulligan, miler Kathy Kirkham, junior Anne Bradshaw and senior Johara Chapman. Bradshaw and Chapman did not compete in the UConn meet, as Bradshaw was sidelined with a cold, and Chapman a sore knee.

Both were steady performers last year, particularly Chapman, who was top runner on the team early in the season, and was always in the top three. She finished in the top five in the indoor and outdoor Eastern's two mile, and although she's a bit out of shape, according to Lettis, "she'll be up there before long."

"Our veterans were improved by the experience they gained last year," said Lettis. "They know what competition's all about, and that includes the freshwomen.

"There's no holes in this team - everyone is a decent runner. Still, we expect a tough season, because other teams have improved as well. Hopefully, we've improved that much more."

O'Brien expects the toughest competition to come from Middlebury College, last year's NE champ and Eastern runnerup.

"They return their team intact, including Mo Thorpe and Lin Putnam," said O'Brien. "If they've added any runners or skiers who can run, they'll be even tougher."

Middlebury was NCAA cross country skiing champion last year, and most of its runners are skiers, including Putnam, who was individual champ in the NCAA ski meet.

Other strong teams, according to O'Brien, will be Williams, Radcliffe, and Brandeis, if it can find some depth to support two good frontrunners. Radcliffe, which has added national caliber runner Johanna Foreman and Rhode Island state champion (track and cross country) Cathy Sullivan, along with the depth it had last year, should be the most improved team.

Men's soccer

Minutemen shooting for a star studded season

By Jack Atkinson
Collegian Staff

It's going to take three big 'D's' this year to come back from last year's disappointing 5-8-1 record: Depth, Desire, and Defense. But fear not, for the 1977 UMass soccer team is strong on all three counts. Just ask coach Russ 'Cap' Kidd.

Only four seniors are gone from the '76 squad. Their places will be taken by an excellent crop of freshmen and some new hotshots up from the junior varsity team.

The co-captains, Larry Aronson and Ed Niemiec, are both three-year starters at fullback. They anchor a very strong defense which should result in few opposition goals.

The backfield is deep with talent. In addition to Aronson and Niemiec, such stalwarts as Pat Veale, Mark Vassalotti, and the versatile Mike St. Martin give the Minutemen a solid corps which should keep the opposition at bay. Two key men in backup roles are sophomres Dave Abel and Greg Omasta. Abel can switch to halfback when necessary and Omasta can play anywhere on defense.

The defense, though, begins in goal. UMass comes on strong with Mark Hodgon in the starting role. This is his first year as number one, but he gained valuable experience last season while backing up Mark Hanks. Preston Kise and Will Temby will joust for the number two position. All three should provide solid netminding all season long.

While not as deep as the defensive corps, the midfielders are no slouches either. Seniors Andy Moore and Willy Sorenson are the veterans of the lot. A second year starter in his sophomore season, Mark Vasington, and T.J. O'Brien make up an unspectacular, though very dependable, crew. John Thomas, a sophomre up from the JV's will provide needed assistance at midfield. He is extremely versatile, like his ex-JV mate St. Martin. Kidd likes to occaisionally rotate his backs and midfielders, so that makes the liks of Thomas and St. Martin all the more valuable.

Up front at forward, UMass is blessed with two hot Canadian freshmen and a good crop of sophomores and juniors. Freshmen striker Tommy Koutsoukos of Montreal has a great future ahead of him. Mention his name and the coach's eyes immediately lighten up Along with freshman teammate Ion Bogdaneris, Koutsoukos made the Quebec Select Eleven team, an excellent testament to their talents.

"Tommy's scored in each of our scimmages and his passing has been excellent", Kidd beamed. Koutsoukos' shots are bullets, and his passes are on the mark.

Besides the Montreal express, UMass's front line includes wingers Joel Mascolo and sophomre Mike Shannon. A big improvement has come from Billy Leary. He has been very impressive in practice and can play anywhere up front.

While not quite as impressive as the defense, the offense should be able to hold its own this season. Right now, the offense has a few lapses in its passing game, but that may be corrected with experience. Overall, the minutemen are a well-balanced club which could surprise and excite a lot of people.

One major stumbling block for UMass could be the schedule. The Minutemen play against six of New England's nine toughest teams, while UMass ranks tenth. The Minutemen open up against fourth-rated Bridgeport tonight at 7:30.

Included in the season slate are UConn (first in N.E., ninth in the country), Rhode Island (third in N.E.), and Vermont (fifth in the area). Kidd added, " We have a very strong schedule and there are no easy games. The Yankee Conference is a good one. We're on the road for the first three, and they could go either way."

The verdict? With a strong defense and a well balanced offense, plus excelient scrimmage results, this could be the best Minuteman club in years. "We'll find out tonight," Kidd said.

Except for unforseeable circumstances, the field behind Boyden will be the new home for the Minutemen. The field is a natural bowl and is also well-suited for soccer. It features a scoreboard and excellent sound system.

The Minutemen play host to Vermont in the home opener on Saturday, Oct. 1, at 11:00 a.m.

Booters' Co-captains

Aronson, Niemiec to lead charge

By Mark Marchand
Collegian Staff

This year's edition of the UMass soccer team will be captained by two well-experienced veterans whose careers have paralled each other during their three years in the UMass soccer program.

Seniors Ed Niemec and Larry Aronson were both voted in as co-captains last November by their teammates, and, as coach Russ Kidd puts it, "They've now been at work about ten months in developing this year's team."

"They've been a tremendous help to me in putting this squad together," Kidd added.

Both Aronson and Niemec have been playing varsity ball since the start of their second year at UMass and Aronson said, "our close friendship over our career here has helped our role as co-captains."

The 5'10", 175 lb. Aronson is a native of Merrick, N.Y. and is studying public relations and sports administration as part of his BDIC curriculum. He began playing soccer in the eighth grade before entering Calhoun High School in Merrick where he begun to play soccer on a regular basis. From there, he was recruited by UMass and began playing on the varsity squad at the outset of his sophmore year.

Aronson is and has been a durable player during his UMass career as he will have a streak of 40 straight starting roles in varsity games if he starts all 14 contests this year.

When asked about his hopes for the 1977 season, Aronson was quick to express his optimism for a year that will far surpass last year's dismal 5-9-1 record. "One major reason," Aronson said, "has been the 150 percent improvement in the coaching of Russ Kidd. He now has more confidence and experience."

Aronson went on to say that "if everyone on the team puts in as much effort towards playing as Russ does into coaching, we'll have a 13-1 season."

The third member of his family to attend UMass, the 6'1", 185 lb. Ed Niemiec was a walk-on candidate for soccer in his freshman year. He began his varsity career as a sophmore and has been plagued by ankle injuries in the past two seasons.

Niemiec is a marketing major and plans to go on to gradute school although he is uncertain as to when he'll enroll.

The tall, rangy senior is a native of Braintree, Mass. and attended Braintree High School, where he ran track in addition to playing soccer. Also, according to Niemiec, Braintree High is an acknowledged soccer power as six graduates currently captain their college soccer teams.

Niemiec shares Aronson's optimism about the upcoming season although he is just recovering from a toe injury.

"The team is closer as a unit and has much better communication," Niemiec said.

Both captains have much praise for the soccer program and are glad they chose to attend UMass for both academic and athletic reasons.

"UMass was my first choice although I was recruited by other schools," said Aronson. "If I had to do it over, I'd come here again."

The soccer squad should be off to one of its best starts in recent years if the enthusiam of its co-captains is any indication of the team spirit in general.

Both Aronson and Niemiec should provide ample leadership. In combination with Russ Kidd's able coaching, the factors should combine to give the Minutemen one of the main ingredients for success on the college level-team morale.

Stickers strive for comeback

By Jim Gleason and Melissa Gallagher
Collegian Staff

The UMass field hockey team, led by Coach Judith Davidson, have its best season in recent history when it begins the 1977 season tomorrow. The Minutewomen consist of 11 returning veterans. They lost only two to graduation. Cheryl Meliones and Sue Kibling are the teams leading scorers and Gayle Hutchinson and Kathy Gipps are definite standouts.

Last year, UMass compiled an 8-6 record and was invited to compete in the New England Playoffs, where it was 1-2. Although the season was highlighted by the participation in post-season play, the team ended the season on a disappointing note.

Three games lost by one goal particularly hurt the team. One team member blamed the defeats on poor morale.

It is felt that the Minutewomen didn't play to their potential because of a reported lack of communication and togetherness. Instead of working together, they were, at times, blaming each other for their failures. But this year the atmosphere is different.

Practices are spirited and a sense of unity prevails on the squad. With this new-found togetherness and veterans returning, UMass has unlimited possibilities.

Lynsie Wickman at centerback also scored two goals and Sue Kreider at right link chipped in with one score.

On defense, Hutchinson and Gipps provided the team with its most consistent area play. They recorded five shutouts and allowed 21 goals for a 1.5 goals against average. Their only lapse came against Springfield team, which scored seven goals against them.

Even though the Minutewomen look improved over last year, they face a rougher schedule. All of the teams which they were beaten by last year are on the slate, including two tussles with Springfield.

Second-year coach Judith Davidson is confident that her team will have a strong year.

Just how strong? Tomorrow's 3:30 home game against Springfield will be an early indication.

Kathy Gipps, a mainstay in goal for the past three seasons, hopes to lead her Minutewomen teammates to the Northeast playoffs again this season. (Staff photo by Pat Dobbs)

Gipps a gem in goal

By Jim Gleason
Collegian Staff

If anyone needs to be convinced that the UMass field hockey team is going to be one of the best in New England, it isn't Kathy Gipps. She should know, since she is a four year veteran of college competition and has never before been so excited about her team's pssibilities.

"We could go all the way (to win the New England Playoffs) with this team. They're all in good condition, both mentally and physically, and they're experienced," Gipps enthused.

She speaks as though the team will take her there, but it isn't so. The Minutewomen look to her to keep them in close games. She's the last line of defense, and she has proven to be a capable goalie.

Last year, Gipps recorded five shutouts (six including post-season play), bunching them in a string of four straight while turning a team going nowhere (3-4 record at that point) into a playoff contender.

A look at the figures show that defense was a strong point of the team. In UMass's eight regular season victories, she had a remarkable 0.37 goals against average. But Gipps is uneasy when talking about last year's accomplishments.

"I didn't have a bad year but I did play below par. I missed some easy shots which cost us. I wasn't reacting quick enough. But that's been taken care of this year. I've been running..."

If indeed Gipps is reacting quicker this year, there should be no problems at the goal position. Her size (5'9", 150 lbs.) is bigger than most netminders and gives her the natural advantage of covering more of the goal. But it is Gipps's experience which is her most invaluable asset.

Playing the position for eight years (four years at South Framingham High School), she has learned how to cut down the angle of the shooters and when to be agressive. Incidently, her senior year high school team was Bay State Champs, when it was unbeaten and, more remarkably, unscored upon.

"She is very agressive which makes her so good", says teammate Judy Kennedy. "Also, she is excellent on her clears. We all have a lot of confidence in her."

If Gipps has a weakness, it is that she uses her stick too much. She has been working on this in practice under coach Judith Davidson's supervision. Gipps appreciates the fact that Davidson is a former field hockey goalie for Gipps feels that Davidson's practices involve the work of the goaalies much more than other mentors!

Field hockey is the only sport Gipps plays in varsity level and that is by choice. She is active and extremely successful in intramural competition.. Last year, her teams won titles in football, basketball, and softball in the women's division.

"I think playing two or more sports on varsity takes up too much of my time. I need that time to work with my major which is marketing because by main goal right now is to get a job after graduation," Gipps noted. But Gipps can play field hockey once again with the Boston Club Association after degree-time.

This summer Gipps and the rest of the UMass team took time out to attend Merestead Hockey and Lacrosse Camp to get a head start on working with each other as a unit.

"It has helped a lot and we're playing and communicating better this year than last year," Gipps remarked.

Frosh brigade lends new look to netters

By Ellen Davis
Collegian Staff

Five freshmen are what is special about this year's UMass women's tennis team.

Out of the fourteen players selected to be on the team, five of them are freshmen.

Of those five frosh, two are playing in top spots, and two are sisters.

The best freshman, as well as the team's number one player, is Cathy Mayer from Amherst. Maher just moved to this area from Canada, where she was ranked fifth in her age group last year. Her performance in her 16 and under age group was so good that she became sponsored by Slazenger.

Listening to team coach Bill Yu, it's easy to understand why Maher has been so successful in tennis. She has a great serve, is good on both the forehand and backhand, is very agile, and is a baseliner.

Maher's interests go beyond tennis, though. She is a philosophy major here at UMass, and hopes to go on to law school.

Another top frosh, and the team's third singles player, is Lee Robb from Florida. Robb is a very powerful opponent who uses deep, flat, hard drives.

"It's strange to have two freshman in top spots, but they're certainly qualified," says Yu.

Happy they made the team together are the two freshmen sisters, Jane and Chris Carson. The Carsons are from Cambridge, where they played on the Cambridge Latin High School team for four years.

Fran Meyers rounds out the quintet of freshmen on the UMass squad.

But the veterans on the team should not be overlooked.

Playing second singles is returning sophomore Carolyn Mooney from Winchester. Yu also has words of praise about Mooney, who he says is a good competitor. "She's very consistent and steady. Very tenacious," hesaid. Mooney's style is characterized by lots of topspin.

UMass nets Yu to coach Minutewomen

By Ellen Davis
Collegian Staff

As well as having five freshmen on its roster, the 14-member UMass women's tennis team also has a new coach this year.

Just hired last week was 25-year old BillYu, a '77 Umass graduate who majored inmicrobiology.

Tennis is now everything for Yu, who livesin Puffton Village. Besides his newcoaching job, Yu teaches at Amherst Ten-nis Academy and plays in New Englandtournaments.

Yu has been playing tennis for eight years. He took two years off from college just topursue the sport.

Yu is very excited about his new job. Hesays it is his "first coaching job with somuch talent."

Members of the women's team are just asexcited about Yu.

"He's really interested and enthusiastic," says sophomore Carolyn Mooney. "Everyone's really psyched."

Freshman Jane Carlson feels he is "excellent," as well as a "nice guy."

First singles player Cathy Maher says thatYu is a "good tennis player, knows a lotabout tennis, and has coached before."

As far as the future goes, Yu says he's interested in owning and manaaging in thetennis business.

Volleyball

UMass set to spike and punch

By Leo Peloquin
Collegian Staff

Whatever ups, downs, peaks, or valleys are in store for the UMass volleyball team for the 1977 season and in future campaigns, there is one thing that head coach Dianne Thompson wants to make clear. The entire squad , both the varsity and the junior varsity, will face all obstacles together, as one cohesive unit.

'We feel it is vitally important for the success ot the volleyball program to run it as one unit as much as possible,' said Thompson, summing up the coaching beliefs of herself and her assistant, junior varsity coach Bonnie Buongiorne.

And they practice what they preach.

Since Sept. 6, when 35 hopefuls showed up for the first practice, all pre-season scrimmaging has been of [illegible] intrasquad nature and the JV's and varsity have not been split into separate squads, even for practices. Both coaches have been working very closely together and during the regular season, players will be moved back and forth freely between the two squads.

Thompson, back for her second season as head of the volleyball program (she also runs the softball program with the help of her hand-picked assistants and teaches in the physical education dept.), is confident that there will be a major inprovement over last year's 9-2o-1 season.

'We are optimistic about the future. We seem to have strong players even though we have a young group as a whole,' said Thompson.

The present roster reflects this fact. Of the 26 women that remain before final cuts (which will whittle the squad down to 18),nine are freshmen, nine are sophomores, five are juniors, and only three are seniors. Five players are returning that have JV experience and four that saw action with the varsity last year.

The reason for the optimism in the fact of such a youthful feam? 'The one big chance that we have over last year is that we seem to have more height and vertical jumping ability...the group that we have right now...they are picking up the new strategies and skills very quickly,' Thompson said proudly. Both coaches are extremely pleased with the progress that is being made.

The new strategies and skills that Thompson speaks of are related at least partly to the major change affecting U.S. amateur volleyball this year. All such organised volleyball will finally be played under one set of rules.

The rules are termed international (Olympic) rules and they are being instituted so that when Olympic years roll around, it will be easier for potential members of the Olympic volleyball squads to blend in to the international style of play.

The major physical changes include shortening the playing court by six inches, lowering the net by ⅓ of an inch, and the use of antennas . Antennas are vertical extensions of the sideline poles that will enable officials to make more accurate judgements on sideline calls.

Other changes, intended to speed up the flow of the game, include the institution of the three-ball system (so a ball will always be immediately available to use for play), the outlawing of deliberate coaching (shouting instructions) during the game from any person outside the playing area, and a rulle which limits the number of substitutions that can be made by each side during a game. The maximum used to be 12, but had been cut down to six.

Finally, a block by a member of the team on the defensive will not count as a 'hit' The defensive side normally getss three hits to return the ball to the offensive side and a block used to count as one of the hits.

GET STRAIGHT A's IN COLLEGE BY BEATING THE SYSTEM

This is a book that shows you how to beat the system. It contains proven methods that work every time. Some methods are devious and some are straight. It also includes hundreds of short tips that add up to success and superior grades.

My name is Dale Rich, and I wrote the book I'm telling you about. But let me tell you something about myself. I hold three college degrees. Two undergraduate degrees with Honors and a Master's Degree. I earned each one at a different college. When I was an undergraduate, I was on the Dean's List of Honor Students EVERY semester. I was chosen to be a member of my college's National Honor Society, and I was elected Treasurer. Before graduation, I was granted an Outstanding Leadership Award for my collegiate activities.

That's some of my hands on experience from your position. On the other side, I've taught at a well known State College. I've prepared tests and have graded students. In short, I've been part of the system from both sides.

I know how to beat the system and I've proven it. I'm POSITIVE you can beat the system too. My book, GET STRAIGHT A's IN COLLEGE BY BEATING THE SYSTEM, will show you how.

If you're a Freshman, this book is ABSOLUTELY ESSENTIAL. My former classmates agree. If we had this book when we started, we would have saved hundreds of hours of wasted study. And we would have got better grades more easily.

If you're a Sophomore, Junior, or Senior, you already know how tough it was getting there. And your grades probably reflect the battle. This book tells you how to get the grades that will raise your average. It will also let you stop beating your head against the wall.

You can get A's easily.

I'm so Positive you can beat the system that here's my GUARANTEE. Try the book for one semester. If you don't get the grades you want, return it in any condition. I'll send you the full purchase price the same day the book is returned. No questions asked!

Now, I know some of you still may not order this book. To you, all I can say is – I'm sorry. I hope you make it through college with whatever grades you can get.

To those of you who order this book, I say - CONGRATULATIONS! This may be the wisest decision of your entire undergraduate career.

Many of my former classmates would have gladly paid $100 to make it through some courses. I'm offering you a book that will show you how to get superior grades in all courses for only $10. At this price, it's cheaper than most of your textbooks, and it's more valuable than any of them.

Remember, I'm giving you a MONEY BACK GUARANTEE. You must be 110% satisfied.

There's no delay in mailing. I won't wait for your check or money order to clear the bank, I trust you. You'll get SUPER FAST DELIVERY. Your order will be processed as quickly as possible. We try to fill all orders the same day they're received.

Just fill out the coupon and mail it in.

Dale, maybe you're full of crap, but I've got nothing to lose. I'll order your book for $10 and I'll try it for one semester. But if I'm not completely satisfied, by the end of the semester, I'll return the book for a full refund. On that basis, here's my order.

Uncertainty marks men's slate

Co-captain Jimmy McDermott.(Staff photo by Pat Dobbs)

By George O'Brien
Collegian Staff

As the fall, 1977 edition of the UMass men's golf team gets set to tee off for another season, it finds itself with a new coach; a lot of big gaps to fill; several young talented but as yet untried players; and many, many question marks.

The team's new coach is Ed Vlach, who takes up the reins from Fan Gaudette After six very successful years here Gaudette left UMass this summer for a new job at West Genessee High School in New York.

Vlach , although new as a varsity coach, is certainly no stranger to the UMass golf program. He has served as coach of both freshman and junior varsity golf teams (back when UMass had them) and as coach of the Stockbridge team for the last five years. In all, Vlach has been with the golf program for some 14 seasons.

Vlach is a member of Amherst Country Club, where he holds a number of records and titles, including the top course round of 68, and two club championships (1970,'73). He was runner-up in the title bout this year to Umass lacrosse coach Dick Garber.

Vlach heads up a team dominated by sophomores and juniors. He is faced with some big gaps to fill, left by departed seniors Bobby Sanderson, Tim Diskin and Billy Locke and sophomores Mark Powers and Ron Laverdiere, fine golfers who decided not to compete this season.

To fill the voids, Vlach has a few returning veterans and a score of youngsters, talented and promising, but with little experience.

The squad is led by recently elected co-captains Flynt Lincoln and Jim McDermott, returning standouts from last year.

Lincoln, a sophomore, has lived up to all his potential as a fine, very solid performer. A team leader as a freshman, Lincoln is expected to become one of the finest golfers UMass has ever seen.

McDermott, perhaps the most consistent of the linksters last spring, continues to improve. This summer, McDermott was one of five collegiate golfers chosen to represent the state in the Tri-State tournament. He finished second overall.

But two men do not make a winning golf team. If UMass is to have any of the success it has enjoyed in the past, a lot of success must come from the supporting cast, which must supply needed depth and stability.

Vlach said that Linciln and McDermott were the only two sure starters he has, and that all the other positions on the squad were "up for grabs."

Vying for the open spots are several players, some of whom return from last season, and some of whom are newcomers to the team. Included are strong freshmen prospects John Lien and Marty Hunt; sophomores Rick Duggin, Mark Sivel, and Vic Lahtiene; and juniors Rick Campbell, John Cibrowski and Jeff Orr.

Based on performances in early season qualifying and a practie match against Amherst College last Friday, Vlach decided on a lineup of Lincoln, McDermott, Orr, Campbell, Lahtiene, Duggin and Lien, which competed Monday at the Yankee Conference Championships in Stowe. As Vlach has said, however, the lineup can change considerably from match to match.

"The players have been told that any member of the team can challenge anyone else to try to take his position in the line-up," said Vlach.

The season ahead is not a long one, but all the matches are very important. The Yankee Conference Championship, the New Englands, the Toski Intercollegiate Tournament and finally the ECAC's in mid-October make up the Umass schedule.

Women build program slowly but surely

By Bill Tarter
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's golf team in only its third year of existence, and is still very much in the growing stages.

A common symptom the women's golf program shares with other sports during expansion is a lack of experience. The women have only one veteran back from last year's team- Lisa Romano. An eight-handicapper, Romano is expected to lead the small supporting cast of four members. The other golfers on the team include Maureen Ryan, Jane McCarthy, and Janet Keyes. What they lack in numbers they hope to make up in spirit.

But these women do have a highly qualified coach. Jane McGahan, the Minutewomen's mentor, is currently the assistant pro at Hickory Ridge golf course, and is an accredited LPGA card carrier. The card qualifies her for participation in women's pro tour.

McGahan acknowledges that the team is in a "building stage." She would like to see more prospects out on the golf course, but realizes the resources will remain limited as long as current high school systems stay the same. "The only way a woman can compete at that level is to join the men's team," she said. This discourages participation in general, McGahan added.

McGahan thinks that it is too early to judge the possible outcome of the 1977 season. "Only time will tell concerning the progress of the three new entries to the team," she said.

McGahan feels the inclement New England weather will always handicap a team like UMass against areas that receive year-round sunshine, such as Florida or California. "There is no substitute for playing," she said.

Crew

Men anxious to start upcoming fall season

By Gary Adinolfi
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's crew team is anxiously awaiting the opening of the 1977-78 season. Coach Chic Leonard, a graduate of UMass, is very optimistic about the upcoming season. This is Leonard's first year as UMass varsity crew coach. He had three very successful years as freshman coach here (1972-1974). As freshman coach his teams finished second twice in the Dad Vail Championships and took the title in his final year.

The first two weeks of practice for this season's team have gone about as well as expected.

"We've been running and gunning," Leonard said. "Things are a little disorganized right now but hopefully everything will fall into place before too long."

Leonard points out that things are running a little behind schedule since he just returned from Amsterdam two weeks ago where he represented the United States at the World Rowing Championships.

"Had I been able to be here over the summer," Leonard said,"I would have been able to get things organized much faster."

The team will look to co-captains Rick Edwards and Steve Frackleton for the leadership as the path to the Dad Vail Championships is carved. As usual the outfit that will pose the biggest threat will be the Coast Guard. It has won the Dad Vail Championship for the last two years and would have to be considered the favorite for the upcoming season.

"It's too early to guess how we will do this season," Leonard pointed out, "But our goal is to make the Dad Vail finaLS."

The first important race will be the Head of the Charles on the Charles River in Boston. October 23 is the date and it will give a good indication of how the team will fare the remainder of the season.

As for the freshman team, Coach Leonard is very happy that Steve Loomer will be taking up the coaching chores.

"Steve has great potential as a coach, and I know that he will do a fine job," Leonard commented.

Right now the coaches have about 40 freshman trying out for the team, but they are still looking for more. Any freshman interested should contact Chick Leonard in room 9 of the North Physical Education Building.

The prospects for this year's team, both freshman and varsity, are bright, so look for a successful season as the team attempts to make its ultimate goal, the Dad Vail Championships.

Women have optimism for two-meet campaign

By John Gever
Collegian Staff

Optimism looks to be the byword for this year's UMass women's crew team, which will compete in two regattas this fall before the regular season begins in the spring.

Coach Doug Frost said that although the competition will be very tough, when the spring rolls around this year's women could be in the top ten nationally.

Coming off a good season last year, Frost said, "I was pleased with last season. We wanted to beat Philadelphia, and we didn't but we rowed extremely well against them."

Referring to this year's squad, most of whose members are returning from last year, Frost noted, "We have much more experience, much more depth (than last season) with a good turnout of new people."

Although the team lost three members through graduation and another who is taking the year off, "We have more than enough talent to replace them, easily enough," Frost said.

The fall season differs from the spring in that the spring matches are usually dual meets, during which the two boats line up at the start and race each other. The fall regattas have a large number of shells from many different schools, and the boats start at 10 second intervals, racing the clock rather than each other. The spring matchups are also usually run over a distance of 1500 to 2000 meters, while the regattas may be as long as three miles.

The fall season starts on October 8th, with the Holyoke Regatta, which will take place on the Connecticut River in Holyoke. Then on October 23, the UMass crew will journey to Cambridge, Mass. for the Head of the Charles Regatta. It is the world's largest crew regatta, the highlight of the season for every team. Almost every squad in the country will compete in this race.

Although the UMass women look as if they do not have much of a chance of winning, these races are important in that they afford the squad an opportunity to race against the top teams in the country and to prepare for the spring season. they are also a lot of fun, "as much of a social gathering as a race," Frost said.

It looks like a good season is in store for women's crew fans.

A lot of room remains on the squad for more women, especially taller ones. If you are interested, give Ginny Peebles a ring at 546-9366.

Rugby

Ruggers ready selves for YanCon battles

The UMass rugby club is off and winging in its attempt to win the Yankee Conference championship.

By Dave Olmos
Collegian Staff

The UMass rugbyclub got its fall season off to a surprisinglygood start last weekend with convincing victories over the Dartmouth College rugby side on the pitch near Boyden.

The first side faced a very large Berkshire pack and had to rely on the speed of its backs for victory. Doc Laurence, club coach, cited the play of Dave Palazola as being important in the 28-4 UMass victory.

Dartmouth was surprised by the first side by a score of 31-10. An individual performance was turned in by Kelly Attridge, who set teammates up, broke tackles and scored on two trys. Laurence also said the play of Mark McCabe was 'exceptional'. Especially pleasing to the coach about his teams play was that against both Berkshire and Dartmouth, the ruggers played their own style of play and were successful.

Only three returning players from last year's first side are back in their green and white jerseys. Larry Tebo returns at scrum, Hugh Chester-Jones at second row and Brian Coolbaugh at a wing forward .

However, these players are not alone in their previous rugby experience. Laurence says about half of the sixty players practicing with the culb have played rugby at various levels.

The club travels to the University of Rhode Island in Kingston this weekend to compete in the Yan-Con tourney as defending champions. The tournament consists of eight teams from the conference and is a single elimination tourney.

Laurence feels Umass has a good chance of winning The B side from Umass will compete at home against the Concord rugby club Saturday at 1 p.m.. The team will then leave for URI about 8 a.m. Sunday.

Club practices are on Tuesdays and Thursdays at 4:30 p.m. on the pitch west of Boyden Gym. Laurence encourages anyone interested in playing rugby to come and practice with the team. Laurence emphasizes that size and strength are not the only requirements for a good rugby player. The club has players of many sizes shapes and experience. It is rumored that the fun doesn't end right after the game.

Mini-booters prepare for season's opener with promising outlook

By Judy Keefe and Billy Tarter
Collegian Staff

This year's junior varsity soccer team promises to be the strongest in UMass' s history.

In an effort to expand the UMass soccer program over a 65 players were recruited from thesurrounding New England area, the philosophy being that with more athletes to choose fron, more quality players will emerge.

The coiaches hope the tactic will help UMass achieve a reputation alongside such longtime New England powers as UConn and Brown. An example of the youth of this year's team is that in a squad of 28, only three are sophomores, while all the rest are freshmen. It seems needless to say that inexperience as with most JV teams, is the Minutemen's weakness.

JV coach Joel Dryer, who is also assistasnt coach for the varsity soccer team, graduated fron the University of Illinois and has only been at Umass since January. Dryer is a graduate student. He handles the team with a rather direct no-fooling-around approach.. He says he expects a fine season from this year's team, with a record to match, or improvement on last year's 6-3 mark.

Top freshmen prospects to watch for are Antonio Estainislow fron Ludlow; and two high-school teammates from Springfield, Scott Cooper and Peter Dion. The star of this year's JV team was set to be Bob Abt, but he won't be able to prove his worth to the team, since he has been promoted to varsity.

The team has an eight game schedule this season. Included are clashes against such notable opponents as UConn and Harvard. The Minutemen's first game is next Tuesday at Keene State.

Spikers strive for team unity

By Jeffery Glynn
Collegian Staff

Expect a new outlook this year for the UMass volleyball teams.

The junior varsity squad, according to coach Bonnie Buongiorne (pronounced Bon-jorn) is working on four nrw offenses and two new defenses. The reasons for these new plays is so that the Minutewomen will be better able to counteract the strategies used by opposing clubs.

For example, a team which spikes the ball often will force Umass to utilize the block more often as its most effective way of scoring. In contrast, if their opponent is a relatively weak hitting team the Minutewomen can turn to the offensive and do the spiking them selves.

This willl be the first year in which Buongiorne acts as a full-time UMass coach . She has been a player-caoch for the United States Volleyball Association in Brockport, N.Y. for the past 11 years, and also played in two natinoal torunaments (the USVBA and the AAU) in 1975. She possesses a great deal of knowledge about the game.

Summing up her attitude about the team, she feels that her squad has the ability to be winners this year. The games will be played in the North Physical Education Building's second floor gym, beginning next Tuesday.

Minutemen look for prospects

By Andy Blume
Collegian Staff

The UMass baseball team opens up its fall season today against American International College at home in Lorden Field at 3 p.m. The fall team plays a nine-game exhibition season to stay in tune for the spring, when the "real season" takes place. As one of the three fall coaches, Jim Bedard, says: "We play competition, not as good as the Yankee Conference, but decent. The main emphasis is on finding the people who can help with the varsity in the spring and improve last year's record of 20-17."

Bedard and George Flood and Arlan Barber will be searching through the freshman and junior varsity talent to find 21 players for Spring coach Dick Bergquists' varsity roster.

Thirteen ballplayers return from last year's varsity team. They include second team All-New England star Ed Skribiski. Skribiski, the team MVP, last spring tied the UMass record for hits in a season with 50. He hit a fine .357 while playing second and third base for the Minutemen.

Two more solid hitters, first baseman Dale Stone and catcher Charlie Ciccone who hit .289 and .283 respectively in the spring also are coming back.

Last year's leader in homers and RBI's, and an All-New England second-teamer, Mike McEvilly, is playing football this fall along with teammate John Czerapowicz. Third baseman Leo Kalinowski is out injured.

Second baseman Mike Stockley and outfielder Neal Lojek round out the last year's varsity returnees. Unless the coaches can convert one of the veterans to shortstop, it looks as if UMass will be looking for one, since starter Jim Cullen has graduated.

Bedard and his associates will be trying to find three new pitchers to replace last year's losses. Returnees include staff ace Tom Nigro (5-4, 2.14 ERA), Doug Welenc, Dave Tewhill, and Dave Stoller.

The JV team has a fine crop of athletes to fill varsity shoes. Leading JV returnees include centerfielder Tom Hunt(.500 batting average), catcher Dave Oleksak (.472), third baseman Tom Good (.375), shortstop Mark Leahy (.355), and catcher Phil Small (.310). Leading pitchers are Doug Aylward (3-0,0.70 ERA), Chris Collins (4-0,1.75 ERA), and Jim Lewis (3-0,4.78 ERA).

The team plays all but one game at home. UMass plays AIC three times, Berkshire Community College twice, North Adams State once, Springfield College twice, and Western New England once.

The UMass squad will adjust to these changes by experimenting with multiple offenses such as the 6-0, the 5-1, the 6-2, and the 6-3 (the numbers referring to the different combinations of hitters and setters respectively) and a variety of defenses which include the no block.

The varsity will play a 30-match schedule again this year. This year, however, in order to win a dual match, the team must win the best of five games. In tri and quad matches, each match will be decidec by the first team to win two games.

This year's team which belongs to no set conference of league, opens its schedule with a tri-match in New Hampshire where the Minutewomen will face New Hampshire and Vermont. The match is slated to begin at 1 p.m. Saturday.

The home opener, vs. Bridgewater State, which beat the spikers 1o-5, last season, will be played at NOPE gym a week from Friday. The JV game will be take place first and will begin at 6:3o p.m. The season will end with the State Tournament, to be held at Salem State on Nov. 11th and 12th.

New teams on the agenda this year include the University of New Haven, Holy Cross, Boston University, Eastern Connecticut and Vermont.

Carolyn is one of three sophomores on the team, the other two being Sherry Lurie and Jack Isgur.

There are four juniors on the team - Cathy Sullian, Debbie Halperin, Martha Awiszus, and Karen Holt.

Two seniors, Dawn Minaai and Jennifer Ranz, who play first doubles together, complete the squad.

Coach Yu hopes to continue building up the team by getting more freshmen interested in tennis, and by continuing practice during the winter months.

Right now the women practice two and a half hours a day, and concentrate on drills such as two-on-one. They also play ladder matches on their own time. Coach Yu hopes to get together with each player for one and a half hours a week as well.

Since Monday's match against Springfield was postponed until next Tuesday because of rain, the team will be opening its season at Smith today. UMass's first home match will be Saturday against Tufts 2:00.

"One thing that's evident to me is that we are not weaker than last year but much stronger. # PAUMA denied recognition

By DAN MONTUORI
Collegian Staff

The Professional Association of UMass-Amherst's (PAUMA) importance as a governance body is being felt by many UMass organizations, but the UMass Board of Trustees is still unwilling to cooperate with the union.

At PAUMA's first general meeting of the semester yesterday, speaker Charles Lyman said, "The Faculty Senate, the Chancellor's Office, and other university governance bodies are willing to work with PAUMA, but we still aren't recognized by the UMass Trustees."

Other business included reports by the Committee on Governance Recognition, the Personnel Appeals Committee and the Personnel Policy Committee.

Chairman of the ad hoc Committee on Governance Recognition, Harry Brooks said "Presently, the UMass Trustees are preoccupied with finding a new university president, but now is an effective time to start gaining trustee recognition, because once a new President is found PAUMA recognition will be one of the first things on their agenda."

Peter Wozniak of the Personnel Appeals Committee said, "This summer, PAUMA successfully acted as an initial mediator in a professional staff member grievance case."

"Wozniak said PAUMA was able to initiate negotiations between a professional staff member and his supervisor concerning a termination of employment, which resulted in a satisfactory agreement for both parties.

"Because of PAUMA's success in this case, we feel that the chancellor's office will be more willing to work with PAUMA in the future," Wozniak said.

Donald Lisneski of PAUMA's Personnel Policies Committee said the University Personnel Policy Committee is in the process of reviewing the current Trustee Professional Non-academic Staff policy in the areas of employment security, grievance procedure, staff development, evaluation procedure and employee classification.

"Although the review procedure is a complicated process, it is now beginning to take shape," Lisneski said.

Students voice major concerns

By CYNTHIA HARHEN
Collegian Staff

Check cashing, quality of courses and teachers, dorm overcrowding, and academic counselling are among the chief concerns of UMass undergraduates, according to a campus unionization survey of 1000 students.

The survey compiled by the Student Center for Educational Research and the Student Organizing Project, covers 57 issues ranging from the quality of courses to the legalization of marijuana. This broad range of topics avoided any bias of issues which the SOP would like to see organized.

Project workers were pleased with the results which showed an interest in those issues directly affecting UMass students. According to SOP organizer Susan Birmingham, the survey is exceptionally valuable because it suggests some general trends and takes a step toward student decision making. Seeking student's opinions on issues is, essentially, what student unionization is about, Birmingham said.

"The idea behind unionization is to organize students so they can effectively address the issues which affect them," Birmingham explained.

Armed with feedback from surveys such as this, SCER and SOP members will attempt to devise some viable alternatives to these "top priority" problems. These suggestions will then be taken to the Undergraduate Student Senate which will decide which option is the most realistic answer. The senate, in turn will push for administrative and top-level action, Birmingham said.

Birmingham pointed to one positive result of the survey project. Six courses determined by students were added to the Economics department.

As the result of the combined efforts of over 50 concerned students, Birmingham said the survey has proven "resourceful and promising," considering the initial data gathered.

Gethers spends day on campus

By CHARLOTTE TRENCHARD
Collegian Staff

Craeman Gethers, former UMass student who is now serving an 8-12 year prison sentence at Norfolk State Correctional Institution in connection with a 1974 MacDonalds robbery, spend his first furlough talking with students on the UMass campus yesterday.

Gethers spent the day traveling around campus with Stan Kinard, Office of Third World Affairs Coordinator. Gethers talked with students during a conference held in the Dukes room of the Student Union, spoke with Dean of Students William Field, and visited the New Africa House, where he spoke at some length with co-defendent Robert Earl Brown. Brown, who was also convicted in connection with the robbery, will be on probation until 1980. He and Gethers discussed new strategies for bringing a new case to court, including work-release programs and probation.

Gethers explained to listeners, "All I want is a chance to present all the evidence, and I haven't even been given that right yet. Only bits and pieces of the evidence has been presented in court so far."

Gethers, who has been through two trials and four lawyers, said he is fed up with the people who have been defending him up to this point.

"I fired them all and I'll fire this one too (Gethers' current attorney is Mathew Fineman of Boston) if he doesn't do what I want him to do," Gethers said.

Dean William Field, who spoke to Gethers yesterday said, "Craeman has good academic standing here at the University, and I hope that he will return to finish his studies and get his Bachelors Degree. We (the Administration Office) have been in touch with him all along and have done what we could to support and cooperate with him."

Student Government Association co-president Jon Hite said "Craeman Gethers and Robert Earl Brown together are a perfect example of the miscarriage of the American justice system. There were alot of legal hassles that hurt them, and they were not given a fair shake." The SGA has also supported Gethers throughout the past two years, Hite said.

Gethers expressed little contempt for the system of justice in America today. "I have no time for anger. I have to concentrate on the situation at hand and deal with it accordingly. My case is not an unusuality. It's been going on since the beginning of time.

Knowledge is what I need now, but that's only 10 to 15 per cent of what I need to change my situation. I have to learn the law and approach the case in terms of the facts. I do have an urgent need for money right now. My defense committee is just about broke, and lawyers don't want to work if they're not getting paid," Gethers said.

"The law enforcement agencies are set up on the notion that they're there to protect the community, and people are brainwashed into thinking that police forces are effective in their investigation. Police just want to solve a case so that the community will be put at ease," he said.

Gethers also noted, "The guy who really did it may still go in there from time to time to get a Big Mac! The community has been given a false sense of security."

Student trained for emergency medicine

By MARY WYATT
Collegian Staff

The letters EMT stand for Emergency Medical Technician, but to the bearers of this title, they mean much more.

To Randall Silveira and others like him, an EMT is a professional who has been trained, certified and registered by the state "to administer expert emergency medical care in the field, irregardless of the circumstances of the accident or sudden illness."

A Junior at UMass and member of the Student Auxiliary Firefighter's Force of the Amherst Fire Department, Silveira is "first a student, second a firefighter, and third an EMT."

Silveira, under the direction of Chief Jack Doherty, has a dual responsibility to the North Fire Station: the duties of both student firefighter and a registered emergency medical technician. In this capacity, he has the opportunity to be one of the two EMTs required by law to be present when the station ambulance responds to an emergency call.

"As a registered EMT, I am certified in basic life support personal safety, cardiopulmonary resusitation (CPR), emergency cardiac care (ECC), as well as standard and advanced first aid," Silveira said. "Emergency medical technicians serving on an ambulance have the greatest opportunity of any segment of society to alleviate human suffering at the scene of accidental injury or sudden illness during transportation to a medical facility. With proper training and experience, the EMT is equipped to serve as the most valuable lay member of the emergency medical team outside the hospital," he said.

"Presently enrolled in the BDIC program majoring in Emergency Health Care, Silveira said, "I got my start with the UMass Fire and First Aid Unit. Through working with this group, I gained the first-hand knowledge I would later be needing in my chosen field."

"Last January I took part in an internship co-ordinated by Susan Roundy of Monson State Hospital. Working with her, I taught a course in CPR, assisted in the purchasing of the hospital's newly acquired ambulance, and helped to develop a personnel schedule for the Monson emergency medical technicians," he said.

Silveira, a native of Taunton, Mass., spent the summer working as a registered EMT with a Taunton ambulance service. "I also worked for the Bristol County Ambulance Service which involved my being on call any hour day or night," Silveira said.

"Next semester I plan to further my education by enrolling in an advanced program to graduate with a Bachelor of Science degree in Emergency Health Care. My future goal is to become a paramedic; all facets of experience I am getting now will prove beneficial to me later," he said.

"I guess I would say the main reason I am interested in emergency medical training is because it is a field in which I can make my own decisions without anyone telling me what to do. Pushing buttons, recognizing symptoms, something is different every day. Sometimes it is routine, sometimes it is very exciting, sometimes it is tragic, sometimes it is nauseating, but there is always the hope that I may be able to help the victim of accident or sudden illness which could someday be you."

NEAG disapproves funding Kent State demonstration

By DAVE OLMOS
Collegian Staff

Student representatives of the Northeast Area Government voted last night to submit a motion of disapproval to the Student Senate for its recent vote to allocate funds to finance transportation to Kent State for student demonstrators.

The first part of the two part motion expressed sympathy with the cause of the Kent St. demonstrators. The second part states NEAG dissapproval of the "power politics" which NEAG representatives feel were used in the Student Senate meeting to grant the funding for the Revolutionary Student Brigade.

In other NEAG business, plans were finalized for the Fall Day event being held in the Northeast area Saturday, Sept. 24. In the event of rain the activities will be held on the following Sunday outdoors or in the Worcester Dining Commons.

Dave Goodhue, NEAG, co-president, submitted an attendance policy calling for the dismissal of student representatives in the case of three unexcused absences. Goodhue said he feels the policy is necessary to create a responsible area government which he hopes will lead to an "increased participation in students in creating a sense of community in the Northeast area."

Services for handicapped discussed by BOG

By DEBBIE GRAFF
Collegian Staff

Better services to handle the needs of the handicapped students at UMass were some of the many changes proposed and passed by the Campus Center Board of Governors last night.

Board member John Foley suggested setting up a study commission on services and opportunities within the Campus Center-Student Union complex for students with special needs. A group of students and administrators would make a thorough evaluation of many areas affecting handicapped students including programming, food services, transportation services, the physical environment and more. From these evaluations the Board will determine what recommendations to make to the Campus Center administration for the improvement of certain services, or the development of new ones. This motion was passed unanimously.

A motion was also passed involving the art gallery in the Campus Center. The board decided to allocate money for an exhibit of art done by handicapped people. These exhibits will include audio-visual supplements of the artists at work or showing their methods.

Brian DeLima, a representative from the Undergraduate Student Senate, spoke on the rental fees that the campus center administration was considering imposing on student organizations that occupy office space in the Campus Center and Student Union. According to DeLima, the students own the Campus Center complex, and pay for its use with the $79 Campus Center fee every year. DeLima said it would be unfair to charge the RSO groups rent.

UMass faculty salaries below national average

By WILLIAM BLUESTEIN
Collegian Staff

UMass-Amherst faculty salaries rank medium and below national averages according to figures released yesterday by the Chairman of the Negotiating Committee of the Massachusetts Society of Professors.

Norman Watts said the average $27,800 salary of a full professor here is about 50 per cent of the national average. The $20,800 average of associate professors ranks a lower 39 per cent.

The lowest rank is that of an assistant professor. The $16,000 average salary ranks only 17 per cent of the national average. An associate professor has tenure while an assistant does not. This means the younger faculty, who are usually at the assistant level, rank the lowest of all faculty. The ability of the university of attract and retain young professional talent is hampered by this low level, Watts said.

The primary reason for these medium to low averages is a result of UMass professors not having received a cost of living increase for the past four years, due to the state's fiscal crisis.

This is in violation of state law, according to Watts. During the last four years the Consumer Price Index has increased by 36 per cent. This means that the purchasing power of a UMass professor has shrunk by approximately 40 per cent. Nationwide faculty at other public universities have received increasres averaging four per cent per year, Watts said.

In comparison to faculty elsewhere, the fringe benefits at UMass are also poor, according to Watts. Professors here pay into the state retirement system. This system is viewed by many professors to be a bad risk. Watts said the state has experienced problems with this system because it is not concurrently funded, resulting in inadequate funding, and a pension system on unsound financial ground. Other fringe benefits common to most universities, like dental and eye care, are not present here, Watts said.

The deteriorating economic position of UMass faculty was one of the major reasons a faculty union was formed at the university.

Contract negotiations between the MSP and the administration are scheduled to begin on September 26. Issues to be discussed during the negotiations include faculty salaries, fringe benefits, working conditions, and grievance procedures.

Waiting lines cut at dining commons

By MARCIA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Efforts to speed up production and cut down waiting lines are just some of the improvements to be instituted at university dining commons' this semester, according to University Food Services Director Arthur Warren.

Warren said that soft ice cream machines may be installed in some dining commons but the high cost will limit how many will be available.

There will also be at least 20 new items on the menu, many the result of student comment cards, according to Assistant Director of Menu Services Marie Cappadona.

New England Night and International Tour Night will be among the Special Dinners.

Pizza, a new item at the dining commons because of student request, is popular but a "difficult product to make widely acceptable", said Warren.

Of the 10,700 students on the meal plan at UMass, about 6000 use the 14 meal plan.

Wasted food is still a problem. Last year, surveys showed that 60 per cent of the waste could have been eliminated if students had chosen half-portions, Warren said.

A barbecue sponsored by the Union Program Council and University Food Services will be held at the barbecue pits across from Southwest September 27, Warren said.

Trustees defend closed sessions

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

The chairman of the UMass Board of Trustees last night defended the board's use of the executive session, saying the board has always acted in the public interest.

Joseph P. Healey, in a telephone interview, said the trustees' closed door sessions have always been "above board".

A bill in the state legislature waiting for a House vote next week would broaden the 1958 state open meeting law to include the meetings of the University trustees.

Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti earlier this year ruled that UMass is exempt from the open meeting law.

The Massachusetts Newspaper Publishers Association is supporting the current legislation, saying that reporters from newspapers in Springfield and Lowell have been prevented from attending meetings of trustees at UMass at the University of Lowell.

While an editor and reporters from the Springfield Newspapers yesterday said they could not recall any problems with UMass trustees, Lowell Sun Managing Editor Kendall Wallace last night said his reporters encouraged some problems for awhile when the ULowell trustees began to call too many executive sessions without stating their purpose.

After Sun reporters challenged the frequent closed door sessions and "forced the issue" the ULowell trustees became "fairly good" about holding executive sessions, Wallace said.

Wallace said the current ULowell board holds executive sessions only for discussing honorary degrees and faculty union contract negotiations.

Healey said the UMass trustees "follow most provisions" of holding executive sessions allowed by current law which permits closed door sessions for discussing personalities and contract negotiations.

Healey said the UMass trustees always state their purpose for holding executive sessions, and always hold open votes on issues.

State Rep. James G. Collins, D-Amherst, yesterday said the intent of the current open meeting law is that meetings of all public bodies be open, and UMass "should be doing it now."

Collins said the state legislature has opened all its hearings to the public.

Earthfoods treats veggies well

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Have you been looking for around campus for a good vegetarian meal? Well, look no further. You will find just what you have been longing for in the Student Union Commonwealth room. There, you will find Earthfoods, a cafeteria-style vegetarian restaurant.

According to Joanne Fillatti Earthfoods was started in the spring of 1976 by a small group of students interested in providing an alternative to vegetarians on campus.

Since then, Earthfoods has evolved into a collectively, student-run, non-profit organization, Fillatti said.

The atmosphere at Earthfoods is friendly and relaxing. The menu is posted each morning on a blackboard, reminiscent of a few of the area restaurants, and adds a quaint note to the atmosphere.

As a kind of morning teatime, Earthfoods offers herb teas and coffee, as well as a variety of muffins.

According to Fillatti, lunchtime choices include soup, salad, and casseroles. Earthfoods also combines these choices in a Luncheon Special each day. The average price of a Special is $1.50. The lunchtime menu also offers items such as quiche, marinated tomatoes, and vegetarian pizza.

Most of the staff at Earthfoods, new this semester, hope to incorporate some new ideas. To do this, and to insure the continued operation of Earthfoods, your support is needed.

Earthfoods is open from 9:30 a.m. until 5:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. The Earthfoods staff welcomes you, so stop in at teatime, lunchtime, or anytime.

Gov. Dukakis will speak on solar energy

By AMY KAPLAN
Collegian Staff

Governor Michael S. Dukakis will deliver the opening remarks at the Western Regional Solar Energy Conference at UMass on October third, at 9:30 a.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. The Solar Action Office of the Massachusetts Executive Office of Consumer Affairs and the National Solar Heating and Cooling Information Center are sponsoring the event.

The conference will address a variety of topics concerning all areas of solar energy. The need for training professionals and informing consumers will be discussed, as solar energy becomes an increasingly valuable energy source. Other topics to be covered include heating costs, installation guidelines and local building codes.

Basic ideas concerning solar heating technology and costs will be presented in a special evening session for consumers. This should be of special interest to homeowners in the area because of a recent plan developed by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development. The program consists of providing Massachusetts with funds to give grants to 1,375 homeowners and builders or developers who install solar hot water systems, according to the UMass Energy Affairs Office.

The conference is one of a series of solar energy conferences to be held in Massachusetts during September and October. Following the Amherst meeting, sessions will be held in Swansea and Worcester.

Craemen Gethers visits UMass

By ANGELA THOMAS
Black Affairs Editor

Craemen Gethers, who was convicted of the still controversial 1975 robbery of MacDonald's on route 9, made his first appearance on campus yesterday since his conviction in '75.

Craemen's purpose for coming to UMass, is to expose the inconsistencies of the court procedures, and contradictory statements of state witnesses. "I just want to state the issues," said Craemen. "I can prove my whereabouts at the time I was supposed to have committed the robbery. I can prove that I was in no condition to even commit any robbery, and I have the results of two polygraph tests that confirm my innocense."

At the time of the MacDonald robbery, Craemen states that he was on crutches. According to him, he turned his ankle the day before, while playing basketball. The UMass infirmary has records that support Craemen's allegations. These records were used in his defense.

The main topic of Craemen's conversation was his displeasure over his previous three lawyers. Craemen feels that they did not represent him to the best of their ability.

In fact, Craemen refers to all three lawyers as "incompetent." His reasoning is based on three main points. The first being that his lawyers failed to interrogate or interview the state witnesses on their previous statements. Secondly, the failure to bring forth witnesses who were on Craemen's behalf, and lastly, the failure of the courts to acknowledge the implications of two positive polygraph tests.

Craemen commented that his case is not the typical Perry Mason, or the Young Lawyers that one views on television.

Factors involved in a real court scene are prejudice, police pressures for a conviction, district attorneys seeking to enchance their records, and a system of the rich vs. the poor. "Unless you have big cash," noted Craemen, "you don't stand a chance."

Craemen will return to UMass in about a month. He asks for all to support him in any way possible. Letters can be sent to Craemen Gethers' Box 43; MCI Norfolk, Norfolk, Mass. 02056.

Third World corridors detrimental

By TERRELL EVANS
Black Affairs Staff

At the beginning of this school semester, the existence of Third World corridors in Grayson and Webster dorms were threatened by the lack of students.

I have convinced myself these corridors tend to be more detrimental toward Third World students than helpful.

The corridors existence isn't political, other than the fact that there are a large number of Third World students living together in a dorm setting. We must admit that the primary rationalization for the existence of most organizations on campus is political.

'Call it what you want'

The corridors have little or no educational value. There is no set up for tutors or any other academics avenues.

The corridors may even serve as an instrument of isolation. They may isolate Third World students from other students in the dorm. Therefore, the students are prevented from having to deal with non-third world students on a dorm level.

Finally, the primary reason for existence of Third World corridors is social. Obviously, the more socializing a student does, means less studying he or she will do. With the right combination of people, the corridors can be noisy and distractive. Thus, preventing students who want to do work, from doing it when and where they choose.

In order for students to live in this type of setting they must have a certain degree of discipline about themselves. They must be able to say no to frequent social gatherings that come up within the corridors themselves.

To say that without the corridors black students in the area would lose funding from student activities isn't necessarily true.

The same students that live on the corridors can just as easily form an organization of their own, if they were living throughout the dorm. This group could carry on the same type of cultural events the Third World corridors are used to presenting.

This is 1977, there may have been a political need for Third World corridors in the past, but today they seem to exist from the idea of large numbers of black students living in an immediate area, as neighbors.

The Racial Quota question

By JAMES LEWIS
Black Affairs Asst. Editor

The racial quota is under attack. The effect of this decision is as important as the bussing decision. In October, the country will face an important case. Allen Blakke has charged the university of California at Davis with reverse racism. He says that he was more qualified to enter the Med school than the sixteen Blacks and Hispanics who did enter.

It is impossible for a racist institution to commit reverse racism. The decision will set authoritative policy for Third World employment. The racial quota would give Black people and minorities their proportional place in profession according to their number in population. It is insane to charge an affirmative action program with reverse racism. This is an obvious attack the white peple will use, more and more in the future, because the monopolizing of the system will not permit a free enterprise system, and more and more white people can only hope to maintain a middle class status. Mr. Blakke is 34 years old and this is the second time he has been turned down. His attempt to blame "unqualified minorities" is an unjust attack on the rightful establishment of Black profession, due to them, in this country.

There were 34 white with lower scores than his who were accepted for the school. There were 100 slots to be filled. This is an obvious attempt of this racist, suggestive lie to insist its supremacy at the loss of non-white people. This type of action is insane and is condemned by Truth. The truth cannot be held back, no matter what the power invents.

WBLK RSO 104

WBLK is a student run facility located in New Africa House. It was proposed in the spring semester of 1976 to the undergraduate student senate. It received an initial grant of $7,585.00 for equipment, then it was granted a fiscal 77 budget of $17,018.00, this money was used for the extra equipment renovation of the site, building of the facility records and supplies. This year WBLK has a budget of a little over $11,000,000 which will be used for completion and operation of the station.

We need qualified and dedicated people for all facets of the station's operation. WBLK does not have an FCC license at this time and obtaining this will be the major thrust of the organization this year. We will still broadcast at low power until we obtain a license from the FCC.

WBLK is dedicated to providing an outlet for Third World and progressive issues and culture.

WBLK is having a meeting in room 422, New Africa House this Saturday at 2:00 p.m. We are looking forward to seeing you there.....

Get Down to the Best Disco in Town

The Asian American Students Association is sponsoring a disco at the campus center 10th floor on September 23 at 9:00. The disco will benefit the Kenney Chin-Liz Young defense fund. They are Asian Americans who were unjustly convicted for a crime they never committed. Like so many other third world community organizers, they have been the target for police repression. They were used as scapegoats for the secret service's incompetence in the supposed assassination plot on Japanese Emperor Hirihito's life. It is not only an issue for Asian Americans, but also of the entire Third World community. Please come and support this worthy cause. Admission $1.00

The Third World Women's Center

The Third World Women's Center located in B16 Baker House in Central Area, is currently organizing its agenda for the fall semester. This organization, develops and utilizes the creativity, intelligence and energy of Third World people in activities that contribute to positive development of Third World sisters at the University of Massachusetts.

The majority of the 1976-77 school year was spent meeting and recruiting women for the Center. There were two very successful workshops, dealing with relationships between Black men and women.

During the Third World Women's Week (April 19-24), some events included "Distant Voices" (a play) and "360 Degrees of Fashion" (a fashion show), written, planned, and developed by sisters on and off campus. Featured guests included Dr. Francis Welsing, Vinnie Burrows, and a concert performance by Melba Moore. Other activities of the year included movies, speakers, and a Third World Women's Pot Luck Dinner.

This year, the Center has taken an active part in showing "Malcolm X" and planning the Umoja Cabaret, to be held Saturday, Sept. 17th. We need more ideas and support for planning our calendar for the rest of the school year. The first meeting of the Third World Women's Center will be Sunday, September 25th at 3:00 p.m. All officers and members are urged to attend. Any sisters (especially freshmen) interested are welcome. Come with your ideas!

News in Brief

Moluccan gunmen sentenced to jail

ASSEN, The Netherlands [UPI] — Smiling and joking, seven South Moluccan gunmen were given prison sentences ranging from six to nine years yesterday for their role in the seizure of a school and train last May in a terrorist operation that cost eight lives.

The public prosecutor had demanded maximum 10-year sentences for the seven, who took more than 170 persons hostage — including 110 children — to press demands for the independence of their island homeland.

The 19-day seizures were the longest hostage-taking incidents in modern records.

Reading the 20-minute verdict, Judge Frans Fliek said the defendants' actions "could not be justified by their political ideals.

"Especially for people saying they fight for their freedom and that of their suppressed brothers and sisters, bereaving other people of their liberty should be an unacceptable weapon," he said.

The defendants appeared hardly impressed. When the judge had finished reading the verdict, they joked among themselves and slapped each other on the back.

Three of the men, considered the ringleaders in the school takeover, were sentenced to nine years in prison. The three already had police records in connection with previous South Moluccan actions.

New York resort caters to gays

HILLBURN, N.Y. [AP] — The landmark Motel-on-the-Mountain embarked on a new policy of catering to homosexuals yesterday and irate local residents said they feared it would change their community.

Some citizens threatened demonstrations outside the motel, which sits atop a large hill 30 miles northwest of New York City and advertised itself as the "ultimate resort for gays in the Northern states."

Local residents talked of enlisting the support of Anita Bryant, who led a successful campaign for repeal of a Miami-area ordinance prohibiting housing and job discrimination against homosexuals.

"I think they are over-reacting," said Thomas Esposito, 30, the manager of the 100-unit motel. "I personally feel their fears are unwarranted."

The residents said they were concerned that the motel would to establishment of other homosexual-oriented businesses and draw pornography dealers.

More Vietnamese to enter U.S.A.

WASHINGTON [UPI] — From 45,000 to 60,000 additional Vietnamese refugees will come to the United States within the next four years, a State Department official told the Senate Human Resources Committee Thursday.

He urged federal refugee aid programs be extended.

Philip C. Habib, undersecretary of state for political affairs, urged federal refugee aid programs be extended to handle the new arrivals.

Habib said the new refugees, will arrive at the rate of 15,000 per year for three or four years under a program announced.

Franklin teachers ordered jailed

DEDHAM, Mass. [AP] — Another 27 Franklin school teachers were ordered yesterday to jail in the bitter deadlock which has tied up a school system of 5,000 students for seven days.

Norfolk County Superior Court Judge John M. Greaney sent the teachers to join eight of their leaders sentenced Wednesday to indefinite jail terms for defying his order they return to classes.

Twenty five of the junior and senior high school teachers went to prison. Two others agreed to report Friday After observing the Jewish Yom Kippur holiday Thursday.

Judge Greaney also ordered 50 more teachers to appear in his court Friday and another 50 Monday to face sentencing on the same charge of contempt of court.

He said he was considering levying heavy personal fines instead of jail sentences.

Carter's energy program damaged in Senate

WASHINGTON [AP] — In a major new setback to President Carter's energy program, the Senate declined 52-46 yesterday to scrap an industry-supported plan to deregulate new natural gas.

The crucial test vote was a clear defeat for the President's proposal to continue federal price controls on gas and marked the latest in a series of blows his energy plan has been dealt by the Senate.

It came despite a major, last-minute lobbying campaign by Carter and other top administration officials.

Some administration allies prepared to mount a filibuster to keep the deeply divided Senate from approving the rival industry-backed measure, while others talked about the possibility of seeking a compromise with deregulation forces.

Republicans joined with oilstate Democrats in defeating the administration-backed effort to kill the deregulation measure.

Sponsored by Sens. James Pearson, R-Kan., and Lloyd Bentsen, D-Tex., the proposal would substitute for the President's plan the immediate deregulation of newly produced onshore gas.

Under Carter's plan, federal price controls would be retained but the $1.45 per-thousand-cubic-foot lid would be increased to $1.75. The administration bill, approved by the House in August, would also extend price controls to the now unregulated markets within gas-producing states.

The effect of yesterday's vote is to keep alive the industry deregulation proposal, which is similar to legislation passed by the Senate in 1975 but rejected by the House.

Although the Senate is still free to accept the President's plan, this was viewed by Senate leaders as unlikely.

Even before the vote, Carter was reported ready to accept as last-resort compromise a measure like one proposed by Sen. Bennett Johnston, D-La., calling for gradually removing price controls from gas over a four-year period.

Senate sources said both the President and Vice President Walter Mondale had been calling senators urging them to support such a compromise if the administration position is rejected.

Gas producers contend the price controls have kept gas prices artificially lower, discouraging exploration for new gas supplies and prompting shortages such as those of last winter.

American nun released in Rhodesia

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa [AP] — An American nun who openly sympathized with black guerrillas in Rhodesia was freed from jail and expelled from that war-torn country yesterday. During a flight here she said she believed international pressure brought about her release.

Sister Janice McLaughlin, 35, a Maryknoll nun from Pittsburgh, had been jailed for three weeks on security-law charges after she and three colleagues prepared a report criticizing the white Rhodesian government's treatment of black civilians in the five-year guerrilla war.

Nuclear cloud moves faster than predicted

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The radioactive cloud from last week's Chinese nuclear blast is crossing the United States faster than expected, and expanded rain forecasts have raised the possibility of fallout in many eastern states, officials said yesterday.

In western states already covered by the cloud, however, federal officials reported no signs of unusual radioactivity reaching the ground.

The Environmental Protection Agency said a new forecast showed the leading edge of the cloud blanketing the East Coast from North Carolina to Canada by last night, 24 hours earlier than initially predicted.

In addition, it said, forecasts of possible rain Thursday night and Friday were extended to cover a broad region from the upper Mississippi River Valley to the Appalachian Mountains. Earlier predictions had showed the area of possible rain centered over the Great Lakes.

The expanded rain forecast "automatically increases the concern" about the possibility of small amounts of nuclear "rainout" falling to Earth, where it might contaminate pasture land and get into cows' milk, an EPA spokeswoman said.

"We're hoping that there will be no rain or that the rainclouds will remain below the nuclear cloud, reducing the amount of rainout," the spokeswoman said.

The debris from the four megaton blast, touched off by China Saturday, began crossing the U.S. West Coast Tuesday at an altitude of about 35,000 feet. EPA officials said it was still at that altitude.

Samples taken from 37 monitoring stations operated by the EPA and the Energy Research and Development Administration — most of them in areas already reached by the cloud — showed radiation levels of less than half the normal background level, officials said.

"There was no unusual activity in samples from Alaska and the Pacific Northwest, where cloud passed through Tuesday and Wednesday," the EPA said. "There is no risk to public health in western states and we are not advising any protective actions at this time."

No precautions were suggested for Eastern areas either, although EPA officials said Ohio had advised farmers to move cattle into shelter and feed them stored grain until the cloud passed.

Full monitoring is planned in the cloud area, the EPA said, with advisories to be issued by either federal or state officials if needed.

The agency said the leading edge of the cloud should cover an area bounded by North Carolina, Tennessee, Kentucky and Oklahoma to the south, by the Great Lakes region to the west and by Canada to the North by early Friday morning.

White heroin takes its toll

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. [UPI] — Dealers selling deadly white Mediterranean heroin in Springfield probably didn't know they were selling dope that was 20 times as strong as normally sold on the streets, police said yesterday.

Tests at the Department of Public Health's Division of Food and Drugs Laboratory at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst showed the drug — which has killed one person and injured 11 others — is 69 per cent pure heroin, Captain Robert Maffen said. Heroin normally found on the city's streets is three or four per cent pure, he said.

"I'm sure they didn't know what they had. If they did, they could have cut it 10 times and still have had almost double the normal street strength. Why settle for half of the value and why sell a drug you know is going to give hot shots and kill people?" Meffen said.

Police yesterday continued to talk to informants but we haven't come up with anything worthwhile. There's no more evidence of any sales and we're still looking," he said. "I'm sure whoever's got it has gone underground."

Meffen said the dope was the strongest heroin he had seen in 30 years as a policeman.

"The only theory we have is somebody stole it somewhere and thought it was street stuff when it really hadn't been cut yet," he said.

A teen-aged boy and an 11-year-old girl have been charged with possession of the white heroin. Gabriel Martinez, 17, of Springfield, was being held in lieu of $500 bail pending a Sept. 30 court appearance on charges of possessing 10 bags of the drug.

The girl was released in her parents' custody pending a juvenile hearing on charges she possessed 17 bags of the heroin. Her identity was not disclosed.

Meffen said police were also waiting to see if other addicts would suffer overdoses from using the heroin.

"The unfortunate part of this is that addicts go off by themselves to shoot up and someone might have an overdose from this stuff and not be found for a couple of days," Meffen said.

Meffen said police were "expecting they might find other victims of the drug" because "if one dies, who knows what might happen to others? We're just sitting and waiting."

U.S. to abide with arms pact

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Secretary of State Cyrus Vance said yesterday the United States will allow the 1972 U.S.-Soviet strategic arms accord to expire Oct. 3, but will abide by its provisions as negotiations continue with Russia.

Vance said U.S. observance of the pact's provisions was conditional on Russia similarly exercising restraint.

Vance made the disclosure in a letter to Sen. John Sparkman, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, as he met with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko in a new round of talks on strategic arms limits.

After a first five hour session, both ministers acknowledged to reporters at the State Department the search for a new Soviet-American strategic arms limitations lasting through 1985 remains beset by problems.

They agreed to meet again in the late afternoon to discuss the Middle East situation. Gromyko meets President Carter this morning.

"The main strategic arms issues remain unresolved. Those are the issues we are addressing," Vance said.

Gromyko added: "We waded into the stream and have not emerged. There were lots of rocks. When we will get out I cannot say. I urge patience. We want to see success in the talks."

The U.S. "unilateral statement" informally extending the current strategic arms pact will be the subject of a hearing by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee Monday. Chief U.S. arms negotiator Paul Warnke will testify, committee aides said.

The declaration states:

"In order to maintain the status quo as the negotiations are being completed, the United States declares its intention not to take any action inconsistent with the provisions of the Interim Agreement which expires Oct. 3 ... provided the Soviet Union exercises similar restraint."

Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., was reported by aides to be deeply concerned by what he considers to be the administration's efforts "to circumvent" a congressional prerogative to review arms agreements. Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., was said also to be disturbed.

BERT
Welcome
LABELLE

CALHOUN, Ga: (UPI) Bert Lance acknowledges applause from the citizens of Calhoun as they welcome him back home at the Gordon County Courthouse.

Lance returns home

WASHINGTON [AP] — Bert Lance returned to Georgia as a private citizen yesterday, still facing large debts, government investigations and an uncertain future.

The former budget director and his wife flew from Washington's National Airport to his hometown of Calhoun, Ga., on a private plane that he rented himself.

"You know I've got to come back to Georgia," he told Atlanta radio station WSB by telephone before his departure. "That's where our home is."

Lance, who resigned Wednesday after eight months and one day as President Carter's budget director, said he plans to "get a little rest" but has made no decision yet about any other job.

"We'll take that as we have been taking things — one day at a time," Lance said.

In Atlanta, John Stembler, chairman of the board of the National Bank of Georgia which Lance ran until last January, said, "Bert can have the job of chairman if he wants it tomorrow."

Lance met with his attorney, Clark Clifford, before leaving Washington. He did not go to the Office of Management and Budget's offices, but an OMB aide said Lance would return to the capital Monday to host a reception for the budget and White House staffs.

Four federal agencies are still investigating Lance's banking and personal financial affairs prior to his appointment to head OMB.

The head of Georgia's Banking Department, Jack Dunn, said several questions about Lance's banking practices would have to be resolved before Lance could take on another bank job.

"It's not a clear yes or no on Bert," Dunn said.

However, the NBG is a nationally chartered bank and Dunn's office does not have jurisdiction over it.

The Justice Department has been investigating Lance's private use of an NBG airplane to see if he violated campaign laws or was misapplying bank funds. Lance flew on the plane about 800 times as bank president in 1975 and 1976, occasionally to political and sporting events and once to the Mardi Gras in New Orleans.

Lance said the trips were in the bank's best interest.

The Internal Revenue Service is trying to decide if Lance owes back taxes on the trips, while the Federal Election Commission is checking for possible campaign law violations.

The Securities and Exchange Commission is investigating whether the bank omitted pertinent information about Lance's finances in its statements to stockholders.

Carter's eyes open for new budgetmaker

WASHINGTON [AP] — President Carter, the weight of the Bert Lance affair lifted from his shoulder, began a hunt yesterday for a successor who is certain to face tougher scrutiny than Lance did before being confirmed as the government's chief budgetmaker.

As Lance, the first of Carter's Cabinet-rank officers to quit, left for a long weekend at home in Georgia, the President's advisors started eyeing his prospective successors and the chairman of a Senate committee pledged to scrutinize Carter's choice more closely before granting approval.

"While speculation on possible Lance successors has not centered on any one person, these names have surfaced:

—James T. McIntyre Jr., director of Georgia's budget office in 1972 while Carter was governor and now deputy director of the Office of Management and Budget, which Lance had headed.

—Robert Strauss, former charman of the Democratic National Committee and now the U.S. ambassador for trade negotiations. Strauss has said, however, that he would not take the job.

—Alice Rivlin, director of the Congressional Budget Office.

—Hale Champion, former California finance director and now an official at the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Lance himself indicated that he expected his successor to get a more thorough going-ove than he did.

And he seemed to be concerned that it might scare good prospects away.

Rewriting history

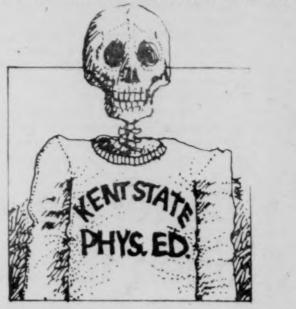
On a college campus, people are likely to foster the misconception that history exists solely in history books. But real history is inextricably linked to the very buildings and battlefields mentioned in those books. In fact, even where the books have failed to record history accurately or completely, the Parthenons and Wounded Knees remain, vivid images and reminders of the past that is an integral part of us all.

Thus Tom Hayden could speak of the controversy surrounding the proposed gymnasium at Kent State as a question of who would write this small but significant episode of American history. To alter the landscape at the very site where four innocent students were shot in 1970 is comparable to taking an eraser to this history books.



Alternative sites for the gym existed before the present one was chosen, and the obvious question is why the trustees at Kent State would choose the most controversial location. Claims have been made that this is the cheapest, or perhaps most convenient, place. But after months of protest and court cases, and the involvement of hundreds in the battle to oppose the construction, it seems that the site is both costly and decidedly inconvenient.

When it was apparent that opposition was stronger than the trustees had expected, a "compromise" position was attained — the gym would be dedicated to the students shot, and to the National Guardsmen who shot them down. Such an act once again refuses to acknowledge that someone was wrong when the shooting occurred. And once again, history is rewritten.

The protesters who have been waging this war, been arrested, missed their classes, devoted their weekends and lost their jobs, are not dreamy radicals who wish this were still the 60s. They are people who remember Orwell's eerie portrayal of a society that rearranges and fabricates its own history and would like to prevent the same kind of thing from happening in the U.S. in 1977, let alone 1984.

The students of Kent State will certainly survive if the gym is constructed. A tragic event in our history will still be read about in books on the war. But the most poignant reminder of that tragedy — "Exhibit Number One," as Dick Gregory put it — will be plowed over forever.

No, no one would build a parking lot on Bunker Hill. but the people who plan where to build gyms and parking lots are also the people who would like to forget Kent State. Hopefully the protesters this weekend won't let them.

Athletic department rip-off

jay martus

How many people realize that they are paying $30.00 a year towards intercollegiate athletics here at UMass? Most are unaware of where and what their "athletic fee" is used for. Being of a curious nature, I have found that almost $600,000.00 is raised each year from the fee. Where does the money go? It goes solely to pay for intercollegiate sports and not the intramural program. A separate fee, the physical education fee ($20.00 per person for one year), pays for the intramurals.

Of the $30.00 spent on intercollegiate athletics, $8.00 per student per year is supposedly collected to pay off the stadium building debt. This $8 is clearly established as being an equitable assessment per capita (head), of shared cost, for the use of the stadium. While many would argue that they could care less if the stadium exists or not, we are obligated to cough up $30.00 a year, with $8.00 earmarked for the UMass Building Authority and friends. Guess What? The Athletic Department isn't giving all of our $8.00 to pay off the stadium. When the stadium was first built there were approximately 10,000 students. Eight dollars per year then totalled eighty thousand dollars. As enrollment increased, the prescribed formula for paying off the stadium was ignored. Now, even with an enrollment of over 18,000 students the contribution is still only $80,000.00 per year. The total money siphoned off since the stadium was built is $476,000.00! Where does the rest of the money end up? Back to the Athletic program.

Of the rest of the money, over $300,000 goes to men's sports, with less than $50,000 for women's sports. Football and basketball comprises almost all of the money for men's sports. While the Athletic Department is seeking an increase in its fee to extend its women's sports programs, it claims it can't fund the demands for new sports because it hasn't enough money.

Two claims are made to justify this blatant sex discrimination. First they assert that women in athletics is a new phenomenon. More accurately, their attention has been forced to change because of external pressure. The department of Health, Education, and Welfare mandated for 1978 that any institution receiving federal funds must not discriminate on the basis of sex (Title IX). Up until four years ago about $200,000 a year went to athletic scholarships, exclusively to men. Now about $25,000 finds its way to women. Second, the Athletic Department feels that women are not showing a significant interest in sports to warrant significant resource allocations. This year about seventy women want to form a women's soccer team. They have opponents (a potentially large schedule), qualified participants, and desire. I think that constitutes an interest. The Athletic Department refused them even a few hundred dollars for uniforms, buses and equipment, to start their venture.

The time has come to end this lunacy and to reorganize the process of decisionmaking in the Athletic Department. Our white-male dominated athletic department is an active and enthusiastic participant in the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA), a group which mandates that students cannot control the governing body of the Athletic Department, and has consistently fought the logical and reasonable reforms of Title IX against sex discrimination. Given all this, how do they dare to ask for a fee increase?

Honest mistakes, Pres., are certainly tolerable

bob melia

Being both a concerned student and a conscientious citizen, I'm always alert for new ways in which I can serve my campus and my country, and that's why as soon as I heard that Mr. Lance had resigned I sent the following letter to President Carter:

Dear Mr. President (I wrote):

I understand you are having some problems down there in Washington. As far as I can tell, your associate, Mr. Lance, was forced out because he forgot to tell one bank that the $450,000 collateral he had put up for their loan was already pledged to another bank. Mr. Lance maintained he was innocent, but people said he had to go.

I don't believe this, Mr. President, and I'll tell you why. Although I have never actually committed overdraft, I admit that I have looked at other people's checkbooks with lust in my wallet. I had also once forgotten to tell my dad that my mom had already given me the 15 cents for taking out the trash and I collected from him, too. So I'm not about to criticize Mr. Lance — no one can remember everything.

But it seems that some people, especially Senators, can't understand this, and now you have to find a new budget director. I know it must have been hard to fire an old, dear friend (don't get me wrong, sir, I'm not implying that your friendship had anything to do with Mr. Lance getting the job. Our governor, Michael Dukakis, won't give any jobs to legislators' friends, and now he has no friends, so I guess he has no more problems).

What I suggest you do, sir, is send Mr. Lance up here in January, when UMass President Robert Wood resigns. I think Mr. Lance would like it here because we are far more tolerant of simple, honest mistakes, especially overdrafts. Let me give you a few examples.

Last spring Chancellor Bromery discovered that too many students were writing overdrafts. Instead of questioning them (like they did to poor Mr. Lance), Chancellor Bromery devised a far more humane and intelligent solution; he simply shut down the check-cashing facilities in the Student Union. Now we have to wait in line a half hour at Whitmore if we want to write overdrafts and everyone is happy.

Also, the Chancellor and his associates recently made an overdraft themselves. You see, Mr. President, they pledged the same dormitory room as collateral for tuition payments from 400 students. These students paid $900 each for the room, which means that the Chancellor overdrafted $360,000. Yet none of us would ever be so small-minded and mean spirited as to question the Chancellor's integrity, far less his intelligence.

Yes, we are always willing to tolerate simple, honest mistakes here. Some would say that that's the reason this University is in the shape it's in, but don't pay any attention to those SOP radicals; the administration sure doesn't — they just keep on making mistakes.

But not only would we forgive Mr. Lance his trespasses, we would enthusiastically welcome him because his special talents are desperately needed here. We need someone who can outwit Gov. Dukakis when it comes to juggling books. Every year we ask him for money to improve our school; but each year he says he doesn't have any to give us. However, all the time he had a $69 million dollar surplus which he didn't tell anyone about.

Only recently has it become clear what he is going to do with the money. He has just vetoed a bill which would deny poor women state-subsidized abortions and he plans to use the surplus to pay for their medical bills. This seems most generous of him but it's really not, because, Mr. President, he figured that the money he has to spend on abortions will be returned to him in spades 18 years from now when he doesn't have to send all these poor kids to UMass.

As a born-again Christian (I don't really understand how you can be born again, Mr. President, but if I accept Mr. Lance's word I would certainly never question yours) I am sure you find this idea repulsive. What kind of man would not give kids a chance to be born even once, let alone twice?

I hope I have impressed upon you our desperate need for a man of Mr. Lance's calibre and character, and now that he's unemployed perhaps you could persuade him to come to Amherst. In fact, Mr. Lance's resignation might be the best thing that could have happened for all of us, for it's obvious that a man with his track record is needed here far more than in Washington.

There is just one thing you might want to warn him about, though. The Bursar's office only honors personal checks up to $50.

Sincerely,
Bob Melia

Health—an inalienable right

fifi ball

So many of us have families who've come "up from under", who started out poor, worked very hard, and ended up well off. They've indoctrinated us with some pretty tight-fisted attitudes. It's time now for us to realize that those inalienable rights; life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, must be guaranteed to all people whatever the cost.

Clydesdale and Francis, two UMass Food Science professors, in their book Food, Nutrition, and You (1977), quote Coles and Clayton:

"Let me describe what I have seen among 50 or so people who live in four small cabins at the edge of a large plantation (in Mississippi). In child after child I have seen evidence of ... malnutrition, with consequent injury to the body's tissues — its muscles, bones, and skin — accompanied by a psychological state of malaise."

"Diarrhea, chronic sores, chronic leg and arm (untreated) injuries and deformities — they are everywhere around ...

Clydesdale and Francis go on to quote Senator Ernest F. Hollings:

"Fifteen million desperately poor Americans are going hungry in America today. Most of them are young children whose brains and bodies will be forever stunted by a lack of food. Many others are women and old people for whom America's promise of plenty has been a lifelong sham.

"These are Americans who will forever live outside the normal systems of society and free enterprise and whose contribution to the future of America will be virtually nonexistent until something is done to reverse the horrible cycle of poverty."

He goes on, "Americans are going hungry because the food stamp program does not work for large numbers of them, ... because they do not have the money to buy food, ... because the free commodity food program is a farce, ... because the world's largest food delivery system ... has for the most part ignored the poor who so desperately need our help."

What we need is a national health, dental and food plan that guarantees as healthy an existence as possible for all the people. There should never exist a situation in this country where someone is starving or otherwise malnourished, and has no way out. We, most of us, enjoy a very secure living standard all the time. Our parents may grumble about bills, but we've never been backed into a corner like those people in Mississippi.

No one should ever be denied the right to achieve their full potential. That right is removed in cases of neglected health due to poverty.

If our country's morals are to be based on the notion that personal freedom is sacred, then that freedom must be guaranteed to all citizens.

Yes, any national health care, dental care, or free food plan is going to cost tax money. But, so what? We can certainly afford to insure that no one in our country starves or goes without necessary medical attention.

It's silly for us to worry that the system might be taken advantage of. Only until the sickness and starvation are totally eliminated can we allow ourselves the luxury of that kind of selfishness.

Bromery's speech covered well

To the Editor:

My congratulations to the Collegian for your coverage of Chancellor Bromery's appearance at the Conference on Student Empowerment. Bromery's comments, in all likelihood, will lead to greater student involvement in the unionization issue.

In the article entitled "Bromery Discourages Union" [Collegian Mon., Sept. 19,] Chancellor Bromery called on the students to "think twice" before creating a student union. Students, says Bromery, should consider that there are Administrators and Faculty involved in collective bargaining and the addition of students would only "add to the complication" of university affairs. In the Chancellor's opinion, the students do not represent a viewpoint that could be potentially valuable to their own education.

In this view, the students are expected to accept policy decisions handed down by the Administration without any input. For those of us who feel our opinions can be of some use to our own education, this comes as a direct insult.

Further on in his speech, Bromery suggests that the students use the existing apparatus for student action before they think of unionizing. I assume that "mechanism" for student empowerment that Bromery is refering to is the Student Government Association. This author was a member of the SGA, and I believe the administration could not possibly have designed a better system for students to hopelessly entangle themselves in. The staunchest of non-union supporters agree that the Student Senate has been largely ineffective in its attempts to change any kind of University policy regarding students.

The need for a Student union is for the students to decide; after all, it's our education. Contrary to what the Chancellor may believe, the students are intelligent enough to offer a much needed perspective toward university policy. To ignore the will of the students and to blatantly state that students would only add to the confusion of university policy is a direct insult to the student body. If the Administration does not value the opinions of the students how could they possibly make decisions that are advantageous to the student body?

In response to 'discrimination'

To the Editor:

I would like to respond with a few facts to Paul Yanowitch's editorial in the Monday Collegian concerning the Allan Bakke case. Mr. Yanowitch based an argument on the assumption that it has been proven irrefutably that Allan Bakke has, in fact, been the victim of reverse discrimination, and the further assumption that the University of California at Davis has been shown to be operating a strict quota system.

It would be very difficult for any prosecution to demonstrate that Allan Bakke was twice denied admission to Davis solely because he is white. Bakke's age, now 37, may weigh more heavily against him than his race, as may any number of other variables. For example, the fact that he received his undergraduate degree 10-15 years ago may mean that his educational background, despite his 3.5 GPA, is simply inadequate for the Davis medical program. In addition, Bakke has been denied admission to ten other medical schools besides Davis. To my knowledge, he has not filed suit against these universities for "reverse discrimination", which would indicate that there may be other factors making Allan Bakke an unsuccessful med school candidate than his race.

Further, the Davis med school admissions policy sets aside 16 places in each class of 100 for "disadvantaged students". Those candidates who qualify as disadvantaged, a category which is not restricted to racial minorites and into which white students may fall, compete within that category for admission. The GPA cut-off point for these students is 2.1-2.2. The GPA cut-off point for regular candidates is 2.5. A glance at the picture of the Davis med school class of 1977 appearing in this week's Newsweek shows that there are considerably more than 16 women and minority students in the class. Presumably, these students were able to compete successfully for admission without special consideration.

All the evidence that I have been able to assemble fails to persuade me that Allan Bakke has been discriminated against because he is a white male as he claims. Like Mr. Yanowitch, I do not like the idea of a quota system, in part because quota systems can also be used to prevent or curtail the hiring and admitting of members of socially disadvantaged groups. For example, I would be distressed to learn that there could be no more than 16 minority students at David because of a strict quota system. I am also not persuaded that twelve years of affirmative action has had the dramatic effect on hiring policies that many white males irrationally fear it has. And I would hate to see Allan Bakke win his case on the strength of such irrational fears to the detriment of affirmative action.

Athletic department rip-off

How many people realize that they are paying $30.00 a year towards intercollegiate athletics here at UMass? Most are unaware of where and what their "athletic fee" is used for. Being of a curious nature, I have found that almost $600,000.00 is raised each year from the fee. Where does the money go? It goes solely to pay for intercollegiate sports and not the intramural program. A separate fee, the physical education fee ($20.00 per person for one year), pays for the intramurals.

Of the $30.00 spent on intercollegiate athletics, $8.00 per student per year is supposedly collected to pay off the stadium building debt. This $8 is clearly established as being an equitable assessment per capita (head), of shared cost, for the use of the stadium. While many would argue that they could care less if the stadium exists or not, we are obligated to cough up $30.00 a year, with $8.00 earmarked for the UMass Building Authority and friends. Guess What? The Athletic Department isn't giving all of our $8.00 to pay off the stadium. When the stadium was first built there were approximately 10,000 students. Eight dollars per year then totalled eighty thousand dollars. As enrollment increased, the prescribed formula for paying off the stadium was ignored. Now, even with an enrollment of over 18,000 students the contribution is still only $80,000.00 per year. The total money siphoned off since the stadium was built is $476,000.00! Where does the rest of the money end up? Back to the Athletic program.

Of the rest of the money, over $300,000 goes to men's sports, with less than $50,000 for women's sports. Football and basketball comprises almost all of the money for men's sports. While the Athletic Department is seeking an increase in its fee to extend its women's sports programs, it claims it can't fund the demands for new sports because it hasn't enough money.

Two claims are made to justify this blatant sex discrimination. First they assert that women in athletics is a new phenomenon. More accurately, their attention has been forced to change because of external pressure. The department of Health, Education, and Welfare mandated for 1978 that any institution receiving federal funds must not discriminate on the basis of sex (Title IX). Up until four years ago about $200,000 a year went to athletic scholarships, exclusively to men. Now about $25,000 finds its way to women. Second, the Athletic Department feels that women are not showing a significant interest in sports to warrant significant resource allocations. This year about seventy women want to form a women's soccer team. They have opponents (a potentially large schedule), qualified participants, and desire. I think that constitutes an interest. The Athletic Department refused them even a few hundred dollars for uniforms, buses and equipment, to start their venture.

The time has come to end this lunacy and to reorganize the process of decisionmaking in the Athletic Department. Our white-male dominated athletic department is an active and enthusiastic participant in the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA), a group which mandates that students cannot control the governing body of the Athletic Department, and has consistently fought the logical and reasonable reforms of Title IX against sex discrimination. Given all this, how do they dare to ask for a fee increase?

Honest mistakes, Pres., are certainly tolerable

bob melia

Being both a concerned student and a conscientious citizen, I'm always alert for new ways in which I can serve my campus and my country, and that's why as soon as I heard that Mr. Lance had resigned I sent the following letter to President Carter:

Dear Mr. President (I wrote):

I understand you are having some problems down there in Washington. As far as I can tell, your associate, Mr. Lance, was forced out because he forgot to tell one bank that the $450,000 collateral he had put up for their loan was already pledged to another bank. Mr. Lance maintained he was innocent, but people said he had to go.

What I suggest you do, sir, is send Mr. Lance up here in January, when UMass President Robert Wood resigns. I think Mr. Lance would like it here because we are far more tolerant of simple, honest mistakes, especially overdrafts. Let me give you a few examples.

These students paid $900 each for the room, which means that the Chancellor overdrafted $360,000. Yet none of us would ever be so small-minded and mean spirited as to question the Chancellor's integrity, far less his intelligence.

Yes, we are always willing to tolerate simple, honest mistakes here. Some would say that that's the reason this University is in the shape it's in, but don't pay any attention to those SOP radicals; the administration sure doesn't — they just keep on making mistakes.

So many of us have families who've come "up from under", who started out poor, worked very hard, and ended up well off. They've indoctrinated us with some pretty tight-fisted attitudes. It's time now for us to realize that those inalienable rights; life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, must be guaranteed to all people whatever the cost.

Clydesdale and Francis, two UMass Food Science professors, in their book Food, Nutrition, and You (1977), quote Coles and Clayton:

"Let me describe what I have seen among 50 or so people who live in four small cabins at the edge of a large plantation (in Mississippi). In child after child I have seen evidence of ... malnutrition, with consequent injury to the body's tissues — its muscles, bones, and skin — accompanied by a psychological state of malaise."

"Diarrhea, chronic sores, chronic leg and arm (untreated) injuries and deformities — they are everywhere around ...

Clydesdale and Francis go on to quote Senator Ernest F. Hollings:

"Fifteen million desperately poor Americans are going hungry in America today. Most of them are young children whose brains and bodies will be forever stunted by a lack of food. Many others are women and old people for whom America's promise of plenty has been a lifelong sham.

"These are Americans who will forever live outside the normal systems of society and free enterprise and whose contribution to the future of America will be virtually non-existent until something is done to reverse the horrible cycle of poverty."

He goes on, "Americans are going hungry because the food stamp program does not work for large numbers of them, ... because they do not have the money to buy food, ... because the free commodity food program is a farce, ... because the world's largest food delivery system ... has for the most part ignored the poor who so desperately need our help."

What we need is a national health, dental and food plan that guarantees as healthy an existence as possible for all the people. There should never exist a situation in this country where someone is starving or otherwise malnourished, and has no way out. We, most of us, enjoy a very secure living standard all the time. Our parents may grumble about bills, but we've never been backed into a corner like those people in Mississippi.

No one should ever be denied the right to achieve their full potential. That right is removed in cases of neglected health due to poverty.

If our country's morals are to be based on the notion that personal freedom is sacred, then that freedom must be guaranteed to all citizens.

Yes, any national health care, dental care, or free food plan is going to cost tax money. But, so what? We can certainly afford to insure that no one in our country starves or goes without necessary medical attention.

It's silly for us to worry that the system might be taken advantage of. Only until the sickness and starvation are totally eliminated can we allow ourselves the luxury of that kind of selfishness.

Bromery's speech covered well

To the Editor:

My congratulations to the Collegian for your coverage of Chancellor Bromery's appearance at the Conference on Student Empowerment. Bromery's comments, in all likelihood, will lead to greater student involvement in the unionization issue.

In the article entitled "Bromery Discourages Union" [Collegian Mon., Sept. 19,] Chancellor Bromery called on the students to "think twice" before creating a student union. Students, says Bromery, should consider that there are Administrators and Faculty involved in collective bargaining and the addition of students would only "add to the complication" of university affairs. In the Chancellor's opinion, the students do not represent a viewpoint that could be potentially valuable to their own education.

In this view, the students are expected to accept policy decisions handed down by the Administration without any input. For those of us who feel our opinions can be of some use to our own education, this comes as a direct insult.

Further on in his speech, Bromery suggests that the students use the existing apparatus for student action before they think of unionizing. I assume that "mechanism" for student empowerment that Bromery is refering to is the Student Government Association. This author was a member of the SGA, and I believe the administration could not possibly have designed a better system for students to hopelessly entangle themselves in. The staunchest of non-union supporters agree that the Student Senate has been largely ineffective in its attempts to change any kind of University policy regarding students.

The need for a Student union is for the students to decide; after all, it's our education. Contrary to what the Chancellor may believe, the students are intelligent enough to offer a much needed perspective toward university policy. To ignore the will of the students and to blatantly state that students would only add to the confusion of university policy is a direct insult to the student body. If the Administration does not value the opinions of the students how could they possibly make decisions that are advantageous to the student body?

In response to 'discrimination'

To the Editor:

I would like to respond with a few facts to Paul Yanowitch's editorial in the Monday Collegian concerning the Allan Bakke case. Mr. Yanowitch based an argument on the assumption that it has been proven irrefutably that Allan Bakke has, in fact, been the victim of reverse discrimination, and the further assumption that the University of California at Davis has been shown to be operating a strict quota system.

It would be very difficult for any prosecution to demonstrate that Allan Bakke was twice denied admission to Davis solely because he is white. Bakke's age, now 37, may weigh more heavily against him than his race, as may any number of other variables. For example, the fact that he received his undergraduate degree 10-15 years ago may mean that his educational background, despite his 3.5 GPA, is simply inadequate for the Davis medical program. In addition, Bakke has been denied admission to ten other medical schools besides Davis. To my knowledge, he has not filed suit against these universities for "reverse discrimination", which would indicate that there may be other factors making Allan Bakke an unsuccessful med school candidate than his race.

Further, the Davis med school admissions policy sets aside 16 places in each class of 100 for "disadvantaged students". Those candidates who qualify as disadvantaged, a category which is not restricted to racial minorites and into which white students may fall, compete within that category for admission. The GPA cut-off point for these students is 2.1-2.2. The GPA cut-off point for regular candidates is 2.5. A glance at the picture of the Davis med school class of 1977 appearing in this week's Newsweek shows that there are considerably more than 16 women and minority students in the class. Presumably, these students were able to compete successfully for admission without special consideration.

All the evidence that I have been able to assemble fails to persuade me that Allan Bakke has been discriminated against because he is a white male as he claims. Like Mr. Yanowitch, I do not like the idea of a quota system, in part because quota systems can also be used to prevent or curtail the hiring and admitting of members of socially disadvantaged groups. For example, I would be distressed to learn that there could be no more than 16 minority students at David because of a strict quota system. I am also not persuaded that twelve years of affirmative action has had the dramatic effect on hiring policies that many white males irrationally fear it has. And I would hate to see Allan Bakke win his case on the strength of such irrational fears to the detriment of affirmative action.

Cubans reunite with families in America

HOMESTEAD AIR FORCE BASE, Fla. [AP] — A band of U.S. citizens and two dozen of their Cuban relatives, many of them aged and some in wheelchairs, arrived yesterday from Havana to begin new lives in the United States.

The 55 arrivals got off a chartered Eastern Airlines flight on a gray, muggy afternoon. They smiled and waved to a small crowd that cheered and waved signs saying "A Warm Welcome" and "Bienvenidos." Later they were taken to a Miami hotel for reunions with their families.

The group was given permission to leave Cuba last month by Cuban President Fidel Castro as a gesture of friendship relayed to Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, during his visit to the island.

It was the largest group to leave Cuba since 1973, the year of the last Freedom Flights, which brought 260,557 Cuban refugees to the United States between 1965 and 1973.

The group arriving Thursday after the 43-minute flight from Cuba was greeted by officials from the State Department and other agencies.

Wayne S. Smith, State Department deputy coordinator of Cuban affairs, said that prior to yesterday's flight approximately 84 family units containing American citizens and Cuban nationals were in Cuba with a total of about 300 persons eligible to leave. He said about half of those chose to remain in Cuba. He estimated that after this flight, there would be "probably another 100 people or so to bring out."

Student dependents health plan

Students who have paid the basic health fee may enroll their spouses and children at the University Health Services. Dependents will receive the same comprehensive package of services that is currently provided to students for an additional fee of $41.50 per quarter. This is an inclusive fee and includes coverage of the spouse and all dependent children.

Included in the program are unlimited physician and nurse practitioner consultation as well as specialty consultation, including pediatrics, gynecology and pre-natal care. Inpatient care and 24-hour emergency coverage at the University Health Center is provided. Also included are allergy shots (except cost of serum) and immunizations, laboratory, physical therapy and x-ray services. Most medication prescribed by plan physicians is available with a 50 cent co-payment.

Other services include eye examination ($10 co-payment); mental health consultation, including couples and family counseling; emergency dental services, dental education, and initial examination (except xray). Other dental services are available on a co-payment or fee-for-service basis as time permits. Health education services include Cold Self-Care, and programs in alcohol, exercise, human sexuality, and women's health to name a few.

The University Health Center is the primary provider of your basic health care plan. Services previously mentioned are available there. If you decide to enroll your family in the Student Health Plan, you and your family will benefit from a coordinated system of care delivery which stresses prevention of illness, early diagnosis, treatment and health education. These comprehensive services are available at one location at a predictable, budgetable expense.

You may enroll your dependents in the basic health program during the month of September.

So that students and their families may fulfill their responsibility to use the Health Services properly, plan members will be invited to an orientation program to learn more about procedures and how to use services.

Without obligation, the following session has been organized where the plan will be described, tours given, and questions answered, for your benefit, in 302 University Health Center: Monday, Sept. 26, noon and Tuesday, Sept. 27, 7 p.m.

Laetrile useless says Mass. Cancer Society

BOSTON [UPI] — Laetrile, a substance made from apricot pits which many claim can cure cancer, is useless and may be cancerous in itself, according to the Massachusetts Cancer Society.

"Laetrile requires a degree of consumer protection at least equal to that provided for security sales and processed foods," the society said in response to a number of questions posed by a state senator.

"Exempting Laetrile would only kill curable cancer patients and enrich a few promoters," they said.

The group cited testimony by Dr. Joseph F. Ross, a professor of medicine at UCLA, before a U.S. Senate subcommittee in which he said he knew of persons who had died of Laetrile poisoning.

A bill to legalize the substance extracted from apricot pits, filed by Sen. Roger L. Bernashe, D-Chicopee, co-chairman of the Legislature's Health Care Committee, could come up for a vote in the Senate next week.

Bernashe last week submitted 22 questions to the Cancer Society regarding Laetrile, which is currently banned by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration.

The society's eight-page response to Bernashe attempted to knock down a number of key pieces of evidence often cited by Laetrile supporters.

The use of Laetrile is not legal in 27 countries as had been claimed by supporters, the society said, based on a poll taken of 70 countries. The poll showed Laetrile illegal in 54 countries, unknown in 13 and legal in 3.

The UMass women's soccer club kicked off its inagural season yesterday by winning two out of three games against Smith College. Here Elaine Cotant is about to score for the Minutewomen in one of the two UMass wins. According to coach Louie Macedo, the Minutewomen are organized as a club team, and will play about 10 games this season. The next action for the UMass squad will be this Wednesday, when the Minutewomen take on Mount Holyoke on the Boyden fields. (Staff photo by Rob Carlin)

JV stickers tie Chiefs

By JOE KITTREDGE
Collegian Staff

The UMass junior varsity field hockey team began its season with a 1-1 tie yesterday against a good Springfield team on the field behind NOPE.

The first half was played primarily in the Springfield end as the UMass offense controlled play early. After applying constant pressure on the Chiefs' goal, the effort finally paid off.

Following an errant clear, UMass inbounded the ball to the left of the Springfield goalie. Carol Hughes took control and rifled a shot past the netminder and halfway up the net.

The score seemed to wake the dormant Chiefs' attack up and Springfield then put pressure on the Minutewomen's defense. But Karen Stifler did an excellent job in goal while the fullbacks also help up their end of things. The Minutewomen thus went into the locker room with a 1-0 halftime lead.

The Chiefs picked right up where they left off in the second half and once again carried the play. UMass persevered, though, as the defense continued to come through.

Springfield's pressure finally paid off as Engrid Tator scored on a breakaway with just under three minutes to play.

The remainder of the game was played in the UMass end but Springfield has no real scoring chances.

Both teams looked sharp for an opening day game. The tie extended UMass's JV unbeaten string to 15 games, which runs over two seasons. The Minutewomen's next game is at Central Connecticut on Monday.

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

From UNITED Feature Syndicate
For release WEEK of Sept. 19, 1977

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 23 — Born today, you possess unusual generosity and a sympathetic nature, which may leave you short of material goods for much of your life. But, you will gain so much affection and respect from others for your generosity that your spirits should soar. You like to daydream, which may be a good thing, for it enables you to gain pleasures of the mind even though physical pleasures are denied you. You have a tendency to do too many things at once, often finishing nothing. You must use your natural discretion and discernment to curb this tendency.

Sentimental at heart it is hard for you to separate sense from sentiment. This will often cause you to make unwise, perhaps even costly decisions in terms of personal achievement. Not terribly ambitious for personal success, you are always ambitious for friends and loved ones, and often give more of yourself to further their careers than your own.

Committed to the happiness of those you love, you will work hard to ensure their welfare. This does not mean that you will succeed, however. Your sentimental nature may often negate your efforts. Learn to say no.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 25

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22) — Keep your ambition under control today. There is much to tempt your involvement; don't take on too much at one time.

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21) — A sympathetic and generous spirit enable you to sustain hurts another unwittingly hurls your way. Change is for the better.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) — Don't allow yourself to become overly dependent upon a pleasing personality to do your work for you.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19) — You can endear yourself to another through fair action. Don't worry about anything but the application of justice.

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18) — If you can keep your attention focused on the affairs of the young in the family, you can be of great.

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20) — Whether business or domestic partners have annoyed you lately, this is a day for making peace. Rest at evening.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Flattery comes easily to you today. Take care, however, that it does not boomerang, bringing failure by day's end.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Use whatever wiles you can to smooth the way for new ideas to help in getting an old project off the ground.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Whatever is essential to your peace of mind must be sought and gained without delay. This is a Saturday for making friends.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Considerable bickering on the home front may cause you to throw up your hands on plans for family fun in PM hours

LEO (July 23-Aug.22) — Since you seem to thrive on argument, you might do well to insist upon a hearing for your opinion. It may not make the world go 'round.

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22) — You should be able to find some mutual ground of understand upon which to base an intellectual partnership with a newfound friend.

Spikers open at UNH

By LEO PELOQUIN
Collegian Staff

The UMass volleyball team leaps into action tomorrow when it travels to Durham, New Hampshire to take on UNH and the University of Vermont in a tri-match slated to begin at 1 p.m.

UMass coach Dianne Thompson said that she is only planning to travel with the minimum nine players with the hope that the group can remain injury-free. The select group will come from among the following: seniors Heidi Dickson and Kathy Higgins; juniors Diane Mandragouras and Kathy Shinnick; sophomores Joyce Gresl, Chris Kelly, Deb Kuzdeba, Lisa Lee, and Donna Sasso; and freshmen Maria Minicucci and Peggy Barber.

Thompson said the selection process was especially difficult because all of her 21 players are evenly matched and compete intensely in practices.

Thompson expects UNH, which beat the Minutewomen in NOPE last year by scores of 15-6, 15-13, to be the tougher of the two foes. UVM is a new addition to the team's schedule.

The contest will also provide the opportunity for UMass to unveil its brand new 6-2 offense.

There are two major reasons why Thompson is optimistic about her squad's chances of picking up a win. "I feel that skillwise and knowledgewise they are one of my better prepared teams to go on the floor for their first game," she said. She is also extremely pleased with the team communication and the way the women function as a unit under playing conditions. She feels that this could be the key to victory.

Men's tennis correction

The Collegian incorrectly reported yesterday that the men's tennis team would be having a match with New Hampshire today, UConn on Sunday and BU on Wednesday.

The correct schedule is:

Monday, at UNH; Wednesday, at UConn; and Saturday against Vt. at home.

The team opened its season last Thursday by defeating the University of Rhode Island, 6-3.

Rick Sharton, Jimmy Barnhart, Dave Nowak, Mark Huetteman and Keith Hovland all won their singles matches, while Huetteman and Hovland won in doubles to wrap up the win.

Huetteman and Hovland, who are only freshmen, have been the pleasant surprises for first year coach Jay Ogden. He said at the beginning of the year that the doubles combinations would be key, and the freshman pair seem to provide some strength in that area.

The UMass women's cross country team travels to Williamstown this afternoon for a dual meet with Williams College, the number three team in New England last year.

Williams, according to head coach Ken O'Brien, returns its entire team, including sophomore Mary Hakala from Alaska, its number one runner from a year ago. Other returning veterans include Michele Cutsforth, Lisa Capaldini and Debbie Gregg.

UMass easily defeated Williams last year, 18-45, as Julie Lafreniere and Johara Chapman tied for first, and UMass harriers took 10 of the next 11 places, with Hakala in third.

"We plan on going out harder today than in the UConn meet," said UMass coach Charlotte Lettis. "A fast start will be the key in our big meet on Tuesday against Brandeis and Radcliffe at Franklin Park (in Dorchester), because on that course, getting a good position early is important.

"This meet will be good for building up experience for the later meets. Some of our runners are still feeling their way — they don't really know what they can do."

UMass will run the same lineup as in the UConn meet, with the addition of Eileen Everett and Jo Chapman. Barb Callanan and Anne Bradshaw are both sick and will not travel.

Showtime for harriers

The next eight days may very well determine just what kind of team the UMass harriers will be this year. They will be on the road facing six teams, four of which could easily be one of the top teams in the East.

Tonight at six, UMass will open up its season against Brown and Boston College at Brown. Four days later, UMass will gear up its forces, travel to Franklin Park in Boston and take on Providence College and Harvard in what may be billed as a cross country titanic struggle.

Topping it off next Saturday, the harriers will again be on the road at Franklin Park, facing off against Northeastern and St. Johns of New York, with the Huskies of NU just as tough as Providence.

Tonight's meet against Brown and B.C. is being viewed as a warmup meet for Tuesday's contest against Providence and Harvard.

"B.C. and Brown have two good individuals each, but they just don't have the depth our team has. We don't anticipate any problems," said coach Ken O'Brien.

O'Brien is resting three of his top runners in preparation for next week's PC-Harvard meet. Captain Mike Quinn, Stetson Arnold, and Kevin McCusker will not make the trip. O'Brien will send ten runners, most of whom are on the same running level.

Co-captain Frank Carroll will head the squad which will also include veterans Lou Panaccione, Neal McGrail, Jay Legere, Bob Neil, Steve Hilyard, Glenn Lyle, Michael Morris, and newcomers Steve Bugbee and Jerry Pratt.

Both Brown and B.C. have two fine runners but lack the depth to challenge UMass. For the Eagles, Dick Hayden and Bill Roach represent the top two, with both running around the 25:20 mark for five miles. Hayden was second in the steeplechase at the New England's while Roach ran second to winner Mike Quinn in last year's UMass 19-43 triumph over the Eagles.

B.C. last week placed fourth in a five-way meet won by Providence.

For Brown, Sean McCracken and Harvey Barlow are the one-two punch but again Brown has very little for its 3-7 runners. In last week's action against St. Johns, which Brown lost 19-43, McCracken was fourth (26.38) and Barlow-sixth (26:54) in the five mile race.

UMass holds the series edge with both teams, winning 14 of 16 meets with B.C. and 3 of 5 advantage over Brown. Last year's score against both teams was UMass winning 19-42.

Booters aim for 2nd straight; travel to Black Bear country

By JACK ATKINSON
Collegian Staff

Going for its second victory in as many starts, the UMass soccer team travels to Orono for a Saturday morning match against the Black Bears of UMaine.

Maine has yet to face a Yankee Conference opponent, but sports an overall 2-1 record. The only loss came at the hands of Bowdoin by a score of 1-0.

Maine's strength lies in its defense. All-Yankee Conference goalie Phil Toraney and fullback Phil Dugan will try to fend off the powerful UMass offense.

Offense seems to be the "Maine" problem. The Black Bears have a fine halfback in Joe Costa, but little else. Otherwise it's a freshman front line. The UMass defense should have little trouble containing them.

The Minutemen will be trying to avenge last year's 2-1 overtime loss. "Any time you have to play them on their turf, they're tough," says UMass coach Russ Kidd.

UMass recorded a devastating 5-0 triumph in Bridgeport on Wednesday in its season opener.

In that game, freshman sensation Tommy Kotsoukos tallied three times in his first varsity start. Also, senior Joel Mascolo had two goals and one assist which doubled his entire output of last year. Balancing out the effort on Wednesday night was UMass goaltender Mark Hodgdon who notched a shutout while recording eight saves.

After tomorrow's game, the booters will travel to Keene State on Wednesday afternoon to play the Owls before returning home on Sat., Oct. 1 to square off against Vermont in the home opener.

Stickers stifle Springfield

By MISSY GALLAGHER
Collegian Staff

UMass field hockey co-captain Lynsie Wickman drove a solid shot past Springfield goalie Sharon Schmickley to clinch a 1-0 Minutewomen win over their arch-rival yesterday at NOPE field.

Wickman's drive resulted from a penalty corner with two and a half minutes remaining in the first half of regulation play. Seconds earlier, Lynsie's sister and teammate, Jody, predicted a UMass goal was forthcoming.

"The victory was from a total team effort," said Lynsie Wickman after the match.

"Everybody wanted to win," noted second-year UMass coach Judith Davidson. The UMass stickers desire was represented in aggressive, relentless play.

The evenly-matched teams play was at a standstill until midway through the first half when the Minutewomen unleashed six shots on goal, the last of which was fatal.

The UMass squad continued to dominate the half, allowing the Chiefs to penetrate within the 25-yard mark for only 31.5 seconds.

Springfield applied its strongest pressure at the 29-minute mark in the second half with two shots on goal, but UMass goalie Kathy Gipps was equal to the task with fine kick-out saves. Netminder Gipps "came through when she had to," Davidson praised.

Gipps counterpart Schmickley had seven saves in the second half for a game total of 12.

The solid team play had contributions from every member. "Everyone came through when they had to," explained the smiling UMass coach.

Davidson commended her whole squad. Left outside Sue Kibling controlled 98 per cent of her passes, enabling her to maneuver play down field. Right inside Cheryl Meliones "gave as much as she could give," according to her coach.

Right outside Ginger Bulman performed her task and kept the ball to the outside. Centerback Lynsie Wickman did a "great job distributing the play," Davidson lauded. Right back Kelly Salls also saved her best - every Champions. Within its two-year reign, Springfield also qualified for the Nationals twice.

Left link Judy Kennedy constantly pushed the ball into the attacking part of the field. Jody Wickman at left back and Sue Kreider at right link supported both the offense and defense. Gayle Hutchinson was a stalwart on defense, while Julie McHugh also turned in a solid performance.

Substitute Laura O'Neal carried much of the offense in the final minutes of play.

For the seniors, yesterday's contest was their first triumph in four years against Springfield. Their elation was expressed with flying sticks, hugs and a few happy tears.

The victory was a fantastic season opener but as Davidson pointed out, there is "still a long way to go." If yesterday's game is an indication, it should be a pleasant trip.

Gridmen visit Crimson in television clash

By BILL EDELSTEIN
Collegian Staff

The UMass football team will voyage to the staid, old Halls of Ivy tomorrow to engage most of the Harvard 11 in what UMass head coach Dick MacPherson calls "the biggest game of the season." The game will be televised regionally at 2 p.m. on ABC-TV.

The portion of the Crimson squad that will be noticeably absent from the fracas is starting quarterback Tim Davenport. It was announced yesterday that Davenport was out of action for the season, having fractured vertebrae at the base of his neck. Harvard athletic department spokesman Joe Bertagna said that Davenport sustained the injury last week while scoring Harvard's first touchdown against Columbia on a five-yard run. The gutty senior signal-caller, however, played the entire game, completing 8-16 passes and leading the Crimson to a 21-7 victory.

Davenport's injury, though not serious in the sense that he is walking about campus relatively healthy, wealthy and wise, is frighteningly serious in a football sense. If Tim had received another neck-knock, it could have paralyzed him for life.

Harvard head coach Joe Restic treated the problem with ultimate candor. "We're simply not going to be able to replace him," said Restic.

Although offensively crippled along with Davenport's neck, the Crimson still have plenty of defense to try and stop the Minutemen's ground game. Bob Baggott, Charlie Kaye and Russ Savage (helluva name for a 210-pound defensive end) all managed to break into the All-Ivy League team in one way or another. Since UMass' bread is buttered on the ground, it will be strength against strength when the Minutemen possess the pigskin.

"We'll go straight at them," said MacPherson, sounding a bit like Teddy Roosevelt speaking of his Roughriders. "We plan to use a lot of trap and counter-plays, but we'll mix them up. They're too good for us to keep running the same play at them," added the coach.

UMass' defense, which has revised its pass coverage since the man-to-man style was picked apart by Army's Leamon Hall, will employ a zone defense against Harvard. The Minutemen may not be forced to worry about the pass too much, however, owing to the absence of Davenport. ("Tim can throw the wide-out type of pattern better than anyone we've had here." — Restic) Top candidate to replace Davenport is Larry Brown (no, not the ex-Redskin) who doubles as a starting pitcher for Harvard's horsehiders when he's not playing football.

The quarterbacking situation for the Minutemen, on the other hand, is promising. Starting QB Mike Fallon, injured in that fiasco at West Point, is a probable starter against Harvard.

"Unless something happens between today and tomorrow, Mike will play," said MacPherson.

The injury report in other areas is not quite as rosy. Dave Croasdale's foot has made him questionable for tomorrow's encounter and Russ Cooke is lost for the season with a recurring head injury.

A star is born...or made

Are superstars born or made?

This burning question has created as much of an uproar with sports theorists as the inheritance-versus-environment baffler has caused with biologists. Indeed, the two complexities seem to parallel each other.

To provide some background: The argument on superstardom concerns whether an outstanding athlete outruns the pediatrician who tries to spank him (born-inherited), or whether a superbly coordinated speicmen is, at one time in his life, a klutz like you and I (made-environmental). This latter side of the argument implies that it takes much work and dedication to cure fits of clumsiness.

Knowing full-well that sports theorists will, despite a lack of documented facts, sally forth into heated debate like blithering idiots until the dilemma has been resolved, I took it upon myself to conduct an in-depth study into the life of the most super of all superstars: Reggie Jackson.

The first stop on my itinerary took me to Wyncote, Pennsylvania — Reggie's birthplace. I spoke with his parents, Ernest and Julia.

"Mrs. Jackson, was there anything you experienced while carrying Reggie to term that gave you any indication as to his superstardom?"

"Nothing really, though I do remember a peculiar incident I experienced while carrying Reggie."

"Would you like to talk about it?"

"Sure. Ernest and I had just come back from the grocery store. We bought tomatoes, a ten-pound bag of potatoes and a 20-pound mutant rutabaga. The bagger at the store put in the tomatoes first, then crushed them with the potatoes and the rutabaga."

"That's not unusual."

"Not in itself, but then Ernest emptied the bag on the counter and angrily threw a tomato. At that instant, I felt something in my stomach duck."

"Were there any after-effects?"

"Well, the tomato rolled all the way to the wall."

"Tell me, Mr. Jackson ... uh, may I call you Ernest?"

"Sure, sure. Just don't call me what Reggie used to call me."

"Oh? What was that?"

"Feller."

"That's beautiful! He likened vou to Bob Feller, the pitching immortal."

"No, he called everybody feller. Terrible eyesight."

"I see. Were you the type of father that had a bat and ball in his son's hands as soon as he was able to walk?"

"Definitely. I remember that day as if it were yesterday. Little Reggie had just turned seven, and as he stood up for the first time, I handed him a baseball."

"Did he take it with his right or left hand?"

"He dropped it."

This data seemed to indicate that the superb athlete is made, not burn. To prove this hypothesis, I went to see Reggie's baseball coach at Arizona State, Bo Baugh.

"Bo, you coached Reggie Jackson ... "

"Reggie who?"

"Guy that used to call you 'feller'."

"Oh, yeah, I coached him."

"Was Reggie any more dedicated than the other players?"

"Put it this way, if I had a nickel for every practice session that Jackson missed, I wouldn't be living today."

"You'd have died of starvation, huh?"

"No, I'd have been buried alive in nickels."

"So Reggie's talent was latent."

"You could put it that way."

"What was the single greatest contribution Reggie made to the club?"

"It was May 11th, 1965. The game with Southern Cal, Reggie didn't show up."

This latest data was what led me to my final, and, I believe, argument-ending theory: Superstars are neither born nor made, they simply have candy bars named after them.

HEAVYWEIGHT BOXING CHAMPIONSHIP

NBC Sports will present World Heavyweight Champion Muhammad Ali's 15-round title defense against knockout specialist Earnie Shavers Thursday, Sept. 29, live from New York's Madison Square Garden.

Ali, regarded by many, including himself, as the greatest heavyweight champion of all-time, has a career record of 54-2-0. The 35-year-old champ will face definite danger against the powerfully built Shavers, who is considered to be the most devastating puncher among today's heavyweights.

Shavers, 31, has a ring record of 55-5-1 with a total of 53 knockouts, among them a first-round demolition of heavyweight contender Jimmy Young, a man many boxing experts felt beat Ali in their 15-rounder in 1976.

The Ali-Shavers title match will be the highlight of a full night of sports entertainment, which will include other bouts, interviews with key figures and features relating to the championship fight.

THE LONGEST YARD

Burt Reynolds stars as a jailed ex-superstar quarterback who mobilizes his fellow convicts for gridiron battle against their oppressive prison guards in 'The Longest Yard,' on 'The ABC Sunday Night Movie,' Sept. 25.

Paul Crewe (Reynolds), a former pro-football hero, winds up in Florida's Citrus State Prison, convicted of resisting arrest for auto theft. After experiencing punishment detail and solitary confinement, Crewe accepts an offer from Warden Hazen: a speedy parole in return for organizing a prisoners' football team which will play the guards' semi-pro squad in a public scrimmage.

Crewe is faced with the dilemma of throwing the game and making parole, or keeping his team's respect by doing his best to win, despite the warden's threat at half-time to link him to a prison murder—and a life sentence—should he emerge victorious. As the final seconds tick away, Crewe makes his choice in the last—and longest—yard.

Services will be tomorrow for UM Treasurer Johnson

Kenneth W. Johnson

By JOE MAGLITTA
Collegian Staff

Services for Kenneth W. Johnson, Treasurer of UMass for 25 years, will be held tomorrow at 2:30 p.m. at North Congregational Church, in Amherst.

Johnson, 83, Memorial Dr., Amherst, died at his home Friday. He was 59.

UMass President Robert C. Wood last night said Johnson was one of a handful of men who made University expansion "take off" in the 1950's and 1960's.

"He was an incredibly powerful force. He created control. His capacity with the legislature was superb. He adjusted to changing philosophies adeptly — and as a gentlemen. He followed University policy faithfully. He gave his whole life to the University. He was a superb public servant," Wood said.

Johnson was a key figure in the building and growth of the Amherst and Boston campuses, and the medical school in Worcester. Under his supervision and planning, over 100 buildings were built at the cost of more than $200 million.

Daniel M. Melley, UMass director of Public Affairs, last night, said "Virtually every new building over the past 25 or 26 years was built under his supervision."

Melley said no plans have been made for a replacement.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery last night said, "The University owes him a tremendous debt of gratitude."

John W. Haigis, Jr., former Board of Trustees member and chairman of the Buildings and Grounds Committee, last night called Johnson the single most instrumental man in the University's master growth plan.

"He was the finest public servant I've ever known," he said.

Johnson came to UMass as treasurer in December of 1951. He was also president and trustee of Sheomet Farm Foundation, Winchester, N.H. The religious retreat center was founded by him and his family.

"He was a man of faith who had deep insights and convictions about the spiritual dimension of life. He was most at home in the out of doors, next to the earth, and especially when he was receiving people at the family's retreat," said Rev. Philip Hail, pastor of the North Congregational Church.

Johnson was a member, former deacon, and senior deacon of the church. He was also an active member of the Rotary Club.

He was born in 1918 in Winchester, N.H., and was graduated from Thayer High School, Winchester, in 1937 and the University of Vermont in 1941.

He served as a second lieutenant in the U.S. Army Medical Corps from 1942 to 1946. That same year, he was named assistant professor of industrial management at Samson College, part of the associated colleges of upper New York State.

He became acting dean of faculty at that college. In 1950 and 1951 he was assistant to the provost at Champlain College, State University, N.Y. He also pursued graduate studies at Cornell University, Ithaca.

Wood last night said most faculty and students did not fully appreciate Johnson's contributions to the Unversity.

"Popularity was not his main concern," Wood said. "Over the last 10 years or so a lot of students and faculty members looked upon him as a great conservative, who only cared about dollars and cents.

"Naturally, a University treasurer has to be concerned about money. People tend to forget that in his last big role was in the South African stock divestment. At the Sept. 14 meeting, it was Johnson who reminded people of the 1973 policy agaist stock holdings of this nature. They called him conservative, yet his last official action was to join hands with (student trustee) Pinky Batiste in the divestiture," Wood said.

He is survived by his wife Elva A. (Tarbell); two sons, the Rev. Sanford R. Johnson of Ashfield, and Kenneth W. Johnson, Jr.; two daughters, Amaret T. and Anita L. Johnson, both of Amherst; a brother, Elmer L. Johnson; and a sister, Mrs. Evelyn L. Coburn. both of Winchester, N.H. The funeral will be private, at Sheomet Farm.

Kent State demonstration; another fence bites dust

By BRYANT M. JORDAN
Collegian Staff

KENT. Ohio — A large group of demonstrators Saturday tore down the fence surrounding the site on which the Kent State University administration plans to build a new gym.

The site, adjacent to the area where four Kent State students were shot down by Ohio National Guardsmen on May 4, 1970, was then occupied by approximately half of the 200 demonstrators present.

One woman was arrested during the 20 minute occupation, according to an unidentified demonstrator who participated in the action.

The assault on the fence and subsequent occupation by about half of the demonstrators, many masked with bandanas, followed a march around the campus.

In the course of the march the demonstrators stopped four times. In each instance a short speech was made memorializing one of the four slain students.

At the end of the speeches several demonstrators spray-painted the walls, through stencils, the name of one of the four. Also stenciled on the wall of each of the buildings were the words, "Never Forgive or Forget."

The demonstrators, protesting the "desecration" of the site near where the students were killed, shouted in unison after each building dedication.

"Sandy Schueur, your spirit lives! We'll never forget and never forgive!"

The shout, at each stop, was addressed to one of the four dead.

To Sandy Schueur was dedicated the Speech and Music Building; to Jeffrey Miller, the library; to Allison Krause, the Art Building; to Steve Schroeder, the School of Business Administration.

The shootings in 1970, which left nine other students wounded, climaxed four days of student protests against President Nixon's order to commit American combat troops into Cambodia.

Most of the demonstrators Saturday appeared to be students made up of contingents from colleges and universities from as far away as Berkeley, California. However, also on hand to lend their support were members of the Vietnam Veterans Against the War and the National United Workers Organization, along with Youth In Action.

Organized by the May 4th Coalition, the Revolutionary Student Brigade, and the Communist Youth Organization, the demonstration was aimed at winning four demands from the schools trustees and administration.

The four demands are: move the gym, cancel classes permanently on May 4, name four buildings after the four dead students, and a statement from the administration that the shootings were an injustice.

The May 4th Coalition is a group which was formed this year after word had leaked-out of the administration's plan to build the gym on and around the area of Blanket Hill, where the students died, according to Roseanne "Chic" Canfora, a member whose brother, Allan, was wounded in 1970.

One of the speakers at the demonstration was activist-lawyer William Kunstler, 58, who defended the Chicago 7.

"In a bourgeois society, there are.... contradictions which can be exploited .....and we've been exploiting them all summer long" to halt construction of the gym, he said.

After noting some of the 60s "leaders of free speech" have turned away from the struggle, Rennie Davis (Chicago 7) to work for John Hancock Life Insurance, Kuntsler declared their actions "do not affect the spirit" of what is happening today.

Two of those wounded by the National Guard in 1970 also spoke. Allen Canfora and Thomas Grace, shot in the right wrist and left foot respectively, told of the events which led up to the shootings and of harassment they allege they have received from police and the judiciary since then.

Grace called the administration's move to build the gym on the present site an "attempt to cut into the people's history. If they build it, someday it'll be torn down," he said.

For all those responsible for the killings at Kent State in 1970, Grace said revolutionary justice should be administered to them. "And by 'revolutionary justice' you know what I mean," he said to the demonstrators.

During the demonstration on the commons a small group of pro-gym students, some wearing shirts which read, "Move the Coalition," carried a banner reading, "Build Our Gym."

Many demonstrators immediately lined up before the banner in an attempt to keep it from being seen. Shortly afterwards, the banner was hung from the Taylor Hall porch.

One faculty observer (FO) warned a coalition marshall to order the anti-gym demonstrators to move away from the sign.

"They have a right to free speech, also" he said.

Prof. of sociology, Jerry Lewis, a Faculty Observer coordinator, in comparing Saturday's demonstration to those held between May 1 and 4, 1970, said, "This time there is more humane management of conflict."

Paul Palsa, 20, a student at Kent State and supporter of the administration's plan to build the gym, at first claimed to speak for all 20,000 students at the university when he said the construction should go on.

Like Palsa, Carl Gould, 54, a professor of aero-space technology at Kent felt the demonstration Saturday, like the one on May 4, 1970, was instigated by outsiders. However, the FBI investigation into the Kent State shootings and the events which led up to them found no reason to believe such was the case.

Panther leader tells of FBI plot to murder brother

By RUTH MCGORTY
Collegian Staff

Civil rights were violated and police brutality took place in the suspicious 1969 killing of Fred Hampton, a Black Panther Party leader, according to Bill Hampton, his brother.

Hampton spoke before a crowd of about 75 persons and showed a documentary film in the Campus Center last Friday night.

According to the film, Fred Hampton was killed by the Chicago police on Dec. 4, 1969. Ninety-nine shots were fired into his apartment where he was sleeping at 4 a.m.

The court cases that followed revealed that Hampton's bodyguard was an FBI agent who was paid $30,000 a year to inform the FBI of Black Panther activities.

The police who took part in the raid testified that they did not know Fred was in the apartment and upon entering, were fired at first. The film showed no one can explain where these shots went, as there were no holes in that side of the wall.

The Federal Grand Jury dismissed the case due to lack of evidence. It was the longest federal court case in history, lasting 18 months. They are now appealing the case, which should start around November or December, Hampton said.

Hampton, a school teacher in Chicago, is presently travelling around the country speaking to various groups to raise money for the legal expenses.

"We want to get a much support as we can," explained Hampton, "We want to prove that civil rights were violated, too much force was used, and that obstruction of justice took place.

My brother was not just a leader of blacks, but whites as well. While he was chairman, the Illinois Black Panther Party was organizing free medical centers, free breakfast programs, free clothing and free bussing to prison programs...If the Panthers were dope dealers or criminals, they would not be such a threat. But the Panthers, the things they were doing, were exposing the system.

When you live in a corrupt system, you can't expect the people who are corrupt to send the corruptors to jail. It is more or less a law of who has the most clout. Everyone's help is needed. A victory would not be just a victory for the Clark and Hampton families, but for all the countless working people, black, yellow and brown people that have been murdered by the government," Hamton said in an interview in Socialist Worker.

Hampton described the Black Panther Party as still being active, yet not as publicized. "There's not as much emphasis in the media today like there was in the 60's — it's more individualistic today in society, but things are still happening."

Faculty union unhappy over lack of salary info

By LAURA KENNEY
Collegian Staff

Promotion and equity salary increases for 133 faculty-professional staff members from both Boston and Amherst UMass campuses have been approved by the faculty union, effective Sept. 10, 1977. The union, though, according to Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) President Larry S. Roberts, is unhappy about the way in which the administration announced its intention to make the salary increases.

In February of 1977 the UMass faculty-professional staff union was formed, which included four groups: the MSP, the Faculty Staff Union (FSU), the Mass. Teachers' Association (MTA), and the National Education Association (NEA). Negotiations for a contract began last spring; previously, UMass staff and faculty had not had a contract.

By the end of May, problems had occurred between the union and the administration with regard to salary increases not included in contract negotiations. Said Roberts, "Equity raises were going on, and the union was not consulted. We wanted to know the criteria being used for the raises...we needed information such as names and amounts. Meanwhile, the faculty was complaining, and the administration was unresponsive to our requests."

Throughout the summer, according to Roberts, the union received no communication from the administration. But on Aug. 31, the UMass administration announced to the faculty that 133 faculty members, the majority being promoted professors, would receive pay raises effective Sept. 1. The administration had not previously consulted or negotiated with the union concerning these raises; such negotiation is required by law, according to the MSP.

The union replied that such short notice on the raises did not give the members enough time to review the increases properly. The union felt it had been put in an embarassing position by the administration, as legally the raises could not be approved until reviewed. The union had to delay the increase payments of the faculty members whom it represents.

Members of the MSP and the FSU, composing the union's Joint Coordinating Committee (JCC), met on Sept. 10 to discuss the proposed raises. After a quick review, the JCC decided to let the administration implement the current salary increases.

Yet the JCC members were not satisfied with their review, for they discovered that equity raises for those who work at the UMass-Boston campus were lower in general than those given to workers at the UMass-Amherst campus. In addition, Roberts said, "the raises were still not uniform" on the Amherst campus. He said he feels there is "great inequity" in UMass salaries.

In a conversation with UMass-Amherst Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, it was revealed that the criteria used for the promotion and equity raises was the same criteria used in previous years, and the promotions followed the normal procedure followed for many years. He said that in the future, any rules for criteria will be contained in the new contract.

According to Bromery, the union probably feels the criteria should be the same for salary increases on both Boston and Amherst campuses and said he believes they will probably bargain for this in the contract negotiations.

"Personally, I don't think that the administration accepts this view," Bromery said. "There are fundamental differences between UMass-Amherst and UMass-Boston, not only between the institutions but also between the faculties. The campuses' missions are basically different."

The promotion and equity increases were not part of contract negotiations. As of now, the union and the administration have finished the housekeeping portion of negotiating, and should be starting the actual contract negotiations next month. The contract will be lengthy, including such topics as salary, working conditions, grievances and fringe benefits.

Roberts said, "If the administration chooses to be benevolent and cooperative for the good of the entire University, the contract could be settled in as short a time as six months. Realistically, it will probably take a year." Bromery said, that in viewing negotiating procedures of other area schools, the settlement will take place in closer to 18 months.

Heuristics Lab to teach frosh engineering students exactly what not to do

By DARRELL GIBBS
Collegian Staff

For the first time at UMass, a teaching resource called the Heuristics Lab, designed to teach students how to learn and not what to learn, is being implemented in the freshman engineering program.

The Heuristics Lab is part of a broader program called the Cognitive Development Project, and is under the directorship of Jack Lochhead. This lab has been used for two years under federally sponsored grants in the University's elementary calculus-based physics course. Another grant for $77,915, announced by the U.S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare last Wednesday, made the development of an engineering-based program possible.

Emphasizing student discovery rather than formula memorization, this program develops new approaches to teaching basic problem solving skills.

"The majority of the students are handpicked. They are predominately the type who floundered in calculus," said Prof. Mel Janowitz, a noted research mathematician and teacher in one of the engineering classes.

"It is not a traditional lecture. The students break up into small groups, which are then given a problem to solve. As the students work through the problem verbally, they realize mistakes and learn from each other."

Janowitz sees the role of the instructor as that of "discussion mediator" when the students can "simply not agree on a solution to a problem." If there is a specific area where many are confused he will "take the class back to the blackboard."

There has been no grade evaluation thus far in the semester so any enthusiasm is guarded. Janowitz, however, senses "a complete change in atmosphere. Each session is vibrant with discussion and noise." Janowitz also warned that the first exams are rarely adequate indication of the learning done.

Lochhead talked about the implementing of funds for the project. "Most of the money went toward design of new courses and the modification of existing ones to make them more consistant with recent research developments." Lochhead said he sees the role of the instructor in a colorful light.

"It is analogous to the situation of the coach and the athlete. The coach is an expert at watching the athlete and figuring out weaknesses. Then he is better able to adapt a style to suit the athlete's strengths."

Lochhead advised that "any teacher could handle the course but only if he or she wanted to. The teacher has to be willing to come down off his pedestal and work with the students. Quite frankly, many are not."

He said, he has found that undergraduate teachers are often the perfect solution. With teachers just a year or two older and prone to the same mistakes, he said, students are less inhibited and more receptive to learning. According to Lochhead, the best conditions would have numerous undergraduate teachers working within a framework of a few essential professors.

The program has received minimal funds from the University and is working on the last year of its grants. It will need additional money if it is to survive, and study new possibilities in teaching the unteachable.

Reaction from the students has been overwhelming and consistently favorable. In surveys filled out by physics students over the last two years, comments were continually enthusiastic over the concept.

Among the freshman engineering students this year, David Decker and Kim Holmes agreed on one aspect of the program's effectiveness. Holmes said "in the lab you have a better chance of working out what you don't understand." Decker added, "Talking the problems out makes it really clear what you are trying to figure out."

LSO provides free legal help

By RANDALL BARISH
Collegian Staff

Students with legal problems need not be concerned with the usual exorbitant legal fees demanded by lawyers if they use the Student Legal Services Office (LSO).

LSO, located on the ninth floor of the Campus Center, is designed to aid students, free of charge, in individual legal problems, as well as dealing in issues that affect the entire student body.

The office, which represents UMass students in the Amherst area, gives legal advice to students working for unionization, those who feel they have been unjustly ripped-off by the University, and those who have tenant-landlord conflicts.

Karen Brandow, administrative assistant of LSO, said that in addition, the office staff is working on cases such as trying to release teacher evaluation forms to the public, compensating students who haven't received their security deposits from bankrupt landlords, and trying to convince the Welfare Bureau to stop making welfare students pay them their work-study money.

The office is staffed by three full-time attorneys, two full-time and two part-time paralegals (lawyer assistants), and several support staff members. The attorneys are graduate students and the paralegals are undergraduates.

Brandow said LSO can't handle conflicts between students or even between students and faculty members. "Ethically, we can't represent one student against another. We are lawyers," Brandow said. If a student has the type of problem that LSO doesn't handle she said, they'll be referred, to another legal service like the University Ombudsmen.

Students with legal problems should bring them up with any of the paralegals in the office to determine whether they should make an appointment with one of the attorneys or should go to the Ombudsmen. The office is open 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Ina Forman, a LSO paralegal, said the three attorneys each specialize in a different legal category. Forman said one attorney, James Starr, deals with student unionization and University-related problems; another, Ellis Landset, deals with criminal and family problems; and the third, Michele Leaf, deals with housing, family, and problems outside the University.

Brandow said there is no main director of this legal service. "Important decisions are made by the staff as a whole," she said, and sometimes the staff members change roles.

Case files are kept in drawers in the main reception room. Adjoining this room are separate officers where the attorneys work and conduct confidential interviews. A nearby reference library filled with volumes of state and federal laws, and case studies is available for LSO staff members for research.

Brandow said she finds it "depressing" to see how students are "being ripped-off." She said it's about time students were "educated about their legal rights and to exercise them."

Weather or not, all's Fair

The Big 'E'

By CINDY YOUNG
Collegian Staff

Despite the inclement weather, the Eastern States Exposition has been continuously drawing thousands to its gates. The exposition, commonly called "the Big E", is in its 56th year.

Spread over an area of 175 acres, in West Springfield the exposition offers a wide variety of free entertainment, exhibits, and attractions. There is so much to see and do, that many visitors come back two or three times during the two weeks.

The exposition is the virtual "land of milk and honey" for the sweet tooth. There are over 100 concession stands, where you can purchase all types of fudge, cotton candy, and candy apples. You can taste the delicacies of dozens of countries and still have room for a piece of homemade apple pie.

"Funland", a mini-amusement park consisting of 40 rides and shows, is a major drawing card at "the Big E". There are special rides for the children, along with such favorites as the all-popular "Giant Slide."

A consumer's delight; "The Better Living Center" occupies 123,000 square feet and holds 170 booths and displays, all designed to help make your life better. Exhibits vary tremendously; from vacation tips to crafted jewelry; from health food to the Saladmaster Cooking School.

"Youth in Action", was the theme of this year's "Youtharama." Both the 4-H Club and the Future Farmers of America were on hand with various demonstrations and contests concerning livestock and gardening. Over 3,000 members came from all over the Northeast to participate in the fair.

The most impressive part of the fair was the "Avenue of States." Where else could you visit all six New England states within walking distance? The "Avenue" consisted of six majestic buildings, replicas of each original state house. Within each building, were displays intended to represent the many facets of life within the state.

Big "The Big E" was a fun-filled affair for all. If you missed it this year, make a date to go next year. You may arrive home with aching feet and a stomach ache, but it's worth every minute of it.

Asian Studies alive and kicking

By KAREN PARMENTER
Collegian Staff

Contrary to the rumors spread last spring, the Asian Studies Program is alive and well at UMass.

The program, which currently enrolls 350 students, was slated for elimination by 1982, according to Provost Paul L. Puryear's five-year plan for revising the academic departments at UMass.

When the plan was released last spring, Asian Studies faculty and students began organizing to keep the program on campus. Letters were sent from the Asian Studies office to other colleges with similar programs around the country asking for support. About 150 responses were received, all favorable.

According to Nina Rose of the Asian Studies office, "We found out we have a national reputation. Other schools have used our program as a model for constructing their own."

On April 20, 300 students and faculty from the Asian Studies and Slavic Languages programs demonstrated at Whitmore to protest the five-year plan. In addition, 5,000 signatures were collected on petitions asking that the programs not be eliminated.

Representatives of the program met with the provost this summer to present their case, which included the letters of support from other schools. Rose said when presented with the new information about the program and its importance, the provost changed his mind.

Even though the program has not been eliminated, the expectation that it would be has hurt enrollment. Many students were apparently discouraged from enrolling by their summer counselors, Rose said. Also, the program is "badly understaffed", with only six instructors, one of whom is a visiting lecturer.

The Asian Studies Program offers two majors, Chinese and Japanese, and an interdisciplinary Asian Studies Certificate. It presently offers 26 courses and is the core of the five-college Asian Studies Program. In addition to the six Asian Studies faculty members, 21 other UMass instructors offer related courses.

The program also offers students opportunities to study abroad. In their junior year, Chinese majors may go to Tunghai University in Taiwan for a one-year program. Those interested in going must have studied at least two years of Chinese.

Japanese majors may attend Hokaido University for a year. Also, the Asian Studies Program has arranged for students to study tea ceremony for a year at the Urasenke Academy in Kyoto, Japan. This program is open to all students in the five-college area.

Peace Corps office opens

By ELLEN PLAUSKY
Collegian Staff

Organized through the cooperation of the Peace Corps in Washington and the Department of International Agricultural Studies at UMass, this semester, for the first time on campus a Peace Corps Information Service has been set up.

The main purpose of the information center on campus is to provide information about the Peace Corps and to encourage graduating seniors to apply for admission.

Especially beneficial to those interested in overseas work, the Peace Crops provides valuable career training and job experience. Their belief is that American technology cannot merely be exported but must also be adapted to suit the cultures of other countries.

Carmine Russo, the on-campus coordinator, has spent two years in India and two years in Ghana as a Peace Corps volunteer worker. Becoming interested in the Peace Corps while still an undergraduate at UMass in American history, Russo, after graduation was sent to California for a three-month intensified course in poultry breeding.

After that, he began his work in the Peace Corps. Russo said some of the objectives of the Peace Corps are to supply technical service, to give foreigners a view of Americans, and to give the American volunteers a better understanding of the host country.

Basically a development program working with people on a one-to-one grassroots level, the Peace Corps tries to develop a unique understanding of our country through American influence all over the world.

The Peace Corps is mainly interested in students from the College of Food and Natural Resources, as they are in high demand. Russo, though, encourages all with an interest in the Peace Corps to seek him out most afternoons in 117 Draper Hall.

Russo also encourages all former Peace Corps volunteers on campus to contact him.

As a chance to learn a specialized field and gain practical job experience, for those with a sense of adventure, the Peace Corps is a great opportunity that is worth looking into.

Over 100 nations combat inflation

Lillian Carter is presented the Synagogue of America's Covenant of Peace Prize by Phillip Klutznick (R), former U.S. Ambassador to the U.N. On hand to honor the president's mother are Andrew Young, current U.N. Amb., and Rabbi Saul Teplitz (2nd L) Pres. of the Synagogue Council of America. Mrs. Carter is the first woman to receive this award.

WASHINGTON [AP] – In a policy shift that could mean more jobs for workers around the world, the International Monetary fund is urging its member nations to speed up economic growth wherever possible to erase the threat of a renewed recession.

The week-long annual joint meeting of the IMF and the World Bank will open here today. President Carter will deliver a welcoming address to the delegates, mostly finance ministers and central bankers from the IMF's 131 member nations.

The IMF's policymaking body, the Interim Committee, said in an important communique Saturday night that it is concerned about "the faltering of economic activity during recent months in a number of industrial countries." It noted unemployment remains at recession levels in many nations.

The statement represented a shift from the fund's emphasis on fighting inflation.

Although the committee did not single out any country by name for criticism, officials said later there was special concern over the pace of economic growth in Germany and Japan, which have failed to meet their economic growth targets for the year.

The United States received generally good marks for its performance so far in 1977, but the recent slowdown in U.S. economic growth clearly was a matter of concern.

The committee said it welcomed recent steps by some nations to stimulate their economies. It added that a number of others should soon be "strong enough to make their contribution to growth of the world economy."

IMF officials were even more explicit about the need for new growth policies at a news conference following Saturday's committee meeting.

Committee Chairman Denis Healey, who also is the British finance minister, said many delegates were "taking much more seriously the risk that the present recovery might peter out."

H. Johannes Witteveen, the IMF's managing director, said there was a consensus among most delegates, who included U.S. representatives, that "some stimulation of demand without stimulating inflation" was needed because of lagging economic growth, especially in Europe.

Demand can be stimulated by a country through tax reductions, public works projects or other government spending programs.

Healey said the committee did not advocate particular demand policies. "The only thing that was agreed on is that every country has its own problems and different kinds of stimulus are appropriate for different countries," he said.

He said there was emphasis on the need for policies that would increase imports and promote world trade.

Discrimination against white woman

SACRAMENTO, Calif. [UPI] – The NAACP, declaring that whites have benefitted for years from "special admissions" policies yesterday denounced a federal court order requiring the University of California to enroll a woman who charged she was denied admission because she is white.

"Special admissions for sons and daughters of alumni, especially rich alumni, football players, baton twirlers, and basketball players are as common with institutions of higher learning in this country as good old American apple pie," Virna Canson, director of the West Coast Region of the NAACP, said in a written statement.

"The furor starts when blacks and other minorities seek to fulfill their desire for professional training."

U.S. District Court Judge Thomas J. MacBride granted a temporary restraining order Friday that allows Rita Clancy, 22, a Russian immigrant, permission to register for classes Monday at the UC Davis School of medicine.

MacBride said Mrs. Clancy probably would have been admitted if 16 of 100 openings in the class had not been reserved for disadvantaged minority students, who are selected from a separate pool of applicants.

An affidavit from the university filed in court said Mrs. Clancy was first on one of four waiting lists used to determine who will be admitted to the 84 openings not covered by the minorities program.

The Clancy case is the second "reverse discrimination" suit to be filed against the University of California.

A suit filed by Alan Bakke is scheduled before the U.S. Supreme Court during the second week in October, although a decision could take several months.

Bakke was denied admission to the Davis medical school five years ago at age 32 and is seeking a ruling by the court on whether affirmative action programs for racial minorities and women are constitutional.

Mrs. Canson said an NAACP petition to intervene in the Clancy case noted that before the program began, UC's medical and dental schools "were almost wholly white, thus evidencing the pattern of prior discrimination against black students and prospective students."

"The real tragedy is that the real parties in interest have never been heard," Mrs. Canson said. "The real parties are not the university, not those whites complaining about 'reverse discrimination,' but those groups classified as minorities who have historically been discriminated against."

Should government jobs be for men only?

NEW ORLEANS [UPI] – A federal appeals court will hear arguments today in the attempt by former Rep. Otto E. Passman, D-La., to invoke congressional immunity as his defense in a sex discrimination suit filed by a fired woman employee.

Shirley Davis said she was fired because Passman decided his deputy administrative assistant should be a man. The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled 2-1 Jan. 3 that the firing violated the Fifth Amendment and Passman could be sued.

However, Passman requested and was granted a rehearing before the court in an "en banc" session attended by all 15 judges of the 5th Circuit.

Passman served in Congress for 30 years but was ousted from office last year amid reports he received gifts from South Korean Tongsun Park and was involved in other questionable practices. He refunded $1,700 in unsubstantiated government travel allowances in May, 1976, and was accused two months later of using his congressional influence to obtain foreign aid food shipments for the St. John Maritime Co. of Washington.

He denied wrongdoing in every case.

The Justice Department has endorsed Passman's side in the Davis case, while Rep. Morris Udall. D-Ariz., and other members and employees of the House Fair Employment Practices Committee asked the court to affirm its ruling favoring Mrs. Davis.

Mrs. Davis was fired in 1974 and filed suit against Passman in federal district court at Shreveport, La. Judge Tom Stagg rejected her claim and she appealed to the 5th Circuit.

The circuit court reversed Stagg's ruling and returned the case to his court for Mrs. Davis to press her claim for an unspecified amount of damages and back pay. It also said Passman could defend the dismissal on grounds other than congressional privilege, but he chose instead to ask for the en banc rehearing.

"A representative is not an imperator and is never above and beyond the law," the two-member majority said in the Jan. 3 ruling. "Any other view could not be squared with the whole predicate upon which our constitutional life depends."

Judge Warren L. Jones, the dissenter, said the courts should refuse the case because of the doctrine of separation of powers.

Non-profit group for unwed mothers

Pointing to yearly statistics which show 60 per cent of all teen-age mothers are unwed, a non-profit organization yesterday announced a nationwide campaign to reverse the growing numbers of teen-age pregnancies.

Ending their national convention Sunday, the National Organization of Non-Parents, said the teen-age non-parent campaign is backed by a $30,000 grant from the Education Foundation of America of Westport, Conn.

"Each year more than a million teen-age women get pregnant," said Peter Cott, NON vice-president, "and more than 600,000 of these are unmarried."

Cott said teen-age mothers account for more than one-fifth of all births in the United States today, and that only 20 per cent of sexually active teens use contraceptives.

"Few in this group can be happy about the choices which their pregnancies require; hasty marriage, abortion or out-of-wedlock birth," Cott said in a statement.

He predicted a sharp increase in adolescent parenthood as a result of abortion funds being cut from Medicaid.

The Baltimore-based organization's "Be a Teen-age Non-Parent ... No KIDding" campaign includes distribution of non-parent buttons, bumper stickers, posters and pamphlets, as well as "motivational and educational advertisements" to make teens aware of birth control methods.

"We will try to get young people thinking about the economic and emotional implications of premature parenthood," Cott said. He said the teen-age parent is severely limited in seeking education, job training, or finding a suitable lifestyle.

Un-donates art

DENVER [UPI] – Authorities said yesterday an artist who described herself as a "fiery old lady" walked into St. Mary's Episcopal Church and demanded that she be given the religious art works she donated before it seceded from the main Episcopal church.

Officials said the dispute wasn't settled until police were called. She eventually left with some of the works.

Mina Conant Billmyer said she has been a member of St. Mary's for 30 years, but left the fold last November when other members voted to secede from the regular Episcopal Church. Secessionists opposed a decision to allow women to be priests as well as other actions.

Mrs. Billmyer said she has made or given to the church nearly $4,000 worth of artworks and now wants them back. Church officials refused, so Mrs. Billmyer took matters into her own hands.

She entered the church Saturday during confessions, genuflected at the altar, then tried to remove a mosaic tabernacle she had donated. It was too heavy so she began collecting 14 wood drawings she made that depict the stations of the cross.

Church officials barred the door and called police. When church officials refused to sign a complaint, officers let her leave – with the artworks.

Hearings today— Panama treaty

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Carter administration planned to take its fight for the Panama Canal treaty to Congress today as the committee that must ratify it begins hearings on relinquishing control of the waterway.

Secretary of State Cyrus Vance and treaty negotiators Ellsworth Bunker and Sol Linowitz were scheduled to testify Monday before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, which has direct jurisdiction over treaties.

Defense Secretary Harold Brown and Gen. George Brown, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, were to discuss the treaty with the House International Relations Committee.

The treaty has been signed formally by President Carter and Panamanian leader Omar Torrijos but cannot become legally binding until it receives Senate ratification.

There actually are two treaties but they are considered indivisible. One calls for turning over control of the canal to Panama by the year 2000. The other gives the United States the right to defend the canal in perpetuity.

Also in the Senate, the Banking Committee planned to look into ways of streamlining federal bank regulations and a variety of banking practices. These matters came under scrutiny because of Bert Lance's financial transactions.

Lance resigned last week as chairman of the Office of Management and Budget after investigations of his affairs by a Senate committee and several government agencies.

The full Senate was to resume ebate on natural gas pricing. The issue probably will dominate floor action for the entire week because of a filibuster by liberals who oppose relaxing controls on natural gas prices.

A vote on a debate-limiting cloture petition was scheduled for Monday. Its adoption would halt the filibuster. Sixty senators must vote for the petition if cloture is to be invoked.

House members scheduled another vote in midweek on whether to increase the national debt ceiling by $83 billion. The increase was turned down last week.

Unless the debt ceiling is increased, some federal spending may have to stop Oct. 1.

Public meetings on hydroelectric plan

WALTHAM, Mass. [UPI] — The Army Corps of Engineers has planned a series of public meetings throughout New England for discussion of the proposed Dickey-Lincoln Hydroelectric project.

The initial sessions will be held in Maine Thursday, Oct. 20, in Fort Kent, and Wednesday Oct. 26., in Augusta.

Meetings have also been scheduled for Nov. 14, in St. Johnsbury, Vt., and Boston, Nov. 21.

Col. John P. Chandler, head of the Corps' New England office, said the reason for scheduling more than one public meeting was to get a broad spectrum of public opinion on record regarding the future of the $690 million project.

The project was first authorized by Congress in 1965. However, environmental groups have formed a united front against its construction.

The twin-dam project is designed to capture the spring runoff from the upper St. John River Valley near the Maine-Canadian border which will be generated into electricity.

Included in the proposed construction plans are a 335-foot earthfill dam and a 760-megawatt generating station near the village of Dickey just above the confluence of the St. John and Allagash Rivers.

A second, smaller dam would be built 11 miles downstream at the village of St. Frances to retain discharges from the bigger dam and regulate the flow of water.

A draft environmental impact statement was released Sept. 1, but according to Chandler, the blueprint was designed not to make conclusions about the project but help others make conclusions.

In addition to public comments at the meetings, written statements are also being accepted by the corps.

Data processed from two Voyager spacecraft

IOWA CITY, Iowa [UPI] — It could take Richard West as long as 33 years to process data radioed back from the two Voyager spacecraft as they travel through space.

West, a data technician at the University of Iowa, doubts he will still be on the job in 2010 when Voyager I and II finally travel out of radio range — "but maybe my son will."

"The transmitter on Voyage is strong enough so that we should be able to track the spacecraft for the next 33 years," he said. "And if interest remains high and the government continues to fund the program, we could track it and process the data for 33 years."

Scientists have said that after that time the two spacecraft will be long gone from the solar system and the radio signals will be too weak to reach Earth.

The spacecraft will have traveled nearly 580 million miles when they reach Jupiter in two years. Along the way, they will have gathered information about the planets, stars and interplanetary space.

Each craft carries instruments including a device built at the university's physics department that is designed to measure radio and plasma waves. West processes that information.

The data is gathered by the Voyager instruments and radioed to Earth tracking stations. Those stations then send it to the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, Calif., where it is sorted and recorded on magnetic tape. A stack of tapes is then sent periodically to Iowa City for processing.

Nepotism— Boston politics

BOSTON [UPI] — Eight Boston City Councilors who criticized patronage and nepotism in city government during this fall's preliminary campaign have 23 relatives on the public payroll, according to the Boston Globe.

The newspaper reported Sunday many of the city officials actively intervened on behalf of their job-seeking relatives.

Twenty-one candidates will challenge the nine city council councilors in Tuesday's preliminary election.

Of the nine incumbents, The Globe reported only Lawrence S. DiCara has not used his office to secure a job for a family member. His mother became a Boston schoolteacher before DiCara was born.

Albert L. O'Neil, who has been a vocal critic of preferential treatment in public hiring, denied using his influence to obtain public jobs for two sisters and two nephews.

The immediate family of Patrick F. McDonough is well represented on the public payroll. His wife and daughter hold full time city jobs, his two sons were summer employees.

A. Iannella works for the school department, Suffolk Superior Court, Suffolk County Court, and the state treasurer's office.

Joseph M. Tierney has a sister, a mother and two brothers on the public payroll and his brother-in-law a dentist at a neighborhood health clinic.

John Kerrigan has had two family members employed by the Boston School Department; his father and brother-in-law.

Louise Day Hicks' son works for the city Public Facilities Department. His last job was with the Boston Arena which is operated by the city.

Fre[illegible] Langone, identified by The Globe [illegible] of the more blatant influence peddlers, [illegible]ded his intervention in his son-in-law's [illegible]cessful application to be a Suffolk County probation officer.

"This was federal money," he said, "not the city payroll."

Cease-fire arrangement near Israeli border

By United Press International — Palestinian guerrillas and Christian rightists battling in the mountains near the Israeli border said yesterday they had agreed on a cease-fire arranged by the United States. Israel admitted its troops crossed the border and said the guerrillas rocketed a Jewish frontier town.

The guerrillas, who earlier in the day killed a number of Christian civilians with a barrage of mortar shells fired from their stronghold in a 12th century Crusader castle, announced, "Palestinian forces stopped firing at 5 p.m. in accordance with orders from the learder-ship."

A salvo of the Palestinians' Soviet-made Katyusha rockets slammed into the Israeli coastal town of Nahariya after the deadline, however, in the second guerrilla attack on an Israeli settlement of the day.

UPI correspondent Mathis Chazanov reported from Metullah, Israel's northenmost town and a vantage point overlooking the battle zone in southeast Lebanon, that British-built Centurion tanks moved along the frontier.

Troops in U.S.-built armored personnel carriers moved into Lebanese territory where the Palestinians and the Christian forces supported by Israel have been battling for about 10 days, Chazanov reported.

Israeli military censors for the first time permitted journalists to report the armored vehicle drive into Lebanon, but they banned publication of other details surrounding Israeli activity in the area.

Israeli radio earlier reported "a cease-fire appears to have taken hold in Lebanon among all sides."

"Presumably it has been mediated by the Americans," the government-run network said.

Israel agrees compromise

JERUSALEM [AP] — Israel approved a four-point U.S. compromise proposal yesterday to reconvene the Geneva Middle East peace conference, the government announced.

The proposal calls for a single all-Arab delegation at the opening of resumed talks, followed by working-group talks between Israel and individual countries, and the inclusion of Palestinians — but not known members of the Palestine Liberation Organization PLO — among the Jordanian representatives, the announcement said.

It was approved at a meeting of Prime Minister Menahem Begin and his cabinet.

If accepted by the Arabs, the formula could break a long deadlock over the question of who will represent the Palestinians in negotiations. But early Arab reaction was negative.

A senior Foreign Ministry official in Cairo, echoing a long-held Arab position, said Egypt is unlikely to accept a plan that does not specifically allow the PLO to attend resumed peace talks. Syria was expected to take an even harder line against PLO exclusion.

A top Jordanian official said last week his country supported the idea of a single all-Arab delegation.

Israel reversed its opposition to the idea of one Arab bloc at Geneva apparently because of the way the proposal handles Palestinian representation.

Israel's refusal to allow the PLO to attend the conference has so far stalemated all efforts to renew the talks. The Israelis refuse to deal with the PLO because of its long history of terrorism and because its charter calls for the dismantling of the Jewish state.

Israeli government officials said the newly endorsed plan raises hopes that the conference could still meet before the end of the year, which has been a target of President Carter's Mideast policy.

Panamanians were 'bugged' by U.S.

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Senate Intelligence Committee will look into the reported disappearance of a U.S. Army ex-sergeant allegedly involved in intelligence activities against Panamanian officials during negotiations on the canal treaty.

A committee spokesman said "we will look into the alleged departure" of the former sergeant. He refused to comment on reports the panel planned to subpoena the unidentified ex-sergeant and his military record.

CBS-TV reported Sunday the 28-year-old former sergeant from Brooklyn, N.Y., who received an honorable discharge in August, left for Panama last week.

Widespread reports in the past month said U.S. intelligence had bugged the Panamanian treaty negotiators in 1974 and 1975, collecting information about their personal and sexual habits. These reports said the Panamanians discovered the electronic surveillance and used the information as blackmail to obtain more favorable treaty terms from the United States.

The committee has already held two secret sessions including interviews with CIA Director Stansfield Turner and Ambassadors Ellsworth Bunker and Sol Linowitz who negotiated the pacts.

Sen. Daniel Inouye, D-Hawaii, chairman of the committee, told reporters last week after the second session there was no indication U.S. intelligence activities had affected the outcome of the negotiations.

But he refused to say whether surveillance had in fact been carried out and whether the Panamanians, having discovered it, used the information as a bargaining lever.

According to CBS the sergeant had informed the Panamanians of the bugging and received $10,000 from them.

Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., leader of the brewing Senate battle against treaty ratification, told CBS in Dallas "I was told by a distinguished colleague who was in a position to know that the sergeant was given an honorable discharge with nothing more said" about the alleged U.S. intelligence activity.

Left-wing activities result in FBI lawsuit

BALTIMORE [UPI] — The editor of an intelligence newsletter has admitted he has collected and given intelligence on liberal and left-wing groups to the FBI and other state and federal agencies since 1967, it was reported yesterday.

John H. Rees of Baltimore made the admission in a deposition filed in U.S. District Court in Washington in connection with a lawsuit brought by the Institute for Policy Studies against the FBI and Washington police, according to the Baltimore Morning Sun.

In the deposition, Rees said he supplied the FBI with information on the Washington-based Institute for Policy Studies by calling agents and sending them his biweekly newsletter.

The institute's suit claims police and FBI agents and informants infiltrated the institute in the early 1970s and spied on its activities.

Rees said he has distributed to police agencies data on the noncriminal activities of many liberal and left-wing persons and groups.

He refused to say whether he has received government money for the general information he offered, although he said he received no payment for his intelligence reports on the Institute of Policy Studies.

Rees said the privately distributed newsletter is sent to the FBI, Internal Revenue Service, Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, Secret Service, Customs Service, and the state police of Maryland, New York and Michigan.

Mourners for Steve Biko, violence in South Africa

KING WILLIAM'S TOWN, South Africa [AP] — Angry blacks among the nearly 20,000 mourners returning from a peaceful open-air funeral for black leader Steve Biko Sunday clashed with police and stoned two black officers to death, police reported.

Division Police Commission Brig. B.J. Smal said police opened fire to disperse the rioting crowds and wounded two blacks in the segregated township of Mdantsane outside the coastal city of East London, 30 miles east of here.

Smal said the two dead policemen were waiting at a township bus terminal when mourners from the funeral arrived. He said the mob set fire to two cars, overturned three others and looted a township shopping complex before the crowd was dispersed.

The violence followed a massive outpouring of antigovernment fervor at Biko's funeral in an open-air sports stadium here in which grieving blacks raised their fists and voices in black power salutes and songs.

French leftist's increase membership in senate

PARIS [UPI] — The French left increased its membership in the upper house of the Senate yesterday but fell far short of wresting control from the ruling government coalition.

The elections by 43,000 hand-picked voters were held in the shadow of a deep split in leftist ranks.

Interior Minister Christian Bonnet announced Sunday night the complex Senate balloting gave the left an overall 106 seats and the ruling coalition 189 seats.

The left appeared to have done less well than originally anticipated because of a split over economic policy for the March general elections.

Under the constitution, one-third of the 295-member senate is elected every three years. Voters are not the public, but a restricted number of members of the lower house and departmental and municipal councils.

Some leftist gains had been expected since the bulk of the voters were municipal council members. The left won the national municipal elections last March, increasing the number of its voters for the Senate ballot.

All four Giscard cabinet ministers running for election won.

Prime Minister talks— a new army in Rhodesia?

SALISBURY, Rhodesia [UPI] — Prime Minister Ian Smith yesterday gave qualified approval to the principle of one-man, one-vote and said black guerrillas would be considered for inclusion in the Rhodesian army after the transition to majority rule.

The prime minister also said he would be willing to consider disbanding the crack Selous scouts, a military unit accused of atrocities by black guerrillas.

He predicted there could be a majority rule settlement by the end of 1978.

His remarks, which represented a significant shift from his previous stands, came in an interview with World Television broadcast in London. A transcript was released by the government in Salisbury.

Smith described as "completely unacceptable" the pending Anglo-American proposal that the existing armed forces be replaced by an army based on black guerrilla forces.

But, in a departure from his previous stand that guerrillas could not be incorporated into the armed forces, he said those who measured up to the existing standards would be considered for inclusion, regardless of their previous records.

Asked if he would be prepared to allow guerrillas to return to civilian life, including giving them the right to vote, he said:

"Yes, I believe we have got to face up to this kind of thing if it is part of a settlement.....under those circumstances, I believe we have got to forget the past and look to the future."

Asked if allowing former guerrillas to vote meant they also could join the new army in Rhodesia after majority rule he replied:

"Oh, certainly."

The questioner, former British Labor party MP Brian Walden, asked Smith if he was reaching the point where he might accept the idea of one-man, one-vote "for the greater good of all Rhodesians."

"Yes," Smith said, "with the proviso that I would like to know what the alternative ideas are for preserving the kind of standards that I have referred to....I am actively researching in that direction now."

He said he would want safeguards for the white minority's interests and guarantees that the courts, the forces of law and order and the civil service remain free from politics.

He suggested a parliamentary "blocking mechanism" for whites might ensure that such gurantees are not overturned.

Gloomy economics

WASHINGTON [AP] — The congressional Joint Economic Committee issued a gloomy forecast yesterday that foresees little improvement in unemployment or inflation next year and lays a big share of the blame on the Federal Reserve Board.

Congress and the Carter administration must share the burden, the report said, because they are not being very "adventuresome" in devising a taxing and spending policy to get the economy back on its feet.

The committee scoffed at the idea that the government can't successfully fight inflation and unemployment at the same time. As examples of workable solutions, the panel suggested less reliance on taxes to pay for unemployment compensation and Social Security and proposed that revenues from President Carter's energy taxes be used to help states cut their sales taxes.

In its mid-year review of the economy, the committee said that despite optimistic assumptions about consumer and government spending, "a fairly sluggish performance" is expected because of weakness in business investment and the nation's deteriorating international trade position.

"Further substantial reductions in unemployment seem unlikely to occur in the near future, and the inflation rate will continue to be high and dominated by the rapid growth of unit labor costs," the report stated.

The government reported the jobless rate for August was 7.1 per cent of the work force. Inflation has slackened in recent months. The August rise in consumer prices, a modest three-tenths of 1 per cent, was the smallest rise in nine months.

The panel accused the Federal Reserve Board of being so obsessed with inflation that it has reduced the money supply by nine per cent in five years.

"This disastrous policy was a principal cause of the magnitude and length of the recession; it has been a perennial source of obstruction to recovery; and it now threatens to abort the recovery entirely if the policy is continued," the report said.

The committee read recent signals as indicating the Federal Reserve Board is planning another tightening of credit, and called that inappropriate.

The committee's criticism of the Fed's monetary policy was rejected by Republicans on the Senate-House panel. If inflation is to be conquered, they wrote, the growth of the money supply must be reduced gradually to five per cent a year.

Prostitution: consent to assault?

"Whenever you think of the town of Milwaukee, you think of...?" The stock answer, according to that commercial jingle, was beer. However, in recent times, it seems to have established a reputation for itself as a haven for judges with sexual more's of a stange nature, as seen by the hullaballou surrounding Archie Simpson's retirement. But, now that Arch has gone the way of the Edsel, some think that justice has triumphed and sin has been washed away from Milwaukee's bench. Wrong, or so some think, in the wake of another spectacular decision made a few days ago by Judge Ralph Gorenstein. The judge dismissed a fourth degree assault charge against a 23 year old man accused of indecently touching an undercover policewoman. The story reported in the last pages of the financial section of the New York Times stated that the policewoman was posing as a prostitute on a street corner when she "observed the defendant reach around her shoulder and grab her left breast, kisssng her at the same time". The basis of the complaint was that she never gave her consent, ergo the sexual assault charge.

paul yanowitch

The basic question of interest here, is the following; does the prostitute waive her rights to consent before sexual advances are "legal," due to her profession. Women have the right to be free from sexual assault, such is clear. It would be decidedly improper to grab a woman's breast and kiss her (unless it was your wife or Anita Bryant, professional freemartin) if you had never met her before. However, the prostitute is a separate case, with many special circumstances.

Suppose that, a la New York hookers, the prostitute was lewdly gesticulating and acting in a salacious manner; (such is known as the hard-sell technique among hookers) would this make a difference, legally? I bet it would, as most, if not all juries, would let the defendant go, swayed by the arguement that the woman "advertised" her wares and gave her implied consent for sexual liberties to be taken by those who so desire. This of course, is the antithesis of the liberal doctrine, that one should be safe from bodily harm and assault, regardless of the circumstances. More on that shortly.

Suppose now, that the policewoman was not openly soliciting: would this make a difference? It is not surprising that prostitutes have never had much success in court on sexual assault charges. Juries frown on cries of rape from the mouths of prostitutes, because they believe that a hooker, due to specialized nature of her chosen profession, has waived her right to explicit consent, and in its stead stands the doctrine of implied consent.

Is there a line that can be drawn where implied consent must give way to explicit consent, even in the case of the prostitute? That is, without a "go ahead' from mission control one can examine the merchandise and give a playful squeeze to insure ripeness; yet to actually sample the wares, explicit consent must be given, along with cash on hand. This seems to be what the Judge is aiming for, given the fact that he states that "a touching of this type is implied consent", and then states later that "I severely disapprove of sexual abuse and rape". Besides, according to this scintillating jurist, "There was no harm done here besides touching".

What this serves to demonstrate is a strange and anomalous quirk that has been permanently woven into the fabric of the law. That is, judges have recognized, either implicitly or explicitly, in certain cases, that human beings cannot restrain themselves in two areas, these being closely related. First, the area of libido and secondly, the control of emotions.

If someone insults your mother and casts aspersions on your heritage, you may take steps to cause the denegration to cease: one particularly useful and masculinely satisfying way is to punch the hell out of the ugly bastard who is heaping those torrid remarks on your saintly head. Others, like myself, turn and run if he is bigger, produce mulch out of his scrawny, little weasel body, if he fits that description, or solicit outside support if it looks like a fair fight.

If your date lets you get to second base, you may be able to slide across home plate if your lawyer is good. Third base is automatically a score, and first to home could get you probation. But, try stealing home if you don't even belong in the dugout, and it's all over.

But is this the way the law should function? Here, people's rights to speak and be safe in body and person are being swept aside because the human soul is so badly scarred and faulted that we cannot control our thoughts and urges. If I speak to a crowd, and take an unpopular stand that may cause the crowd to raise their collective ire, instead of protecting me, and my supposed sacrosanct right to speak, the authorities will either prevent me from speaking or arrest me for violating some vague nuisance statute. Of course, I may be thankful that the crowd did not perform collective surgery upon my precious well-tempered body sans surgical instruments.

However, instead of examining the more interesting and crucial questions, the judge decided to restrict his semi-intelligent thoughts to increasingly ridiculous comments. For example, he stated that officers (policewomen) "want to go out there and pose as hookers. That's the type of thing they're going to have to do. A battery is something else (in reference to assault and battery). But a touching of this type is implied consent".

I am surprised that the judge didn't buttress his thoughts by soliciting help from the so called classical school:

"Frailty, thy name is woman"

Bakke and affirmative action

Affirmative action has been met with varied criticism and support long since its inception in the mid-60's. Proponents for affirmative action claim it can be an effective tool for improving educational and job opportunities for racial minorities and women. They are right. Opponents argue that affirmative action, in its attempt to rectify both past and ongoing discrimination, can itself generate "reverse" discrimination." They are right.

ronald j. arena

Thus when the case of Allan Bakke, a 37 year old white male who charged that the University of California medical school at Davis discriminated against him, reaches the Courts in October, affirmative action will be put to perhaps its greatest test. A court decision ruling against Bakke will maintain affirmative action's "equal opportunity employer" policy, while a decision ruling in favor of Bakke will most definitely strike a decisive blow to the already shaky affirmative action guidelines.

Archibald Cox, Harvard law professor and former Watergate special prosecutor, will be the man representing the case of the University of California. Although Cox is "guardedly optimistic" about his chances of winning, it appears he will be the underdog in the match.

Affirmative action does not "demand" that a given number of blacks or women must be hired by a given firm or accepted by a given university. What affirmative action does demand is that a genuine effort be conveyed by these respective companies and colleges to recruit, train, and hire qualified minorities. Affirmative action does not call for quotas. Here at our own University we see MacKimmie dormitory using quotas to fill its House Committee. Is that creating an equal opportunity?

I am not saying that quotas are always wrong, but rather to express that a fine line exists between quotas and affirmative action. Quotas, in some instances, are needed. Where discrimination is blatant, where, to use the example given by Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare Joseph Califano, there are no blacks in police departments or fire departments in predominantly black areas, a set number of blacks should be hired. Where unions have barred blacks from jobs, hiring quotas are needed.

In other instances, as with Mr. Bakke, I believe quotas are unjust. Should a citizen like Bakke, guilty of nothing more than being a white male, be stepped on in an attempt to make a path for minorities and women to the employment line? Should an institution of higher education, such as U-Cal-Davis lower its standards and accept someone with a 2.1 cum and reject someone with a 3.5, as in Bakke's case?

I answer "no" to each question. My inner feelings tell me that America has been and still is a racist country. Minorities have been and still are discriminated against. Who is to say that a white institution will give that genuine effort to recruit minorities? I want to say that Bakke is wrong, that the Hispanic with the 2.2 cum, or the black with the 2.1 should be accepted. But I can't logically convince myself that using discrimination to remedy discrimination is a proper strategy. It doesn't make sense. Discrimination is a delicate and sensitive issue, but quotas are such a crude tool.

Lyndon Johnson, a proponent for affirmative action, said in a 1965 speech at Howard University, "You do not take a person who, for years, has been hobbled by chains and liberate him, bring him up to the starting line of a race and then say, 'You are free to compete with all the others,' and still justly believe that you have been completely fair."

Just by saying that firms and universities should give a real effort to recruit minorities is not enough. A college should be required to show that it is putting forth an effort, with scholarships and the like, but it should not need to adhere to strict quotas. Quotas are a convenient method for measuring the "genuine effort" given by universities and firms to recruit minorities, but convenience does not suggest effectiveness. Califano used as an example of good intentions the Harvard Medical School, which offers a program of special instruction for minority students before enrollment. That is making a genuine effort without the use of quotas.

It may take as long as next summer for a decision to be reached in the Bakke case. Somehow, even though I see America as discriminatory, I'll be pulling for Bakke. Affirmative action can be extremely effective, but in some cases it can be very unjust.

Lance resignation: Watergate revenged?

To the Editor:

The UMass student body is not unanimous in rejoicing the departure of Bert Lance. I regret it. This was not, finally, a triumph of the people over corruption. This was no Watergate. Lance after all, was never accused of any self-interested pursuit at OMB. The Lance affair, properly speaking, was not even Watergate revenged. The Elephants did not come back this time for a cheering victory over the Dirty Donkeys. Lance was the most conservative, business-oriented spokesman of the administration.

The only similarity between Lance's fall and Nixon's is that each was a power test between Congress and President. The similarity is slim. This time David did not lay low Goliath. A more appropriate image would be Lurleen tackling George. This time Congress vanquished not an imperial president but an impotent cripple. The Lance affair is just one more testament that the hill is only strong when it blocks constructive policy-making. Our representatives and senators do not flex their muscles by devising solutions to the threats that loom over the next decade, like energy and Panama. They show their strength by rejecting Carter's proposals.

The triumph of our hydra-headed Hill bodes ill for anyone who wants a government capable of concerted action. We need radical alterations in the business community's attitudes toward pollution, auto safety standards, mass transportation. Carter's weakest area of support was already the business community. Now he lacks any decent liaison with the nabobs who own, at modest estimate, forty per cent of the Senate. No businessman in his right mind would offer himself up as Bert's replacement if he must face the same scrutiny Bert just got. A man does not get rich on other people's efforts [and how else could a man get rich?] without experimenting a good deal to test the elasticity of our laws. It is this natural, irrepressible child-like curiosity that drives men to money and power.

Yes, Bert had his airplane and his bottomless bank account. But then, countless senators have junketed with their wives in Turkey or taken a dip in the secretarial pool. So what? Children and their games. The question that should decide our support for public men is not whether they are corrupt — their unnatural appetites for power and wealth make that all too likely — but how their corruption coincides with public policy. The greatest tragedy of the Lance affair is that the Hill has distracted our attention from Tong-sun Park. We have been bamboozled. The Case of the Korean Kitchy-koo is far more disconcerting than Lance's Advances because votes were bought for nooky.

The power of clothing

Power is the difference from one to the next. And think, the only time power is vacant, where everyone is the same to the other, is when there is an absence of clothing. There is nothing hiding or creating an image that doesn't exist. Everything is exposed and there can be no denial of who or what you are.

But add clothing, and this equality ends. Suddenly it's easy to hide, easy to portray yourself as something, anything you choose.

Think: what is your first reaction or impression of a person wearing high platforms, flashy clothes, snapping his or her fingers? Plastic you say, disco.

Or what about a person with raggy jeans, frizzy hair, a t-shirt, a ratty sweater? A type of stoic, a hippy, a radical, one could say.

Clothing is a political message you can't avoid. It tells a passer-by about your views, your conception of yourself and something about your outlook on life without your eyes saying anything.

For a disco person, most would say it's something plastic, interest in entertainment and that's as far as any interest goes. For a stoic, a hippy, it's a denial of the status quo. It's a political message that you want out of the system just the same as it is for a political figure trying to garner the support of a particular interest group by saying he is like them.

Probably the two politicians who most expressed themselves and their views through their dress were McGovern and Carter. Running a very liberal ticket, McGovern, the advocate of legalization of pot, end to the Vietnamese War, proponent of an extensive welfare system, was clad, yes, distinctively in suits, but with bell bottomed pants and wild print ties — the young and liberal modes in the dress of the late sixties.

Running on a popularist image, Carter was always beset in casual flannel shirts, to match his down-to-earth grin.

Or think what happens to friends once they graduate from school and are looking for a job. Their hair gets cut, their jeans misplaced somewhere along the way, replaced by nice suits, jackets and ties. They're certainly making a political statement. Yes, I want to be part of the establishment is the message their clothing carries.

Sloppiness is an expression of lack of concern as neatness shows a sense of pride. The look of clothing may also lead someone to class your economic standing. This is a mystique; misleading, yes, however most people unconsciously class you by the type of clothing you wear and by how expensive it looks.

In your clothing you present yourself. You get people to think of you in some way before they even know you. This is the power behind clothing. This is the personal expression which carefully illustrates the difference between one person to the next.

So what is the point behind power of clothing? Simply don't let what someone wears fool you. Don't be mislead. The most stark raving conservative may be bearded wearing scuzzy jeans patched in more places than there is original jean material. The most eloquently dressed female may be a radical. A nicely suited gentleman may in fact be very poor. And so on.

Another point is to remember the power behind what you wear — to know how to maneuver a person's conception of yourself through what you wear. Also, one should remember the importance of clothing when seeking some sort of opportunity whether it be finding a job or admission to an academic program.

Lastly, remember that your clothing is not an eternal barrier to who you are and though you may at first deceive someone by what you wear, sooner or later they'll see through the costume.

our man in paris

Paris: it is a dream city where the streets are paved with mattresses and burgundy flows in the Seine, where the natives drive like madmen, and the music of "Figaro" bursts forth from every other window. And for a young American eager to submit himself to the delights of this modern Sodom and Gomorrah things could be worse. But of that gendre of discovery another time. Rather let me talk of first impressions.

Americans aren't disliked as much by the aloof French as one would have thought. Instead they are looked on as curiosities. After all, what other nation puts cheese in the refrigerator? The French claim it's easy to distinguish an American in Paris and they're right. He is over five feet tall and carries a camera with him.

It's no wonder the French are so small when one sees what they have for breakfast. An average French breakfast includes two little crusty rolls (called croissants) with butter (sometimes) and a cup of coffee. Tell them that breakfast is the most important meal of the day and they dismiss the information as American propaganda. Meanwhile I sit at the table hunched over my Bangladesh hors-d'oeurve of a breakfast craving an Egg McMuffin with a side order of hash browns, and orange juice in a Ronald McDonald glass with the poisonous lead decals on the side. This is what culture shock is all about.

I had my first French argument last night and it kept me pumped up for hours after. Translated it went like this-

Jacques — "The Concorde is good, don't you think?"

Me — "No, the Concorde is bad!" (touche!)

Needless to say my French hasn't progressed far but I think I got the point across.

As for the sights, the only one that I've seen thus far has been the Eiffel Tower, which I can't help but see as it is just outside my window and across the river. You can imagine what an eyesore it is. At least its inhabitants are pretty quiet though and the elevators are in excellent condition, so it's a pretty good bargain compared to Southwest.

Well the hour has quickened and it becomes late. I'll settle down now with my future perfect verbs and conjugate late into the night (with the curtains closed of course). A bientot.

'Anyone who sees God in me can't be all bad.'

By FRANK DENTON

What's in a hero? I'm not referring to the sandwich, which is a manifestation of a hero. I'm suggesting mother-smooching, knuckle-busting, crime-fighting idols. I'm talking about weak little men with liquid chins and mellow eyes who write verse. I'm implying women with determination, power, and money.

About the only thing common to this society's heroes is their variety. However, there do seem to be characteristics frequent in our social examples. Primary among them is a quality I can only describe as charisma. Another is uniqueness. Perhaps another is mastery of their environments, or maybe consistency in relationships.

There are more heroes today than ever before; a phenomenon that appears to be directly correllated with the search for a godhead. In these idols we can find all those qualities we ourselves yearn for — powers, charms, and successes which each of us associate with superiority, with being god-like.

A person's favorite fantasies and the people he-she attempts to emulate are indicative of the type of character bottled inside. Think, for example, upon friends who idolize Farrah Fawcett-Majors. Consider the athletic types who squander hard-earned holds up George Bernard Shaw or Groucho savings betting on the sox. Examine your image of someone who holds up George Bernard Shaw or Groucho Marx or Shirley Temple as ideal. People tend to imitate and reproduce more or less imperfectly the god they create.

Probably the most stable people are those who find a god evident in each and every person. They, ultimately, have found a godhead or image with less weaknesses and inconsistencies than any individual person. And it is these people who come closest to emulating a god they believe in. It is these people I would like to know most — anyone who sees God in me can't be all bad.

As a result of our sympathies toward various characters, we often end up in their occupations, seeking similar goals and overcoming similar problems. And the one who finds a god in everyone? That person is a new hero.

Rally held for Franklin teachers

BOSTON [UPI] – More than 1,000 persons, including Chicago boilermakers and Australian garment workers, participated yesterday at a rally for striking Franklin school teachers.

Teachers and union supporters from 200 Massachusetts and New England locals were among the crowd at the Franklin Equestrian Center to demonstrate their "expression of support for fair, good-faith, collective bargaining."

The dispute between the educators and school committee has so far resulted in the incarceration of 34 teachers and the imposition of $250-a-day fines on an additional 28. The work stoppage, which began Sept. 16, has kept some 5,500 students on an extended summer vacation.

Meanwhile, negotiators representing the Franklin Education Association and the school committee huddled yesterday at 6 p.m. at the Parker House in Boston to renew efforts to agree on acceptable language for a new teacher contract.

Discussions were slated to start with consideration of a school committee counterproposal to the latest FEA package. The school committee negotiators promptly left the contract talks Saturday night after presenting their response.

"The fact that they walked out after offering a counterproposal is indicative of their insincere bargaining attitude," charged FEA spokesman Joseph Ferrari. "Some members of the school committee team wanted to go on, but their legal counsel ordered them to leave the room."

The school committee's package came in response to an earlier FEA proposal, which contained revised language affecting involuntary transfer policy, class size, a sick leave bank, salaries, an arency fee, length of the school year, and nutrition contract. The FEA also made changes in longevity fees and the extra compensation to directors.

Yanks sweep twinbill; magic number now 5

NY sweeps Jays

TORONTO [UPI] — Ed Figueroa and Sparky Lyle combined on a five-hitter and Graig Nettles drove home his 100th run of the season yesterday, enabling the New York Yankees to complete a 15-0, 2-0, doubleheader shutout sweep of the Toronto Blue Jays and reduce their magic number for clinching the American League East to five.

The Yankees, who lead second place Boston by three games with seven games to play, pounded out 20 hits in the opener including homers by Reggie Jackson, Cliff Johnson, Lou Piniella and Dave Kingman to back the seven-hit, 10-strikeout pitching of Ron Guidry.

The Yankees scored their first run of the nightcap in the fourth inning when Thurman Munson and Jackson stroked back-to-back singles and Chris Chambliss drew a walk from loser Jim Clancy, 4-8, to load the bases. Nettles then singled in Munson, but Jackson, also attempting to score, was thrown out at the plate by Blue Jays' right fielder Bob Bailor.

New York added an insurance run in the ninth when Del Alston, caught off third base on a grounder back to Clancy, dashed home when the Blue Jays' pitcher threw the ball into the dirt at third base.

Figueroa, 16-10, was removed from the game in favor Lyle after the Blue Jays put together a single by Bailor and a walk to Al Woods after two outs in the eighth. Lyle struck out Roy Howell to end the threat and went on to retire the Blue Jays in the ninth for his 25th save.

In the opener, Jackson stroked his 31st homer of the season in the first inning after successive singles by Mickey Rivers and Nettles. Johnson belted a solo shot during a three-run second and added a two-run blast in the seventh after Piniella had greeted reliever Jerry Johnson with his homer. Kingman hit his fourth homer as Yankee in a four-run ninth.

Sox swamp foe

DETROIT [AP] — The Boston Red Sox, fighting to stay alive in the American League East race, powered their way past the Detroit Tigers 12-5 yesterday with the help of homers by Carlton Fisk, Carl Yastrzemski and Butch Hobson.

Right-hander Reggie Cleveland, 11-8, went all the way for the win while rookie Ed Glynn, 2-1, took the loss, lasting just one inning.

Boston's Rick Burleson led off the game with a double. After a walk to Ted Cox, Burleson went to third on a fly to right to Jim Rice and scored on a fielder's choice before Fisk hit his 26th homer of the season into the upper deck in left.

Boston made it 4-1 in the second as Hobson led off with a triple and scored on an infield out. Yastrzemski's 27th homer in the third made it 5-1.

Hobson's 30th homer, a two-run blast, came in the eighth. Ben Oglivie hit his 20th home run of the season for Detroit.

O's demolished

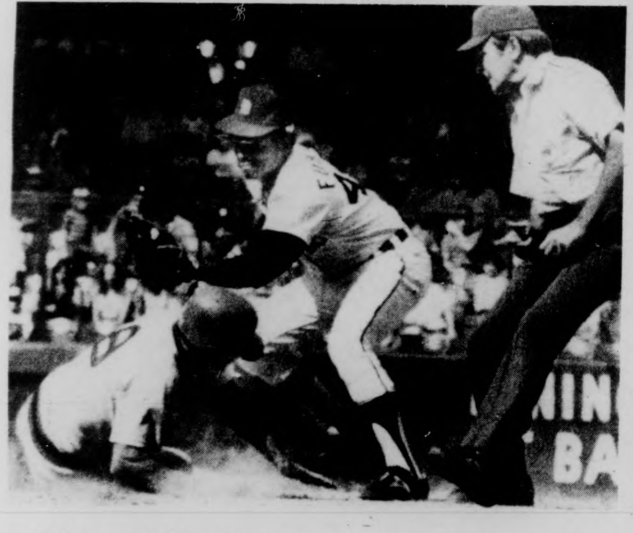
CLEVELAND [UPI] — Rookie shortstop Alfredo Griffin doubled home two runs during a five-run fifth inning before Rico Carty all but finished off Baltimore's American League East pennant hopes with a three-run homer in the seventh which produced a 9-4 victory by the Cleveland Indians over the Orioles.

The loss left the Orioles four games behind the front-running New York Yankees in the loss column with six to play.



Carl Yastrzemski slides into second base with a steal yesterday as Tito Fuentes applies a tardy tag. The Sox beat the Tigers, 12-5, but lost a half-game to the Yankees as New York swept a doubleheader from the Toronto Blue Jays. (UPI)

Fall batsmen topple Berkshire, tie AIC

By WALT CHERNIAK
Collegian Staff

Pitchers Mark Brown, Chuck Thompson and Dave Stoller combined to limit the opposition to five singles as the UMass fall baseball team defeated Berkshire Community College, 5-2, at Lorden Field last Thursday.

The Minutemen opened their fall season last Wednesday by tying American International, 2-2. The game was called after eight innings due to a curfew.

Brown was the most impressive of the trio, fanning six men in the three innings he worked, while allowing only one unearned run and a meek first inning single. Stoller whiffed three and Thompson one, as the Minutemen hurlers combined for 10 strikeouts in their nine innings of work.

UMass got on the board first in the home half of the second inning when John Gallagher reached first after Berkshire third baseman Mike Waldorf misplayed his soft roller. Claude Tetreault fanned and Dave Oleksak popped up, but then Rick Flynn drove a two-out walk and shortstop Glen Dooling drilled a line drive single to right center to give UMass a 1-0 lead.

Berkshire countered against Brown in the third, however, taking advantage of his only wild streak of the game. After striking out the first man he faced, the lanky righthander walked leadoff man Tim Mooney, who proceeded to steal second and advance to third on a wild pitch. Brown struck out the next batter as well, but then uncorked another wild pitch to send home Mooney with the tying run.

The score remained deadlocked at 1-1 through the middle innings, as relievers Thompson of UMass and Joe DeCicco of Berkshire both stalemated their opposition. A two-out single by DeCicco and a walk placed Thompson in momentary hot water in the fourth, but he rebounded to strike out Tom Nash and end the threat.

UMass finally launched its winning rally in the bottom of the seventh, as the Minutemen scored four runs, aided greatly by a series of Berkshire miscues.

Dooling doubled to open the inning, his third hit of the game, as the rightfielder misjudged the ball and let it get behind him. When the throw back to the infield got away, the alert Dooling scooted into third.

The Minutemen then proceeded to combine three walks, an error by the shortstop, a sacrifice fly and a soft, looping single over a drawn-in infield by Gallagher into four rather tainted runs to take a 5-1 lead.

Berkshire came back to push across a run in the eighth against Stoller, but that was all it could muster, as Coach Gus Bedard's troops held on to capture their first victory of the fall exhibition baseball slate. UMass' next opponent will be North Adams State College, whom the Minutemen will entertain at 3:00 p.m. on Tuesday afternoon at Lorden Field.

Dent romps in the rainstorm

NFL sees no upsets

The Oakland Raiders, or anybody else, may think twice before ever cutting Errol Mann again.

Mann, who was released by Oakland late in training camp and called back just before the season started, kicked field goals of 21, 40 and 41 yards in the second period yesterday to give the defending super bowl champion Raiders a 16-7 victory over their AFC archrivals, the Pittsburgh Steelers.

Mark Van Eeghen ran eight yards for a touchdown for Oakland's other score.

Mann, who was cut by Detroit last year and signed by the Raiders midway through the season after Fred Steinfort was injured, was recalled by Oakland when San Diego claimed No. 3 draft choice Rolf Benirschke. The Raiders had tried to sneak Benirschke through on the final waiver list unsuccessfully.

Steeler errors contributed as much to Oakland's victory as the Raiders' own performance. One field goal and Van Eeghen's touchdown followed Steeler turnovers and Pittsburgh also ended three of its own scoring threats by turnovers, including a late fourth-quarter drive.

The Steeler score came on a 43-yard pass from Terry Bradshaw to Bennie Cunningham. The Steelers also drove to the Oakland 37 on their next possession but their comeback hopes were dashed when Bradshaw's pass was intercepted by Charles Phillips.

In other games, St. Louis overcame Chicago 16-16, Washington downed Atlanta 10-6, Dallas romped over the New York Giants 41-21, Los Angeles humbled Philadelphia 20-0, Houston stopped Green Bay 16-10, Baltimore defeated the New York Jets 20-12, Cincinnati overran Seattle 42-20, Detroit edged New Orleans 23-19, San Diego outclassed Kansas City 23-7, Miami edged San Francisco 19-15 and Denver downed Buffalo 22-6. Minnesota rallied to beat Tampa Bay 9-3 Saturday night and New England plays host to Cleveland tonight.

Jim Hart was 16-of-24 for 215 yards and a TD and Jim Bakken kicked three field goals to lead St. Louis over Chicago. Hart put on a passing display in the first half, hitting 11-of-13 for 162 yards. His 12 straight completions broke a club record of nine set by Charlie Johnson in 1966. Mel Gray caught five for 95 yards.

Washington, aided by a key pass interference penalty, broke a 3-3 tie late in the third quarter on a Billy Kilmer-to-Mike Thomas scoring pass and held on for a victory over Atlanta.

Tony Dorsett's first two TDs as a pro, Roger Staubach's 235 yards passing and critical first-half mistakes by the Giants helped Dallas, which took a 28-point lead before New York could score. Dorsett, the 1977 Heisman trophy winner and college football's all-time leading rusher, scored from 34 yards out — the longest run from scrimmage for Dallas in two years.

Joe Namath passed for two TDs in the opening half and the Los Angeles defense took care of Philadelphia as the Rams, now 1-1, impressed.

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 26 — Born today, you are one of those for whom it is difficult to relax. The moment you have completed one task, or one phase of a task, you want to move on. You cannot rest feeling unoccupied. Beware you don't exhaust yourself in your mad dash to – you are not sure where!

You work long and hard and with a will – but are not quite sure toward what ends. You possess talents and are quite willing to employ them. But, left to set your own goals you find yourself at a loss as to where to begin. Most important to your success would seem to be a trusted partner who thinks as you do and who knows how to harness your talents to productive ends.

Your personal relationships may be of the nip-and-tuck variety until you are an adult, for trust comes slowly to you. But as work matures you, you learn to relax control of your emotions, and should be able to form good, stable, happy relationships with others.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22) — Don't allow your naturally sympathetic nature to be fooled into a venture you really cannot condone. Keep morality level high.

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21) — Don't go out of your way to take a chance - - but if a chance presents itself naturally, you might do well to risk it.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) — Make progress with your own project at this time. Effective effort on another's behalf will not come easily today.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19) — To get the most out of the day, you will have to get the most out of yourself. See to a matter of health in A.M.

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18) — You may be tempted to take on your own responsibilities and those of another this morning. Don't!

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20) — Your lazy correspondence may cause permanent damage to an old friendship. Mend your ways!

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — The wise Aries will forgive and forget – as soon as possible. There is little to be gained by a late start. Rise early.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Whatever you undertake today, relax. Nothing will be worse for progress than a display of nerves.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Although you may wish to avoid it, you will probably find yourself front and center before day's end. Try to enjoy the attention.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Make an effort to catch up with work left over from yesterday. This is a good time to tie off loose ends before they tangle.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22) — Save your energy for late in the day when an emergency situation may require you to act quickly and with effectiveness.

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22) — Courage and faith in your own ability to work out your problems: these will enable you to end the day in good spirits.

Bruins melt, Eagles molt as harriers romp

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

The UMass harriers, minus three top runners, easily defeated Boston College and Brown in dual meet action in Providence Friday night.

Under cloudy and cool conditions, UMass placed five runners in the top nine positions on the way to a 27-50 win over the Eagles and a 27-59 win over Brown. The harriers, now 2-0, wait one day before taking on Providence and Harvard in probably the most important dual meet of the season.

Without co-captain Mike Quinn, Stetson Arnold and Kevin McCusker, who were resting for the Providence-Harvard meet tomorrow, Coach Ken O'Brien relied on the services of co-captain Frank Carroll to set the pace for his teammates.

Carroll responded with a third place finish (26:37), 19 seconds behind race winner Sean McCracken of Brown (26:18). Other UMass finishers were Lou Panaccione — 4th, (26:41), Matt Wolff — 5th (26:47), Tom Wolff — 6 th (26:51) and Michael Morris — 9th 26:56).

As the race approached the mid-mark (3 miles), McCracker, Bill Roach of BC (second place finisher — 26:24) and Carroll were fairly close together. The pace was a quick one as McCracken was nine seconds off the record of 26:09 for 5.5 miles.

McCracken, after setting the pace with a 4:35 mile and a 9:17 two mile, gradually broke away from the pack and won the meet.

"This was a good meet for all our runners," said O'Brien. "It was a quick, aggressive meet where everyone ran the first two-three miles at a quick pace. Mostly everyone who ran felt the race was run at a quick pace but no one felt they overextended themselves.

"I think this puts us in a good position to develop as a team. We're in good condition physically and from this meet I can see most of our runners running in a pack, at a good level of running, time wise."

O'Brien felt one of the most important features of the meet was the performance of senior Frank Carroll. Through most of last year Carroll never got over the effects of a serious cold which consequently affected his running. However, "Carroll, re-established himself as an aggressive runner who sets the example," said O'Brien.

The meet as a whole was a good warmup for the harriers who now face the "iron" of New England with tomorrow's meet and Saturday's against Northeastern and St. John's. Quinn, Arnold, and McCusker will rejoin the team Tuesday and most obviously their services will be needed.

Central Conn. hosts stickers

The UMass field hockey team, should the rain hold off, will be shooting for its second straight victory today as it travels to Central Connecticut to take on the Blue Devils. Game time is 3:30.

Saturday's College Sportsday, that annual extravaganza of scrimmages, was cancelled due to the inclement weather. UMass would have played host to several of the finest Northeast field hockey teams in the day-long competition.

The Minutewomen, coming off a 1-0 victory over their biggest area rival, Springfield College, played host last season to the Central. UMass won that game, 1-0.

The season-opening win over Springfield was a complete reversal of last year's performance, when the Minutewomen took it on the chin in the 1976 opener, 7-1.

The victory also marked the first time in what seems an eternity that UMass has defeated a Chief field hockey squad. It also marked a milestone in that the Minutewomen beat the reigning Northeast champ. Springfield had taken the regional tournament two straight years, and with the titles also represented the Northeast in the National tournament.

Following today's game, UMass will play host to Keene State on Wednesday.

The junior varsity Minutewomen will also be in action today. Game time for the JVs is set for 4:45.

Spikers stuffed by Vt., UNH in tri-meet trial

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

DURHAM, N.H. — If the UMass volleyball team learned anything at all from its season-opening tri-meet setback at the hands of New Hampshire and Vermont, it can be spelled out in one simple phrase: lack of defense.

"It was our defense which hurt us," UMass coach Dianne Thompson said. "By far, it was our biggest problem."

But a few quirky turns of fate didn't help the Minutewomen, who lost their inaugural contests of the season.

In the first match of the tri-meet affair, UMass took it on the chin, 12-15, 15-10, and 15-10 against Vermont.

The Minutewomen then played host New Hampshire, and bowed out of the day's activities by a 15-2, 15-1 count.

In the initial match, UMass came out strong with a lineup consisting of Kathy Higgins, Joyce Gresl, Beth Kuzdeba, Chris Kelley, Donna Sasso, and Peggy Barber. The sextet combined for a 15-12 first-set win.

"At one point, we led only 13-12, but the team came through and won," Thompson said.

But perhaps the turning point of the day occurred in the second set with UMass up, 9-6. While serving, the Minutewomen were called for a quirky out-of-service rotation penalty. The mishap gave the serve back to the Catamounts, who quickly took advantage of the UMass error to get back into things.

Quirk of fate number two occurred at the end of the second set. According to Thompson, the scoreboard read 14-10 Vermont, but the official scorer had the count at 15-10 UVM, so the decision went to the Catamounts.

"It was a weird ending, and it threw us off a bit," Thompson noted.

In set number three, UMass "led from the very start," the coach said, but found itself tied at nine later on in the proceedings.

Then, said Thompson, a Catamount took it upon herself to serve up a bevy of winners, and the Minutewomen wwent down to defeat.

The same UVM spiker also victimized the Minutewomen in the second set, when she got her hands on the ball and befuddled the UMass crew with some stellar serving.

Against New Hampshire, UMass just "panicked," Thompson said.

"The scores seem lopsides, but there were some good rallies," she added.

Eph-women step aside as UMass chugs along

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The cast was slightly changed from a year ago, but the outcome was virtually the same on Friday as the UMass women's cross country team easily downed Williams College, 17-45, as Jane Welzel shattered the Willaims' course record by 1:23.

Last year, with Julie Lafreniere and Jo Chapman leading the way, the Minutewomen defeated Williams 18-45 on the apple orchard course.

Friday, Welzel ran the 3.25 mile course in 19:57, after breaking loose from a pack of teammates and William's Michelle Cutsforth during the second mile.

Her time was exceptional, given the weather condition's, which Chapman described as "cold, with a misty drizzle," and the course, "very hilly and muddy, with terrible footing."

Tina Francario ran with Welzel for a time before settling back into school. She finished in 20:12.

Francario's co-frosh sensation, Priscilla Wilson, provided the major excitement of the race when she outkicked Cutsforth over the last 30 yards to finish third in 20:29. Cutsforth was fourth.

Sue Swartz was fifth in 20:42, and Debbie Farmer tied the old course record, 21:20, as she finished sixth. Providing the depth necessary to wrap up the meet were Linda Welzel in seventh and Beth Collins in 10th.

Coach Charlotte Lettis told the runners to go out fast, and they did, hitting the first mile between 5:30 and 5:35. At the mile mark, Jane Welzel and Francario broke away from Swartz, Wilson and Farmer, who pulled slightly away from Linda Welzel and Collins.

The middle section of the course wound over a golf course, which was extremely muddy after the current lengthy stretch of bad weather. The pack strung out through this section, setting up the order of finish.

Williams was weakened by the absence of sophomore Mary Hakala, its top runner last year, who is in Finland. Lisa Capaldini ran sick, and could only finish eighth.

The Minutewomen's next meet will be tomorrow against Brandeis and Radcliffe. UMass defeated both schools easily last year by 23-58-72 scores at Franklin Park in Dorchester, tomorrow's meet site.

Linksters seek title repeat

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's golf team, which last week regained the Yankee Conference Championship, will try to make it two in a row today as the Minutemen travel to nearby Longmeadow Country Club to defend their title in the New Englands.

The duffers, who won by a whopping 13 strokes last weekend at Stowe, will go with a lineup of juniors, Jeff Orr and Bill Campbell, sophomore Vic Lahtiene, and co-captains Flynt Lincoln and Jim McDermott.

Lincoln, low medalist a week ago with a 73, will be playing on his home course. McDermott, who shot a 75 last week, will be defending the medal he won a year ago at New Seabury C.C.

Surprising Orr earned his spot with lineup via the fine 74 he shot at Stowe. Lahtiene and Campbell, meanwhile, earned their spots by shooting the two low scores in a 36 hole practice match this week.

The tournament will be a two day affair, with the best four of five scores counting each day.

Both coach Ed Vlach and co-captain McDermott were optimistic about the linksters' chances. They also expressed concern for the weather and the condition of the courses, which will be considerably less than ideal.

The competition will be a little stiffer this week than it was at Stowe, with almost 40 teams on hand. The main competition is expected to come from Dartmouth, Providence, Yale and URI.

Defense dominates Harvard, 17-0

By BILL EDELSTEIN
Collegian Staff

CAMBRIDGE — Dennis Dent did his best Mark Spitz impersonation and the UMass defense rose to every occasion to propel the Minutemen to a 17-0 whitewashing of Harvard Saturday before 9000 soggy fans and countless dry ones who had the good sense to stay home and watch the game on their television sets.

During the entire first quarter and one play into the second, the two teams sloshed about the field, trading punts, fumbles and runs up the middle. Then, just when the fans were ready to make Harvard Stadium their collective water bed, the Big Snooze was interrupted by the flying feet of little Dennis Dent. Dent accepted a Mike Fallon screen pass at the UMass 31, paused a moment while tackle Ross Schubarth disposed of one Harvard defender and then outswam another into the murky depths of the endzone.

"The play was designed to start inside and then go outside, but Schubarth took the man outside, so I stayed inside," said Dent.

When it was all over, the play had covered 69 yards, the score stood 6-0 and the Minutemen had all the points they would need to hand the Crimson their first setback of the young season while improving their own record to 2-1.

On the ensuing play, Harvard halfback Rob Kinchen made his bid to abruptly tie the contest at seven by returning Dave Croasdale's kickoff 95 yards for an apparent touchdown.

Closer inspection of the playing field revealed Harvard's Lou Lauricella kneeling beside a linesman's yellow penalty flag, and clutching his helmet as if someone had hit him in the head with a sledgehammer. Lauricella was a convicted clipper.

"It was a big play in the game because it took a touchdown off the board," said UMass head coach Dick MacPherson.

The penalty loomed even larger as the Crimson offense suffered through its fits of impotence while the third quarter ran down.

To be exact, the Harvard offensive unit didn't have much time to show its ineffectiveness because UMass controlled the ball for eight of the first 10 minutes of the quarter.

The Minutemen took the second-half kickoff and marched down the field like a cross between Patton's Third Army and the East German water polo team. The drive stalled at the Harvard three-yard line, however, when Billy Coleman's second fumble of the game was pounced on by Harvard cornerback Fred Cordova.

When the UMass defense stacked-up three running plays for no gain, the Crimson brought in Jim Curry to punt the ball to safer territory. Whether Curry had intentions of trying to run for a first down instead of booting the ball away is the subject of debate. The fact is that Curry took enough steps before punting to be called for traveling in the NBA. The kick was partially deflected and it expired at the Harvard 20. Six plays later, Coleman made UMass fans forget about the turnover by punching the ball over from the two.

The Harvard faithful were momentarily encouraged when, just three minutes after the second TD, UMass punter John Romboli was converged upon at the Minutemen's nine-yard line after a bad snap from center.

If the Crimson's sprit hadn't been broken by Coleman's score, the UMass defense took all the fight out of Harvard during the next three plays.

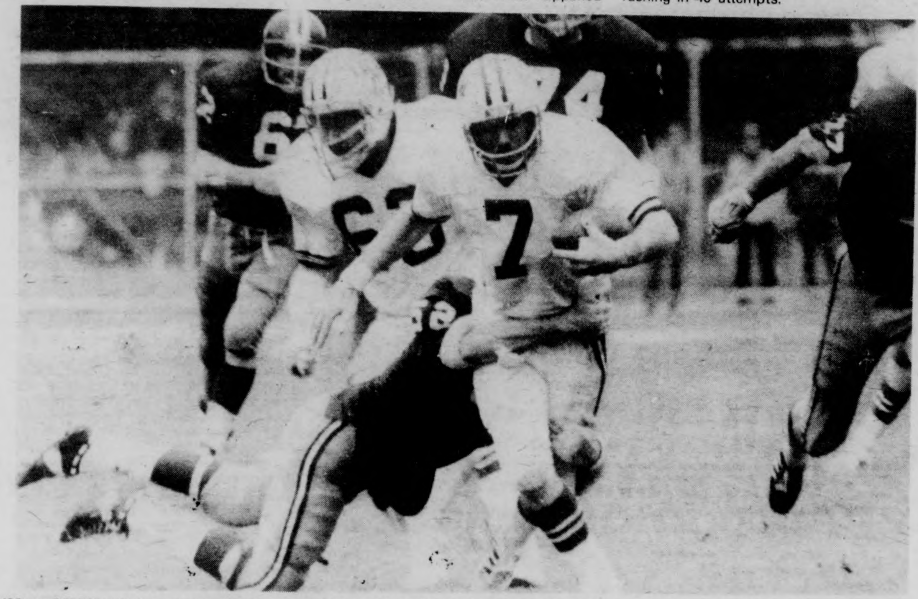
On first and 10 from the UMass nine, Harvard quarterback Larry Brown handed off to Kinchen who was supposed to go around right end. Kinchen had just enough time to duck as linebacker Joe McLaughlin wrapped him up for a five-yard loss, back at the 14.

On second and 15, Brown completed a seven-yard pass to fullback Scott Coolidge. On third and seven from the UMass seven, Brown faded back to pass, got sacked and coughed-up the pigskin. His fumble was recovered by UMass' John D'Amato at the Massachusetts 23-yard line. It had taken the Crimson just three plays to lose 14 yards, the football and any chance at a comeback.

"Playing in Harvard seems to key us up," said MacPherson. "That's what happened with the defense after Harvard got the ball deep in our territory."

Dave Croasdale added a field goal in the final quarter to increase the UMass lead to 17-0, but by that time the game was out of hand, since the Harvard offense was having a tough enough time trying to get a first down, without even considering the possibility of two touchdowns.

In all, UMass held the Crimson to 132 yards total offense, including 39 yards rushing in 40 attempts.



UMass QB Mike Fallon returned after a knee injury suffered two weeks ago to lead the Minutemen to a 17-0 win over Harvard Saturday. Fallon was 2-3 passing and ran for two key first downs as he was named Chevrolet Offensive Player of the Game by ABC-TV. (Staff photo by Dave Rodgers)

Booters bump off Black Bears; second straight shutout victory

By DARLENE LORKIEWICZ
Collegian Staff

ORONO, Me. — A strong team effort brought the UMass soccer team its second shutout victory of the season Saturday, when the Minutemen combined forces to beat Maine, 7-0.

UMass came on quickly, scoring just 12 minutes into the game. "We felt it was very important to score a goal early in the game," said UMass coach Russ Kidd. He added that the Minutemen had expected a strong game from the Black Bears.

Freshman Tommy Koutsoukos opened the scoring with his first of three goals, assisted by fullback Ed Niemiec.

Fullback Larry Aronson passed to Mike Shannon, who booted in a breakaway second goal.

The third goal was netted on a fine pass from Joel Mascolo to Koutsoukos, who calmly beat the goalie.

Score nummer four was authored by Koutsoukos, benefit of a stolen ball.

The remaining three goals were scored in quick succession in the last 10 minutes of the game. Mark Vassington led the barrage by scoring with the assist going to freshman Bob Abt.

Bill Leary netted the final two goals, assisted by Ion Bagdaneris and Mascolo.

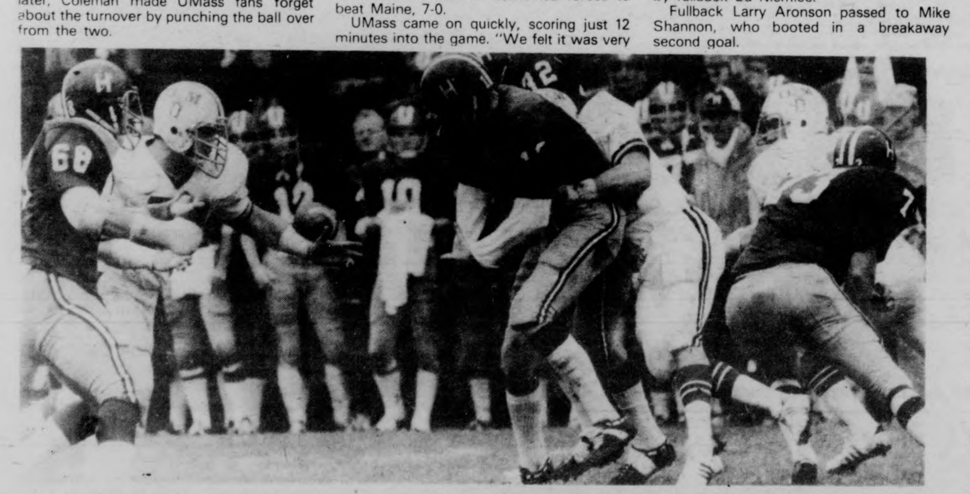
The Maine offense never seemed to get on the track in the one-sided rout as Aronson, Niemiec, Mark Vassalotti, Pat Veale and Mike St. Martin continued to control the defensive half of the field.

Preston Kise and Will Temby split the second half in goal, replacing starter Mark Hodgdon. "Both had to come up with good saves to preserve the shutout," Kidd said.

In talking about this year's team, Kidd pointed out that the Minutemen have tallied the 12 goals in two games as compared to 17 goals in the entire 1976 season. He attributed this year's early success to a "total team effort."

The next game for UMass will be at Keene St. Wednesday at 3:30.

BOOTER BANTER — Koutsoukos's three goals give him six in two games ... Vassington and Leary both scored their first varsity goals ... for the second time in as many games UMass used all of its players.



Defense told the story for the Minutemen on Saturday as they stifled the Harvard Crimson, 17-0 in Cambridge. Here, the UMass wolfpack descends on the lamb, Harvard QB Larry Brown, for one of at least seven sacks they recorded on the day. (Staff photo by Dave Rodgers)

Craemen Gethers—Example of the U.S. System of Justice, 'I Don't Have Time To Be Angry'

Craeman Gethers. E

Vukani Magubane
Nummo News Staff

Craeman Gethers was back in Amherst (Thurs.) for the first time in over 2½ years. He spent the day talking to students about his case. I would like to make people aware of the situation. "All I want is a chance to present all the evidence, and I haven't even been given that right yet. Only bits and pieces of the evidence has been presented in court so far.

Craeman Gethers has had two years taken from his life. According to Craeman all he wants to do is "put the facts up front. What happened to Craeman can be a lesson on how this system works.

This situation can happen to anyone. When asked about his feelings on still being in jail while his co-defendant Earl Brown was out on parole Craeman said, "I don't think it's fair, how can the same crime weigh more heavily on one than on the other. I don't feel that my back is to the wall even though I know it's completely unfair for me to be in prison." Despite the injustice that has led to two years being taken from his life Craeman Gethers does not seem bitter. "I have no time for anger. I have to concentrate on the situation at hand and deal with it accordingly. My case is not unusual. It's been going on since the beginning of time."

Craeman described his case as being "in a state of limbo," at the present time. He has not been able to do what he wants in his pursuit to clear his name — put the facts up front. Right now his defense fund is in urgent need for money. "I do have an urgent need for money. We are just about broke. Money will make the difference." $1,000 dollars has already been spent on his defense.

The Case of Fred Hampton

Bill Hampton E

By W. J. WHEELER
Nummo News Staff

Bill Hampton, surviving brother of late Chicago Black Panther Party leader Fred Hampton (who was killed by Chicago Police 4 a.m. on December 4, 1969) is presently touring the U.S. to organize support to reopen his brother's case. U.S. District Court Judge Joseph Sam Perry, who after previously acquitting the F.B.I. and other agencies of involvement in the case, ordered a hung jury to acquit the seven policemen who took part in the raid on Fred Hampton's apartment at 2237 West Monroe St. on Chicago's West Side.

Bill Hampton spoke briefly before showing the film "The Murder of Fred Hampton" in C.C. 163 at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. After the film presentation Mr. Hampton answered questions and elaborated on the case. He stated that his brother's bodyguard William O'Neil was on the payroll of the F.B.I. as an informant. He stated that this was not known at the time of the trial but was later discovered in documents during testimony in the trial. William O'Neil according to Bill Hampton received $30,000 to watch the activities of Fred and the Party and that thats why it was later proven that Fred was asleep during the raid. O'Neil had evidently put somethinng into Fred's food, and even O'Neil admitted that Fred Hampton didn't use drugs and that he was paid to drug Chairman Fred so that Fred would not be able to defend himself during the raid.

The trial which was in Federal Court for the past eighteen months is over, the judge threw it out. Bill Hampton is presently appealing the judges directed verdict. He feels that the judge did not have the right to give the jury a directed verdict when the jury was in a deadlock and that it should have been declared a mistrial and they should have been granted a new trial. Bill stated that he is in the process of appealing the judge's decision now and that he expects motions on the trial to start within the next six months or a year. The actual work won't begin until November or December.

He stated that although it came out in the trial that the F.B.I. had admitted to writing false letters to cause disruptions between different black organizations and had tried to cause conflicts between the Panthers and the Muslims, people might ask if all this evidence came out well, why didn't anything happen?

Why didn't the judge just convict the perpetrators of the charges leveled against them? The people must remember how corrupt it is and this was the type of judge that didn't want people to be bucking the federal system. In his opinion it was just to say OK, well we know the evidence, we know the F.B.I. did this but we are not going to do anything because the F.B.I. is suppose to do those type of things, and that in this Great America if the Panthers and other groups are subversive, the F.B.I. is suppose to spy on them.

So this was the attitude that was built around the judges attitude and the trial. There are twenty eight defendents named in Bill Hampton's suit two of them are F.B.I. agents. Bill Hampton stated his main objectives are to prove, Number one that the Civil Rights were violated. Number two, that they used too much force upon entering Fred's apartment Number three, obstruction of justice.

Joan Little Up For Parole Again, Decision Due Nov. 15

RALEIGH, N.C. [UPI] — Joan Little, acquitted two years ago of a murder charge in a widely publicized trial, became eligible for parole on a breaking and entering conviction Friday and state paroles officials began work on her case.

Luther Mitchell, the case analyst for the paroles commission handling her case, said she had been told to anticipate a decision by about Nov. 15. The decision will be made by the commission.

It was her second attempt at parole. A bid for freedom was rejected late last year, reportedly for a violation of rules at women's correctional center in Raleigh where she is serving her term.

Miss Little, 23, has been working for a Raleigh dentist under a work-release program since the spring.

She was acquitted in August, 1975, of a murder charge in the death of Beaufort County jailer Clarence Alligood.

She testified she was fending off a sexual attack at the jail where she was awaiting an appeal of a 1974 breaking and entering conviction.

She has served 26 months of her 7-to 10-year sentence for a breaking and entering in Beaufort County.

Most of the time has been spent at the women's facility in Raleigh.

Mitchell said the parole investigation would "mainly be concerned with her proposed kind of employment plan and residence."

She told parole officials, he said, that she plans to continue working for dentist David P. Lane, who gave her a job when it appeared no one wanted to hire her.

She also told officials she plans to live in the Raleigh area if she is freed and will buy a house.

Black Student Direction Orientation

The Brothers above are demonstrating the true meaning of unity and strength

Our orientation must be built on the realities of our situation. Our history has made our present day realities. So our orientation must be built on our history of struggle. If we are to build a scientific Massachusetts Black Student Association we have to build ourselves on a set of principles.

The photo above clearly reveals the beauty and oneness of the mother infant relationship

These principles should heighten and represent the best of the last sixteen years of struggle.

The first principle is Action or Practice is Higher and More Important than Theory. Theory if it is to be living must be based on practice and must serve practice. Whatever theories we have will only become reality through actual practice or action. What we need is a basic framework to base our actions on and our theory will develop as we move into action.

This was the basic difference between students in the 60's and 50's. Students in the 60's didn't sit around theorizing about the problem they did something about it.

When four black students sat-in at a lunch counter on Feb. 1, 1960 it was a break from what students normally did in America. The sit-in movement was the first mass Black student movement since the 1920's.

Each student movement in our history comes at times of mass movements of our people. Each movement has been spontaneous. But what makes our movement different?

The significant difference between our movement and the movements in the past is our movement comes at a time when the mass movement is in a lull or low tide, where few people are involved. The purpose of our movement is to rebuild our people's mass movement. We should also take into consideration that our movement is organized and revolutionary nationalist. So our movement is a new movement in that sense.

In developing a planned or scientific movement we have to deal with the problems of organization and cadres. A movement without organization is like a man without a head. So we must concentrate on building a revolutionary Black Student Association that can lead the millions of Black students in this country.

We should all see ourselves as cadre, the permanent body of workers, for the Black Revolution.

"To carry out revolution we must have revolutionary ideology and also a revolutionary organization. Organization ensures the realization of ideology. Organization ensures that words are matched by deeds. If we speak of ideology without speaking of organization, that is mere empty theorizing... Practising means organizing. If we want to practice anything, we must have an organization and must make ideology one with organization. It is actually out of the needs of action of the needs of revolutionary practice that we must have a revolutionary ideology. No revolutionary movement can take place without being prepared and promoted by ideological campaigns... Without revolutionary theory and revolutionary ideology, there can be no revolutionary actions. However, theory and ideology alone are obsolutely insufficient". (1)

In order to do this... "Cadres must mingle with masses in this movement, march in the bank to set an example for the masses, pprsuade and organize them, understand their feelings and aspirations, and concern themselves with their everyday moral and material life.

They must show modesty and simplicity, listen to the opinions of the masses, gather the masses experiences and knowledge to compliment their own experiences and knowledge" (2)

To develop this kind of mentality students must transform themselves through struggle. What does this mean?

It means that students must lose the petiti bourgois myth of having it made or making it big. They must identify with the majority of Black people who are black workers. It is Black workers who make up the core of the Black Revolution. The Black working class is the class that we, students must unite with.

Being that students are geared into the middle class, Black students must give up the middle class illusion. Cause, that's all it is, is an illusion for Black people.

Black students must commit class suicide. Give up the class aspirations of the so-called middle class, unite and struggle with the Black working class for national liberation.

While our conference is action orientated, we must watch ourselves in becoming romantic, adventurist and overzealous. We should not become anti-theory or anti-intellectual cause this will lead to senseless actions.

We don't want to become bookworms and have our revolution in an ivory tower. The point is to know how to read books in order not to become a bookworm but to acquire knowledge, to enrich our minds with science in all practical matters.

We must learn not only through books and newspapers, but also in practical life, in our own work, in the summing up of the experiences of our work, through frequent self criticism and criticism...

We must combine learning through books with learning from the practice of life, work, the experiences of the collective, the experiences of the collective, the experiences of one's organization... The lessons of success and also the lessons of failure. Theory constantly linked with practice and practice enlightened by theory, our minds active at all times and our thinking always linked with action, this is our method of learning. (3)

This is the best way we can build a state-wide Black Student Association is having a unity between action and practice.

This weekend we want to address ourselves to issues that affect Black students equally across the state and also local issues and how linked together can enrichen the movement.

The issue of student cutbacks affect all statewide programs. It is not the student's fault that a majority of spending of funds goes to the military-industrial complex. The only way for the Black student community to fight cutbacks is through mass demonstrations.

Criticism Spurs Honor For King

I AM A MAN
I AM A MAN

The picture above clearly demonstrates the purpose of the late Dr Martin Luther King.

CONCORD, N.H. — Black leaders in New Hampshire, bitter over Gov. Meldrim Thomson's criticism of the late Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., plan to honor the slain civil rights leader.

The leaders planned to meet this week to coordinate their efforts with an Oct. 14 testimonial in New York City for Dr. King's father, the Rev. Martin Luther King Sr.

Gov. Thomson refused an invitation to the dinner sent to him by UN Ambassador Andrew Young. Thomson said he strongly disapproved of Young's and King's civil rights activitties and accused both of being associated with communist causes.

Earlier this week, the "Ethics Committee of the New Hope Baptist Church in Portsmouth, N.H. sent Gov. Thomson a letter of complaint about the governor's remarks and urged him to stop.

In addition to honoring Dr. King, the black leaders said they want to bring a "significant speaker" to New Hampshire to appear on college campuses and champion minority causes.

Gov. Thomson, who is chairman of the National Conservative Caucus, has launched a petition drive to oust Young. In the letter seeking funds for Young's removal, Gov. Thomson claimed the UN ambassador had "deep involvement with both domestic and foreign communist-inspired terrorists and organizations.

Vishnu Wood and the Safari East

Vishnu Wood.

By ZOE BEST

Vishnu Wood and the Safari East concert held at Buckley Recital Hall at Amherst College on Friday, September 23rd, featured a percussionist who has worked with the Temptations, Stevie Wonder, Duke Ellington and McCoy Tyner; a reed man who has performed with Charles Mingus, Art Blakey, and Roy Haynes; and of course, Vishnu Wood who has performed with Alice Coltrane, Max Roach, Pharoah Sanders, Archie Shepp and the Randy Weston Sextet. Freddie Waits, named one of the outstanding percussionists of the year, has played in this area with M'Boom, Sly Hampton and with the Livingston at Rutgers group who played at Hampshire College several weeks ago. George Adams, who played reeds and flute, performed in this concert after coming from a two-week session playing with McCoy Tyner. Vishnu Wood, bassist, is on the music board for the National Endowments of the Arts and is currently (Assistant Professor of Music) at Hampshire College.

After intruducing the musicians, as prologue to the concert, Bill Hassan, (Student Activities Director at the University of Massachusetts) offered a plaintive commemoration to the remembrance of John William Coltrane on his birthday. Standing in profile to most of the audience, he whistled a medley of Coltrane tunes — "Nature Boy", "Straight Street", "Giant Steps", and "Impressions".

When the response had subsided, Vishnu Wood disclosed the format and purpose of the concert explaining how during the mid 60's group music had been projected by the commercial media — rock n roll, acid rock, hard rock, various other rocks, fusion, so-called "jazz" rock and most recently punk rock. This has had the overall effect of the creative Afro-American musician in that the soloist is no longer the focal point of music. He or she is lost in the group. This diffuses Black classical music and its impact. He quoted George Russell, "This music is an endangered species." Wood continued, "Taking this into consideration the concert will feature the musician as an individual creative artist and each instrument in solo will be a virtuoso expression of African-American origins. The concert program will show the life-force of the music and the different aspects of the history of the music outside of chronology. Each one of us represents in our playing the history in that we include the hollers, the cries, etc. We're not art musicians; we're cultural musicians. People can stand up and play the syntax, but they're not playing the music."

Opening the performance with "Impressions" by Coltrane, Vishnu Wood unleashed a rapid pulse. Percussionist, Freddie Waits and George Adams quickly followed. Emitting stacatto cries from his tenor sax, Adams, arching back, alternated between hoisting his instrument and dipping it, aiming its mouth into the elbowed microphone. He lifted then dropped notes, designing their breaking and scattering. He checked out the audience to see how they were taking this. In turn, those from the front row to the encircling balcony sensed the humid density of the music to come and were already caught up in its articulated spell.

In this first place, extending the tradition set forth in drumming by Art Blakey and Max Roach, Freddie Waits interspersed and overlapped fulgurant cymbal strikes with thunderclaps from voluminous bass rhythms. He chose to condense textures sliding like a master into rhythms of talking drums and antiphonal Africanisms.

The first prolonged applause from the paced hall quieted when Vishnu Wood began bowing the first lines from "Khadesha". Dramatically playing double stops pizzicato with his left hand shooting out horizontally, Wood suspended notes counterpoising gravity, setting in motion concentricities, only to translocate the audience to North Africa to experience Moorish motifs majestic in their mystery. He demanded everything from the strings, striking them below the bridge on his instrument, pulling from the wooden reverberations a drone as heavy as a skyful of locusts descending, falling upon ears like fever. Vishnu Wood catapulted his bass to full orchestration, grafting resonances as vast as North African horizons and as exact as the theme "Khadesha" that he composed. In response to the tumultuous applause, Wood raised both fists. Again applause, again the uplifted fists and smiles. More applause and another salute.

Paying homage to the great hand drummer, "Mr. Big Black", Vishnu Wood introduced the next work of the performance, "Afro Black". Freddie Waits began at a walking pace to pass between a rapid fire fusilade and welling bass rhythms. After startling the attentiveness of the audience with tight-skin reflections from drum heads, crisp and sure, he stood. Slow motion arms set the cymbals to purring. From brassy undertones, he blew from a small wooden or bamboo flute a cylandrical melody elongated as the beginning silver filagree of a river taking course through a steep-banked valley and its echoes. The flute ornamented the first phrases from the balafon. In delicately timed sequence he sent forth harmonic rhythms until the volume fell away as if a journey's distance engulfed it. Waits transferred the balafon sticks to the drums and cymbals. Creating metal vibrato and bell clear accents, he broke bounds with three hard beats. The drumming veered. It pronounced dance impulses. A column of booming calls burst into various tempos. Exhibiting further the origins of his art, he extended the solo with hand drumming. Power and velocity threatened the very stands that supported the drum set. Supersonic barrages tapered into quieter patting that dissipated into the only silences of the evening. At the right moment, while sounds were still being sought from the hall's atmosphere, everyone jumped up in ovation.

Opening the first sketches of "Alfie", George Adams pressed together clusters of atonal seductive notes. Poised away from the microphone he suggested melody by way of humming nuance. More style came to the fore when he sped-spoke, scatted and fused subtle vocals with those of his flute, dancing in duet. "Dancing" is no metaphor! George Adams was doing it! His soprano message wheeled as he twisted and heaved propelling his song momentarily from a one-leg stance.

Accelerating the tempo and charging the energy he exchanged flute for tenor sax and began what we hoped would never end — his imaginative enjambments projecting that idiom of speaking where a word's final consonant takes a minute to reach. Applause spontaneously followed each embellishment to "Alfie". Contrasting the baritone ranges of his instrument he divested each note of its parts and took them out, out, out! Tenderly he would elevated the elegant theme, then suddenly plunge and honk to only radiate so much feeling. A voice from the balcony yelled, "Much love!" Full house appreciation answered his closing prayer-like meditations.

During the solo sequences from a Berber composition of North Africa, "Marakesh", Vishnu Wood carved out haunting tones depending on the unplumbed bass throbs, sounds so lush that they amounted to lowering a galaxy of interplay from the other two instruments. Volitant trap syncopations and middle zone bars from the tenor sax arose overtop Wood's playing. The tenor sax skidded. Drum volleys commanded. Vishnu unveiled continual improvisational change-ups outpouring exuberant, sable arpeggios. Excerpts from "Love Supreme" spotlit the bluesy crying from a solitary saxophone. Vishnu Wood elicited gongs while Freddie Waits built up undertones on the kettle drums.

As soon as it was recognized, applause greeted the prelude to the last composition of the program, written by John Coltrane dedicated to Paul Chambers and titled "P.C." In solo, Freddie Waits forged top statements over rolls from chanting drums. Standing to the rear of the stage with Adams, Vishnu Wood discharged a series of vocal trills. The triumvirate of musicians culminated their performance returning to the "P.C." melody. During the subsequent wild ovation, someone yelled, "Play all night!" The audience would not seat itself.

After Wood referred to Ellington, the trio began their final arrangement of "Since I Fell For You" by Buddy and Ella Johnson. The saxophone intoned a night-street song but soon the whole block was there for a party-time swinging blues. George Adams again bending from side to side, folding down and up, dispelling serpentine lines plush in soft bluesy breathiness. Rolling his shoulders he let flare from his horn the burnished fugue riding the strong beats from Wood's bass and Waits' percussion. By this time hands, feet, heads and some who made it to the aisles were dancing.

In an interview before the concert, Frederick Waits spoke if his present work and why he and other musicians are at Livingston College at Rutgers. "We know what's going to happen. We're all Americans — we're Black Americans and what have you...I think Americans now, alot of us are beginning to realize it's a heavy situation man; it's a politcal situation. We're realizing that our music is not enough. Alot of us are beginning to deal and at the same time, we still got to keep playing."

After discussing extensively of how Black classical music is withheld from people who want to learn of it or from those from which it springs, he concluded, "We don't have ample visibility." He explained how he and other musicians have chosen to make music "visible". "The player, he or she, has to become part of academia; we're musicians, creative people working today. We're not the guy who recorded 20 years ago and is now trying to teach. We are the people who're out here now. Someone has to hold down the fort like Ridley, Vishnu Wood and Max Roach. We played at Hampshire College, not for money, but for visibility." The Hampshire concert laid out the major style contributions flowing from Africa, the slave trade, the social conditions and history of this country. Featured were Kenny Barron on piano, Freddie Waits on percussion, guitarist, Ted Dunbar, bassists, Larry Ridley and Vishnu Wood and Frank Foster on reeds.

Teaching can take place during a concert. Waits analyzed his more recent lecture-demonstration held in Hartford. "The music hall was jammed. We rapped and played. The music wasn't lightened up at all. We had rapport almost one to one. We're not dealing with the European situation; we're dealing with a man-to-woman situation." Referring to the purpose of the Hampshire College concert highlighting periods in Black music, he commented on the importance of organizing these opportunities on behalf of the music makers. "People like Vishnu are important because we have to get up and rap with people. Alot of people can't hear anymore...they're being programmed by musak....They don't know what they're hearing so we have to speak. The spoken word they understand, so suddenly they realize what we've been playing all this time."

His department at Livingston College is both dedicated to Black classical music and to the musicians who are creating it. His department is not confined by status-quo tokenism because the college itself supports the department and the department head, Larry Ridley, has tenure. He noted that in one year's time, the department enrollment has doubled. He believed that if students and communities elsewhere want something more than tokenism, they will take stands on behalf of the artists in their area and together they will find ways of structuring things so that dedicated musicians can perform, work, share, exchange and teach in a respectful, vibrant setting. Livingston musicians in traveling found that students and musicians coming up are tired of having to learn from those who do not understand or care about Black classical music. They concluded that the teaching of this music has to come from the people who are creating it. He said, "The African continuum is like Max Roach — you have to go to the source."

Waits gave another example of how the creators of Black classical music can look for opportunities to disseminate further the impact and understanding of their great art form. He told how his colleagues at Livingston as a unified and cohesive group has invigorated a miseducational and misnamed organization, The National Association of Jazz Educators, that only a year ago had one token Black member on its board. At last year's convention the Livingston group was elected to the national board and they are now organizing this coming year's convention to be held in Dallas Texas. He said, "We're going to bring people like Vishnu Wood, Archie Shepp and Max Roach. We have support from our university to do this." Frederick Waits was specifically appointed to edit the association's magazine, DRUM, which is available to music students across the country.

Another way of raising the visibility of this music in a community was mentioned by Waits, that of radio programs. He suggested that when musicians do perform and teach in an area, that they should be interviewed by people who conduct these programs so that the music can be understood from those who are formulating it.

A lecture-demonstration that Waits was to conduct was canceled because proper space and conditions were not available. Commenting on this he said, "The fact that we couldn't get the space for the lecture demonstration we can understand because we recognize that the music is not respected... Once we truly realize that this music is not respected — although in a montary way they try to make money off of us — we must ask how do we get ahead of this situation."

Like Waits, Vishnu Wood freely insists that, "Grassroots musicians have to get involved in areas other than performing. Within academia," he says, "there are people with no professional track record teaching African-American music. We are important to institutions of higher learning."

Vishnu Wood is serving his second year of a term with the National Endowments to the Arts. He and others loyal to Black classical music have fought for the respect and resources necessary to perpetuate that music at a respectable level. He noted how he has found, "...disregarding the music born here, 90 per cent of the money goes to sports or to the genre of music that perpetuates European classical music." He believes a national touring program needs to be developed. "There's no forum for the creators, the innovators and perpetuators of this cultural idiom. We need to come together to exchange ideas, to share information,etc."

In addition Wood sees as necessary efforts like those initiated in part by Bill Hassan who worked on the first Black Musicians Conference held in this area in 1970. Wood wants to see the Amherst area open up as a place where Black classical music can be presented in all its forms. He hopes to contribute further in making it available to young musicians and students by way of lecture-demonstrations, workshops, classes, without having the participating musician-teacher or his or her music be exploited.

Nationally he looks forward to seeing the establishment of tours which would send to cities and towns, to schools and centers, to lecture halls and concert halls grassroots music as it is being developed in urban based communities.

On behalf of creative Black musicians, Wood advocates international exchanges and looks forward to the establishment to a greater extent of links with Third World countries.

Vishnu Wood who hosted the performance at Buckley Recital Hall carried forth the principles that Waits and he have laid out. Besides the dedication to Coltrane, titles of compositions were listed before the performance began and then repeated throughout the concert. This was not only teaching, but a show of respect for those in attendance who came to hear who were uplifted and who also appreciate receiving understandings.

Those who attended this performance of Vishnu Wood and the Safari East shared in a jjubilant expression of Black classical music — and the frosting on the cake — they got in on a birthday party!

NEW SHIPS FOR NIGERIA

LAGOS — Nigeria's National Shipping Line has signed contracts for the building of a total of 19 ships with South Korea and Yugoslavia.

The nine conventional cargo ships and 10 container ships that make up the order should begin arriving in Nigeria around October next year. When the last ship is delivered, probably in 1980, Nigeria's National Shipping Line fleet will have increased to 28 vessels.

SATELLITE STUDY FOR AFRICAN GEOLOGY

LONDON — A study group of geologists from 11 Commonwealth African countries met in Lobatse, Botswana, in early September to assess the use of Landsat Imagery — pictures of the earth taken from space satellites.

The meeting was convened by the Commonwealth Geological Liaison Office because of the increasing use of Landsat Imagery in studying the earth's environment and resources.

A team of experts from the London Institute of Geological Science took part in the study group, which spent most of its time examining Landset pictures of areas of particular interest in Africa.

The study group follows a seminar of top Commonwealth geologists in Accra, Ghana, in April last year, and Botswana, Ghana, Kenya, lesotho, Malawi, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, Swaziland, Tanzania, Uganda and Zambia took part.

INTEGRATED FISHING FOR ECOWAS?

ACCRA — The Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) could set up an integrated fishing industry with its own processing plants along the coast of West Africa.

The proposal has been put forward by the ECOWAS fund for co-operation, compensation and development, and would involve establishing an ECOWAS fishing enterprise which would have the right to use the territorial waters of the Community.

Dr. Romeo Horton, the Liberian director of the fund, has expressed concern over the way "our water are being used by non-African interests to exploit one of our most valued and indispensible natural resources."

The ECOWAS fund has also studied the possibility of establishing an integrated ECOWAS iron and steel industry, airline co-ordination and the creation of better road communications between member states.

ANGOLA-ITALY CO-OPERATION

ROME — Angola and Italy are to set up joint commission for economic co-operation, and have already signed a number of agreements on technical co-operation.

The agreements are understood to cover energy, transport, communications, industry, fishing, education, and health. Italy is also to grant some development aid to Angola.

Firebomb Editors Home

By NICHOLAS HANKS

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa [UPI] — A gasoline bomb was thrown at the home of the editor of South Africa's largest black daily newspaper early last Monday, but caused only minor damage and no injuries.

The firebomb attack followed emotional weekend memorial services for Steve Biko, 30, a black leader who was found dead in his jail cell two weeks ago — the 20th person to die in police custody in the past 18 months.

Percy Qoboza, editor of the World, called the attack on his home "ghastly, particularly for my children who saw firsthand violence in its naked brutality."

Qoboza said in a burglary screen on the windows of his house prevented the bomb from landing inside.

"This attack on me and my family follows very closely on a venemous hate campaign which was instituted by the minister of justice, Mr. Jimmy Kruger, with the solemn benediction of the prime minister Mr. (John) Vorster, who also added his powerful voice to this hate campaign," he said.

What Welfare Reform Offers Poor People

By Craig A. Palmer

WASHINGTON [UPI] — An unemployed person with a spouse, two children and no family income could get a public service job and supplemental income totaling $6,956 under President Carter's welfare reform proposal.

That income might be increased even further through a tax credit under certain conditions.

Carter's Cabinet officers for labor and welfare outlined this example in a letter to Speaker Thomas O'Neill last Monday, proposing the first major revision of the welfare system since the great depression of the 1930s.

House hearings on the 162-page legislative proposal began this week.

The $30.7 billion package of jobs and supplemental income for the poor would "replace the existing federal welfare programs with single, coordinated program to seek to assure jobs, training and income supplementation for low income citizens in need who are not available for work by reason of disability, age or family circumstances," the letter said.

It was signed by Health, Education and Welfare Secretary Joseph A. Califano Jr. and Labor Secretary Ray Marshall.

They said the proposed better jobs and income act would:

—Create up to 1.4 million public service jobs for the chief wage earner in families with children. Children, supplement security income and food stamps.

—Allow families headed by two parents to receive income supplements if the husbands' earnings are insufficient to support the family.

New jobs would be created to improve public safety, provide child care, operate recreation programs, work with sick and elderly persons or weatherize homes.

These, however, would be temporary jobs for person who can't find anything else, lasting no longer than a year "to insure that public service jobs do not become institutionalized."

The programs will be available to one or two-parent families with children.

To make private jobs more attractive, even at the minimum wage, the bill provides a tax credit for workers in jobs either with private employers or in other public jobs not created by the welfare bill.

Using the earlier family example, family income could be increased by a $476 tax credit to $7,432 this way, the Administration said.

Women heading families in which the youngest child is under seven years of age are not expected to work, although jobs would be made available if wanted.

The basic cash benefit for such families would be $4,200 in a family of four.

For persons not able to work — the aged, blind or disabled without other income — cash benefits of $2,500 for an individual and $3,750 for a couple would be provided.

States would be encouraged to supplement the federal benefits.

For a family of four getting AFDC payments and food stamps, benefits now range from $6,132 in New York City to $2,556 in Mississippi, said a summary of the bill.

Carter Taps Tyrone Brown For Hooks' Seat on FCC

By ROBERT BENJAMIN

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Carter will nominate attorney Tyrone Brown to fill the 21 months left on the Federal Communications Commission term vacated by Benjamin Hooks, according to a White House spokesman.

Brown originally refused to accept nomination to fill the term left by Hooks, the first Black person appointed to the seven-member commission which regulates U.S. broadcasting and communications.

When Hooks left the FCC this summer to become executive director of the NAACP, he said another black should succeed him.

Blacks are urging the FCC to help increase minority ownership and participation in broadcasting.

Brown, 34, an attorney who was former general counsel for the Post-News-week stations, was regarded as Hooks' successor. FCC observers referred to the commission's "black seat."

But when Carter said earlier in the week he was nominating Charles Ferris, counsel to House Speaker Thomas "Tip" O'Neill D-Mass. to succeed Richard Wiley as FCC chairman — with a full seven-year term — Brown indicated 21 months was not satisfactory. He withdrew his name as a commission candidate.

At that time, Brown did not rule out a full seven-year term, but the White House aide Hamilton Jordan would comment on whether Brown was promised a seven-year term after the 21 months expired.

Jordan's spokesman said Jordan and Brown met and "discussed it further," and "he (Brown) notified us he had evaluated it and if the job was open, he would like to be considered."

Like Ferris — who is popular in Congress and is expected to get a quick confirmation in October — Brown must be confirmed by the Senate. his chairmanship would be the first time the FCC is controlled by Democrats since 1964, and is expected to lead to a more liberal commission.

The term of the current chairman, Wiley, a commissioner serving a seven-year term when President Richard Nixon appointed him chairman in 1974, expired in June. But Wiley stayed on until Carter could find a new chairman.

An FCC spokesman said commissioners make about $50,000 a year, and the chairman makes $2,500 more.

Black Job Prospects Called 'Quite Cloudy'

WASHINGTON — For the nation's black unemployed, more bad news could be around the corner.

That message is clear from an address made by Dr. Andrew F. Brimmer, president of Brimmer and Co., before the National Alliance of Businessmen.

Dr. Brimmer, former governor of the Federal Reserve Board, spoke to the group last week at a time when the latest jobless figures put the black rate at 14.5 per cent overall and at 40.4 per cent for black teens.

Brimmer told the businessmen a vigorous and expanding economy would be necessary to cultivate jobs for the hard-to-em-.

"A sustained, high level of real economic growth is a necessary underpinning for any program to create jobs for the disadvantaged," he said.

---

But the prospects for such economic growth in the years immediately ahead "is uncertain," Brimmer warned.

Worse, looking at the likelihood that the growth rate in real GNP might run roughly at 4½ per cent through 1981, Brimmer said the unemployment rate than could be approximately five and three-fourths per cent and the inflation rate 5½-6 per cent.

"The prospects for jobs would be quite cloudy" under those circumstances, he declared.

Brimmer expressed doubt the economy would perform at a level which would meet expectations of the Carter Administration — which hopes to cut unemployment to four and three-fourths per cent by 1980.

He told the businessmen blacks not only have failed to share proportionately with whites in gains from the current economic expansion but that they suffered higher employment while the rate was going down for whites.

"Reversing this trend," he suggested, "will tax the imagination and skill of both the public and private sectors."

---

Among national economic policies which make it harder to reduce unemployment among the disadvantaged are sizable increases in the minimum wage and seniority provisions affecting layoffs and promotions.

Dr. Brimmer says the "distressing" black-white employment picture over the 2½ years must be kept in mind when the quest is pursued to expand job opportunities for the disadvantaged.

In the two and a half years the nation has been pulling out of the 1973-75 recession, unemployment has gone up for blacks and down for whites.

Brimmer warned, as he has in the past, that congressional approval of a new minimum wage, from $2.30 to $2.60 hourly, blacks will suffer most when this costs jobs, and especially black teens.

---

He said blacks, women and other minorities were hardest hit by layoffs during the 1973-75 recession due to seniority systems.

Brimmer said he shares the view that in the short-run "there is no obvious way to resolve" the ongoing conflict between seniority rights and the push for more affirmative action.

Carter Boosts Minority Firms

WASHINGTON — Minority businesses won 6,265 sales contracts valued at $355.2 million during the first nine months of fiscal year 1977 (Oct. 1, 1976-June 30, 1977) with the help of the U.S. Commerce Department's Office of Minority Business Enterprise (OMBE).

Construction-related procurements adding up to $184 million accounted for the largest portion of total contract dollars. Contracts to provide services added another $76.4 million to the nine-month total.

The average contract won by OMBE — client firms was valued at $56,703.

The sales totals are based on reports from 225 OMBE — funded local business development organizations around the country.

Federal, state and local governments were the biggest customers although increasingly, minority firms are winning sales in the private sector.

A breakdown of the contract awards shows that the federal government accounted for 30 per cent, state government, nine per cent, local government, 18 per cent and the private sector, 43 per cent.

Black South African Leader Steven Biko Dies In Detention

LIBERATION News Service

> "Blacks are tired of standing at the touchlines to witness a game that they should be playing. They want to do things for themselves and all by themselves."
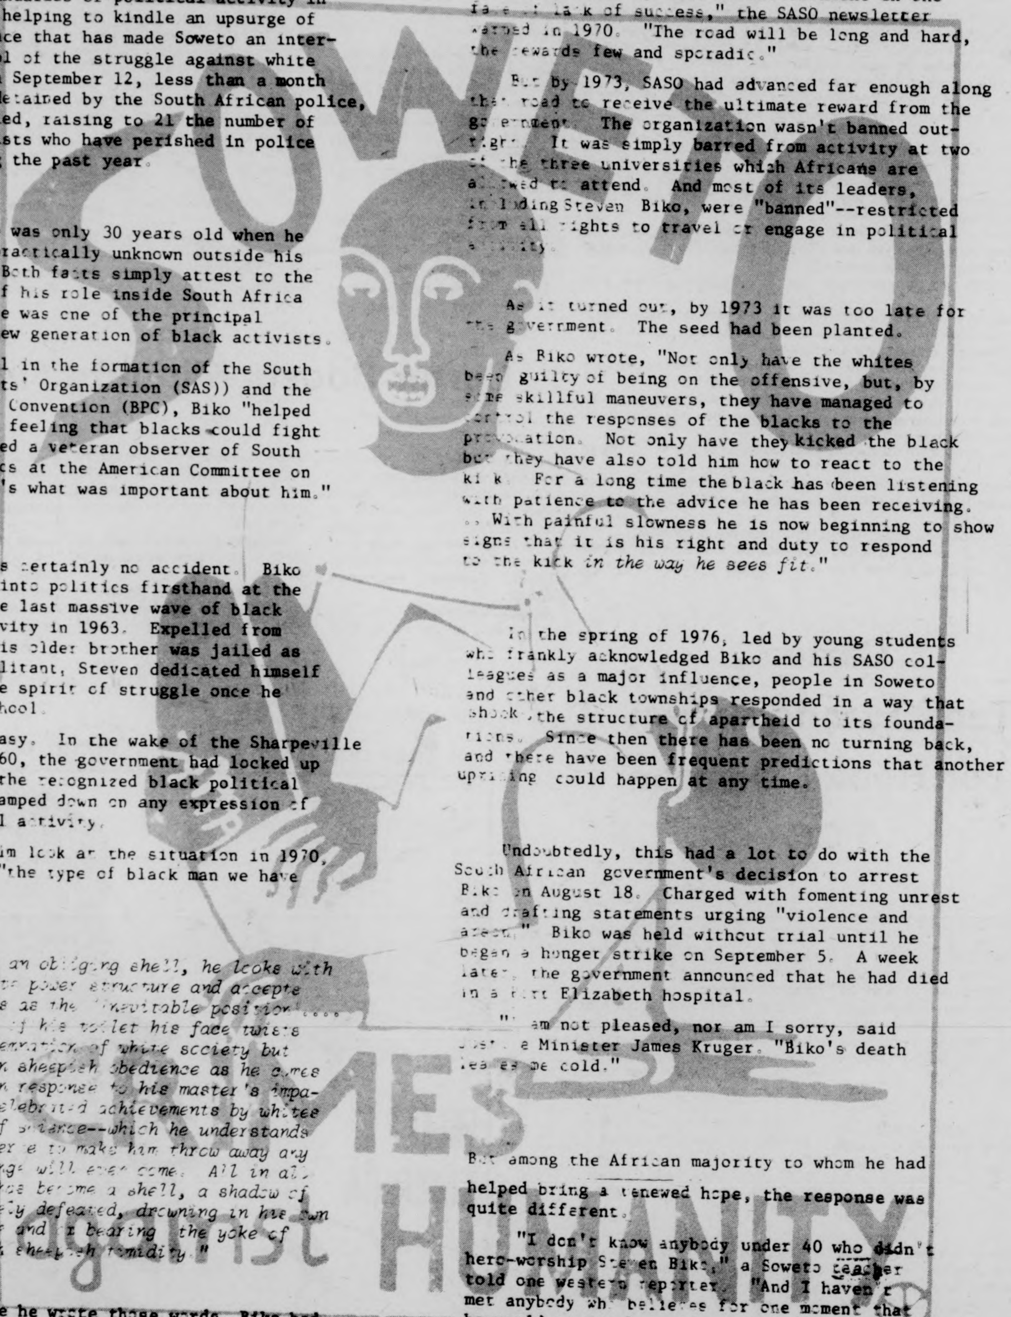
> --Steven Biko, 1970



NEW YORK (LNS)--Steven Biko refused to stand on the sidelines. And in recent years he may have done more than any other individual to extend the boundaries of political activity in South Africa, helping to kindle an upsurge of black resistance that has made Soweto an international symbol of the struggle against white supremacy. On September 12, less than a month after he was detained by the South African police, Steven Biko died, raising to 21 the number of African activists who have perished in police custody during the past year.

Steven Biko was only 30 years old when he died and was practically unknown outside his own country. Both facts simply attest to the significance of his role inside South Africa itself. For he was one of the principal figures in a new generation of black activists.

Instrumental in the formation of the South African Students' Organization (SAS)) and the Black Peoples' Convention (BPC), Biko "helped re-ignite the feeling that blacks could fight back," commented a veteran observer of South African politics at the American Committee on Africa. "That's what was important about him."

And that was certainly no accident. Biko was initiated into politics firsthand at the tail end of the last massive wave of black political activity in 1963. Expelled from school after his older brother was jailed as a suspected militant, Steven dedicated himself to reviving the spirit of struggle once he returned to school.

It wasn't easy. In the wake of the Sharpeville Massacre in 1960, the government had locked up virtually all the recognized black political leaders and clamped down on any expression of black political activity.

Taking a grim look at the situation in 1970, Biko wrote of "the type of black man we have today":

"Reduced to an obliging shell, he looks with awe at the white power structure and accepts what he regards as the 'inevitable position'.... In the privacy of his toilet his face twists in silent condemnation of white society but brightens up in sheepish obedience as he comes out hurrying in response to his master's impatient call....Celebrated achievements by whites in the field of science--which he understands only hazily--serve to make him throw away any hopes that change will ever come. All in all the black man has become a shell, a shadow of a man, completely defeated, drowning in his own misery, a slave and ox bearing the yoke of oppression with sheepish timidity."

By the time he wrote those words, Biko had already done a great deal to throw off the yoke. Together with other militant black students, he had tired of expressing his political activity through the white-dominated National Union of South African Students (NUSAS). Although NUSAS advocated breaking down the system of white supremacy, Biko pressed the idea that blacks needed to pursue their own political priorities through their own organizations. And in 1968 he initiated the founding of just such an organization--the South African Students' Organization.

Over the next five years, SASO became the wellspring of a new generation of black activists and ideology. Biko and others drew on the experiences of other African states and of black Americans to develop what came to be known as the "black consciousness movement." And gradually they began to translate consciousness into action.

"It is very important to rid ourselves of impatience which yields disillusionment in the face of lack of success," the SASO newsletter warned in 1970. "The road will be long and hard, the rewards few and sporadic."

But by 1973, SASO had advanced far enough along that road to receive the ultimate reward from the government. The organization wasn't banned outright. It was simply barred from activity at two of the three universities which Africans are allowed to attend. And most of its leaders, including Steven Biko, were "banned"--restricted from all rights to travel or engage in political activity.

As it turned out, by 1973 it was too late for the government. The seed had been planted.

As Biko wrote, "Not only have the whites been guilty of being on the offensive, but, by some skillful maneuvers, they have managed to control the responses of the blacks to the provocation. Not only have they kicked the black but they have also told him how to react to the kick. For a long time the black has been listening with patience to the advice he has been receiving.... With painful slowness he is now beginning to show signs that it is his right and duty to respond to the kick in the way he sees fit."

In the spring of 1976, led by young students who frankly acknowledged Biko and his SASO colleagues as a major influence, people in Soweto and other black townships responded in a way that shook the structure of apartheid to its foundations. Since then there has been no turning back, and there have been frequent predictions that another uprising could happen at any time.

Undoubtedly, this had a lot to do with the South African government's decision to arrest Biko on August 18. Charged with fomenting unrest and drafting statements urging "violence and arson," Biko was held without trial until he began a hunger strike on September 5. A week later, the government announced that he had died in a Port Elizabeth hospital.

"I am not pleased, nor am I sorry, said Justice Minister James Kruger. "Biko's death leaves me cold."

But among the African majority to whom he had helped bring a renewed hope, the response was quite different.

"I don't know anybody under 40 who didn't hero-worship Steven Biko," a Soweto teacher told one western reporter. "And I haven't met anybody who believes for one moment that he would starve himself to death."

Whatever the cause of his death, Biko left a mark that no government edict can erase.

As he wrote in 1970, quoting Guinean President Sekou Toure, "To take part in the African revolution, it is not enough to write a revolutionary song. You must fashion the revolution with the people. And if you fashion it with the people the songs will come by themselves."

Cross burning raises controversy

By BETH SEGERS
Collegian Staff

A cross burning outside a Third World party Saturday night is the center of controversy among Third World students, the administration and the rest of the campus body at Hampshire.

"Obviously it was the prank of students who were intoxicated or some such thing," said Peter Gluckler, public relations director at Hampshire College.

"The burning itself was not a staged act of racial statement but it implies that issues of racism are always there" he said.

Valerie Stevens, a member of the Prescott House Staff who was at the Third World party, disagreed with Gluckler, saying that it was "pure speculation" on his part.

"If you take the burning of a cross at face value, it is a blatant act of racism. If people drink they should still be held accountable for their actions," Stevens said.

"The facts speak for themselves, and I don't think the president (Adelle Smith Simmons) considers it a prank either," Stevens added.

Simmons last night said "I believe it was racist, whether it was done as a prank or not."

In a public statement issued to the Hampshire College community yesterday afternoon, said she deplored the cross burning and voiced her disappointment in the act. The statement also called upon the Hampshire College community to insure that such an act would not happen again.

Gluckler said the cross burning occurred at 11:45 p.m., Saturdays when a student or group of students constructed a cross out of two two-by-fours and drove a single nail through it.

According to Gluckler, the cross was then ignited outside the Merrill B Lounge, a residential hall where Third World students had gathered for the party.

Gluckler said when the Third World students saw the fire, they called the fire department. By the time the fire department arrived on the scene, the flames were already out, he said.

CAS to reconsider language requirement

By MEGAN O'REILLY
Collegian Staff

Tonight there will be an important general meeting of the faculty in the College of Arts and Sciences concerning its language requirement and the results may have a profound effect on at least 4,500 of the undergraduates within its jurisdiction.

The present language requirement, which is either vague or completely unknown to most students and faculty, requires all new CAS students beginning in 1978 to take a language proficiency examination to demonstrate expertise or the lack there of, or a test at the 140 level of a particular foreign language.

Physics professor Morton Sternhein petitioned the college for a general faculty meeting because the new requirement, which will affect over 6000 students a year, was passed at a faculty meeting last spring attended by only 60 faculty out of 700.

"Any change in something as important as the language requirement should be discussed by a majority of the faculty," Sternhein said yesterday. "And many were not present at the meeting because the motion wasn't even listed on the meeting agenda."

Sternhein said he hopes tonight's meeting will result in a recall of the proficiency exam requirement and reinstatement of the old requirement until a majority of student and faculty opinions can be heard.

The old requirement expected all CAS majors to take a foreign language up to the 140 level (approximately three semesters) unless they had four years of one language or three years of one language and two years of another in high school. A student was also exempt if he or she had attended a foreign high school abroad for at least one year "where English was not the predominant language spoken."

"This is where the major differences would occur as these exemptions would no longer be acceptable." according to the Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, Jeremiah Allen. "This will increase the number of students enrolled in a foreign language by about 3,000 a semester," he said last night.

According to Allen, the faculty meeting at which the new language requirement was passed was attended primarily by foreign language department faculty. Although no one last night would say for sure, some said they felt that the student enrollment in the foreign language department is floundering and the new requirement will provide bigger caseloads for the faculty.

The major opponents of the language requirement are the different science departments within CAS. "It's not necessary for an astronomy student to study a foreign language unless the student attends a graduate school which requires it," said William Irvine, professor of astronomy.

Irvine said many science students complain that a required language overcrowds an already extensive and difficult program.

"However, here's no proof that science students do any worse in foreign languages than other CAS students," said professor of bio-chemistry Linda Slakey.

Sternheim said he plans to propose the major changes at tonight's meeting in addition to the recall of the new requirements.

Tonight's faculty meeting of the College of Arts and Sciences over the college's foreign language requirements could be lively because a number of parliamentary tangles will be involved, according to Dean Jeremiah Allen. "I hope I can handle it," he said last night. "I think I can."

First, that voting on important measures in CAS take place by mail ballot and secondly, that the language requirement be optional by department.

"I believe the college is losing students because of the rigid requirements," Starnheim explained. "Many other auniversities have dropped the language requirements, allowing students to concentrate more on science."

Tonight's meeeting begins at eight in Hasbrouck 20.

Allen said he expects a lively meeting because a number of parliamentary tangles will be involved. "I hope I can handle it," he said. "I think I can."

Carter and Senate battle over energy

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Senate yesterday dealt major new blows to President Carter's energy program, prompting a counterattack from the President against the oil industry and an appeal to senators to stop dismantling his plan.

Accusing big oil of trying to "jeopardize our energy future," Carter urged the Senate to reject "narrow special interest attacks on all segments" of his national energy program.

The President spoke in the White House press room after the Senate Finance Committee, rejecting the heart of his energy plan, defeated his proposal to force conservation by taxing U.S. crude oil.

But even as Carter was speaking, the full Senate rejected in a new test vote his plan to keep federal controls on natural gas prices.

The 53-39 vote, following action to halt a filibuster of an industry-supported deregulation measure, was the second time a majority of the Senate has gone on record against Carter's gas-pricing plan.

It came despite the President's threat to veto any bill that deregulates natural gas prices.

The vote killed an effort by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., and other administration allies to revive the Carter plan. The move was engineered by Senate Republicans and oil-state Democrats.

Last week, the Senate voted by a six-vote margin to continue debating the industry proposal to lift price controls from natural gas as an alternative to Carter's proposal.

The President had told reporters earlier he thinks the committee vote against his oil tax plan can be reversed.

In an apparent effort to make sure that happens, Carter walked into the press room an hour later and delivered a personal statement before television cameras.

The President said, "the lobbying efforts of the oil and gas industry on deregulation of natural gas prices itself show how the special interests are trying to block enactment of the entire energy program. As we depend more and more on energy imports, the special interests should not be allowed to jeopardize our energy future."

Carter added, "I call on the Senate to act responsibly in the interests of the great majority of Americans to reject narrow special interest attacks on all segments of the national energy plan."

"The Congress has been lobbied continuously by the oil and gas industry to deregulate the price of new natural gas," Carter said. " ... By 1985, the industry proposal will cost the average American family that heats with natural gas an additional $150 a year.

"It will cost the consumers almost $10 billion every year and will produce little, if any, new supplies."

Carter said his proposal for partial deregulation "would give producers strong incentives to explore and to develop new supplies of natural gas through a price which will be six times higher than the price was five years ago.

Free concert at Hatch

The location of the Aztec Two-Step concert has been moved from the fields by Alumni Stadium to the Hatch.

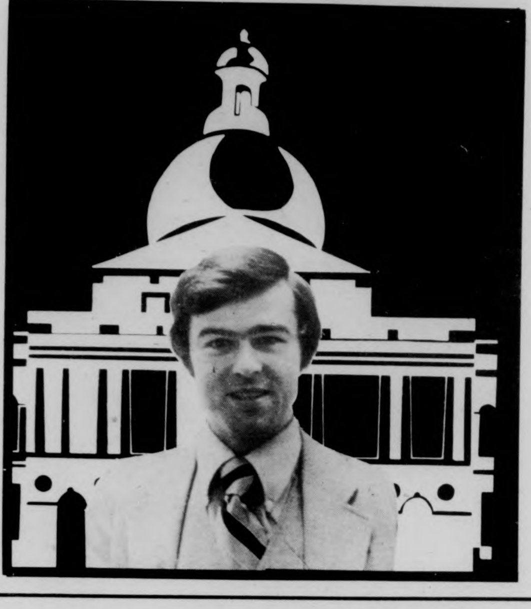
Aztec Two-Step may be seen at the Hatch tonight from nine to midnight free of charge, with Schaeffer beer being sold three cups for a dollar. Loose Caboose and Clean Living will be performing at the Blue Wall.

Originally these groups were to be part of the barbecue concert planned for Southwest which was cancelled due to bad weather.

There will be no cover charge at either the Blue Wall or the Hatch as the Undergraduate Student Senate has guaranteed to cover expenses which total about $3500, according to Priscilla West, treasurer of the Senate.

The Senate was originally going to cover the barbecue expenses with money from selling beer and receiving a percentage from the dining commons food sales.

Rep. Collins commutes between classes and chambers



By ANDREW MIGA
Collegian Staff

"This nation is going to be faced with substantial changes in lifestyle before the turn of the century." State Rep. James G. Collins, D-Amherst, said in a recent Collegian interview, 'As a result of less energy and limited resources people will be less materially oriented. You'll find a return to more basic values."

The 31-year-old Arlington, Mass. native is currently serving his third term as representative from the 4th Hampshire District, which includes Amherst. Collins graduated from UMass in 1968 with a B.A. in Political Science. Now he is working on his Master's degree here and plans to write his thesis on the reorganization of public higher education in Massachusetts.

Education and energy are Collins' main areas of interest at the State House in Boston. He is currently vice chairman of the joint Committee on Education, chairman of the Special Commission on Unequal Educational Opportunity, and a member of the joint standing Committee on Energy.

"What Massachusetts needs to do concerning energy is to develop a diversified system where no single source such as nuclear power is overemphasized," Collins explained.

"We have to sit down and critically examine our energy needs over the long run. Next we must look at factors such as cost, environment, safety, jobs, and dependability in order to make an intelligent decision on the best energy method," Collins said.

Collins believes that Massachusetts should only build as few more nuclear plants as it has to considering energy needs.

"We must move towards alternative forms of energy while we stress conservation," Collins said.

Collins was a supporter of House 6075, a bill which gives the state a stronger voice in controlling nuclear power by limiting on-site storage of spent fuel, creating an independent nuclear advisory commission, and providing publicized evacuation plans for each site.

"The limit on spent fuel is the key part of the legislation," Collins explained. "The state is the first line of defense in nuclear regulation. Spent fuel is the most serious and dangerous problem. The bill limits on site storage of used fuel to two cycles, which turns out to be eight years. We are hoping that this will put some pressure on the federal government to come up with a viable solution by then."

The Nuclear Safeguards Act, House 6075, is now in the House Ways and Means Committee. Collins said he believes the bill eventually will be signed into law.

In his five years at the State House, Collins has done much work involving public higher education in Massachusetts.

"We need a strong initiative in the legislature to build and safeguard public higher education." Collins asserted, "Our two priorities should be low cost tuition and fiscal autonomy in order to insure a high quality, affordable state educational system."

The Democratic representative attacked Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' plan for reorganizing higher education. "The governor's plan lacks any substantive merit. I think it will be defeated. A university education should be diverse; creating regions with schools offering only certain subject areas is bad."

Collins said he believes that the various state schools have to put aside their differences and stop competing with each other for funds.

"The potential for a strong public higher education sector has begun to form. I hope that faculty, students, and staff from all the schools can come together and work with the legislature for mutual benefit," Collins stated.

Collins also pointed out a bill passed both the House and Senate late in August forming a public higher education commission to study the need for reorganization.

Collins views himself as a liberal "more concerned with results than with

Economists debate Hampshire stock sale

By LYNN SHAPIRO
Hampshire Correspondent

Three economists last night spoke at Hampshire College regarding the fate of $19,000 which was invested from South African stocks last May.

The debate stemmed from an urgency expressed by the new president, Adele Smith Simmons, that Hampshire adopt a widespread investment policy so that she can go and solicit funds.

The economists, Robert Zevin of the United States Trust, Robert Swann of the International Independence Institute (a non-profit fund) and Jack McClullum of the Common Fund who handles investments for over 200 colleges, all agreed there would be a cost in forsaking conventional corporate investments, but that there are socially constructive alternatives.

Zevin said the United States dealing with a single system where everyone who sells security is obviously trying to maximize the profits of their firm, that social considerations come second.

The only meaningful choice an investor can make is not among conventional investments but between these and some other alternative which might achieve different social and political purposes.

"But unfortunately the deck is stacked against the alternatives," said Zevin.

Swann recommended that the college "decide investments on the basis of positive instead of negative criteria."

Swann compiled a list of socially progressive investments which included land trusts, co-operative nursing homes, and investment in organic materials.

Other alternatives are for the college to make mortgage loans to students, or to lend money to Hampshire alumni who want to engage in other kinds of enterprises.

"This is obviously not as safe," said Zevin, "But it is a socially concerned investment."

Comptroller says he'd still hire Bert Lance

WASHINGTON [UPI] – The comptroller of currency and two other federal officials who help regulate the nation's financial institutions yesterday said they would hire Bert Lance to head a bank if the decision were theirs.

Comptroller John Heimann, George Le Maistre, chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., and Stephen Gardner, vice chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, testified before the Senate Banking Committee.

Sen. Edward W. Brooke, R-Mass., asked if they would hire Lance to head a bank.

All three said they would, despite a federal finding of past "unsafe and unsound" practices at the Calhoun National Bank in Georgia, which Lance directed.

"They made a mistake and it was corrected," Heimann said. "It shouldn't be a permanent disability."

Le Maistre added, "I would put him to work producing new business, because at this moment he's probably the most popular man in Georgia."

The committee is attempting to determine whether banking laws should be tightened and whether the practices that caused Lance to lose his job as federal budget director are widespread.

Much of the testimony was inconclusive because the regulators all said they are still conducting studies on the frequency of such practices, including bank overdrafts and personal loans for bank officers from correspondent banks.

Pot petition started

By JOHN MORAN
Collegian Staff

A group of about thirteen students last night began organizing a drive for 58,000 signatures on an initiative petition to decriminalize the possession of marijuana in Massachusetts.

Student Government Association co-President Jon Hite, one of ten Amherst residents to file the original petition, explained what had been done thus far concerning the petition, the legal intents and implications of the proposed act, and the overall strategy for gathering the signatures statewide.

The group is scheduled to meet again next Monday night at seven to decide on the management of the petitions. The 58,000 signatures must be received by State Secretary Paul Guzzi before 5 p.m. Wednesday, December 7th.

A summary of the proposed act states it "would make possession of marijuana a non-criminal act." Pot would still not be legal but penalties for possession would be reduced to a fifty dollar fine for each citation. The fine would be payable by mail within twenty-one days and no criminal record would result.

Locally, the group plans to have a table on the Campus Center Concourse to gather signatures from students and to go through the dormitories. Jon Hite told the Collegian last night even more people are needed to bring petitions to their home towns to gain signatures. The possibility of getting signatures at some of the other state colleges was discussed.

Corrections

Kenneth W. Johnson was 59 when he died, not 83 as implied by a typographical error in yesterday's lead story on page 1. His address was 83 Memorial Drive.

In yesterday's page 1 Kent State story, the number of demonstrators protesting the gym site was erroneously reported due to a typographical error. The correct number is 2,000.

Elections today

By DAN HUSE
Collegian Staff

Elections are continuing today for the Undergraduate Student Senate and the Campus Center Board of Governors. The Senate has 30 seats for commuters, 15 for Third World people, two for each dormitory with more than 250 residents, and one for every other dorm. The Board of Governors has eight open seats, elected from the student body at large.

In another election Peter F. Quinlan was recently elected president of the Stockbridge Student Senate. Other officers elected were Nancy Evans, vice president; Peter Hasak, secretary; June Delehanty, treasurer; and Cheryl Marcotte, senator at-large.

According to Senate Director of Communications, Jim Gagne, there are two slates of candidates running for commuter seats. One slate of 24 people supports student unionization. The opposing slate of 12 people does not identify itself with any issues.

For Board of Governors there is a slate of eight people running, said Gagne, who oppose charging RSO groups rent for their offices, because students have already paid a $79 Campus Center fee.

Polls for the commuters and Greek areas will be open today from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union. Third World polls will be open from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. in New Africa House and at the Bilingual Cultural Program in Goodell. All other students can vote in their dormitories from 4 p.m. to 8 p.m.

Election results will be announced Wednesday night at the Undergraduate Student Senate meeting.

Bear goes into hiding

By BETH SEGERS
Collegian Staff

Reports that the UMass bear is missing once again are partly true. The bear no longer sits on a shelf over the door of the Student Union Building but this time its location is known.

"We've got it in a safe place right now until we can come up with a way to secure it" Dudley Bridges, manager of the Campus Center's Buildings Operations, said yesterday in a telephone interview.

The bear was returned to the Student Union sometime between Friday Sept. 16 and Saturday Sept. 17 after its mysterious disappearance last year. Buildings Operations removed the bear the following Monday morning, Sept. 19, Bridges said.

"We didn't want to just leave the bear there once it was returned. It was bolted down (to the Student Union) the first time. They (whoever removed it) even cut the bolts," Bridges said.

Bridges reported that there wasn't any damage to the bear but that he and other members of the Buildings Operations staff want to be sure of the bear's safety once it is replaced.

A Buildings Operations staff meeting tomorrow morning should help to decide what will be done with the bear. Bridges was unsure of the solution: "I don't know... maybe the students can come up with something."

University Without Walls: something very different

By CAROL-ANN TOMICH
Collegian Staff

Set back off North Pleasant St. sits Wysocki House, a rather quaint white house, the headquarters of perhaps one of the least known programs of the University.

The program, known as the "University Without Walls" (UWW), turns out to be an individualized Baccalaureate degree program for adult students. It had its beginnings in 1971 at the University by a pioneering group of graduate students from the School of Education. In fact, Ed Harris, previously one of these students, is now the director of UWW.

UWW students are older people, who, for reasons of either job or family responsibilities, are unable to attend classes full time in the traditional way.

Although class attendance is one way to earn credits, a great many alternative methods of accumulating graduation credits are offered.

The CLEP exams, for example, or another of the various exams offered by the Educational Testing Service or University Departments may result in credit toward graduation and-or the satisfaction of specific graduation requirements.

Also, independent studies, practicums, and internships are available to help students earn credits. An independent study, as defined by UWW, "involves a written or oral response to directed readings" while practicums and internships" involve supervised learning activities which are evaluated by student and faculty in terms of stated educational goals." According to Debbie Houston, UWW assistant to the director, students do the majority of their work toward graduation through these non-traditional means.

But the most unique concept in credit earning is titled "Credit For Prior Learning". Though this means, students may receive credits for learning that has occurred outside of formal academic institutions. Students must prepare a portfolio in which they not only describe their experiences but also analyze them in terms of what they learned from them.

These portfolios are then evaluated by a team consisting of both UWW faculty members and what is termed "outside experts" who determine how much credit the student's past experience is worth. Credit for Prior Learning can indeed be valuable and help eliminate unnecessary courses on a level the student may be far beyond.

Consider, for example, the case of one man involved in the UWW program whose interest lay in political science. Were it not for Credit for Prior Learning, his understanding of political factors learned through his five years as selectman and seven years as county commissioner would have received no recognition. Other students have published either books or poems — a note-worthy achievement that certainly deserves some credit.

Students in the UWW program do not have a major, per se. Technically, they are all UWW majors who fulfill an "area of concentration". These areas are usually more specific than one of the pre-established university majors. Some examples include "Elementary and Bilingual Education", "Dental Health", and "Urban Planning". The majority of students, Houston explained, usually go into social service areas such as criminal justice, psychology, sociology, and education.

All students must fulfill university core requirements.

However, upon entering the program, the student may find that some or all of these requirements may have already been fulfilled through either transfer credits, credits earned through prior learning, or those acquired through national testing or departmental exams.

When a student enters the UWW program he is assigned to an advisor, who helps him determine his area of concentration. The student himself then seeks out a faculty sponsor in his area of interest whom he feels can help him shape his degree program.

Houston maintains that there is a great shortage of sponsors for the students. It seems that there is no monetary compensation or any other kind of recognition for sponsors. Thus, many instructors and professors would rather not involve themselves in a position that involves time and work yet merits no obvious rewards. As a result, UWW is always on the lookout for more sponsors.

Currently, the UWW program is serving 250 students. The majority of students are women, and their average age is 35. Students apply to the program through Wysocki House; the staff there then works with the regular University Admissions Office, usually through the Transfer Affairs Office since UWW students are almost transfer students. All students in the UWW program, however, must be unable to attend college through the traditional program.

From its small beginnings in 1971, UWW has branched out to a total of six "clusters" or extensions of the program. The six locations are in Amherst, Boston, Worcester, Pittsfield, Springfield, and Cape Cod.

Due to lack of funding, however, the cluster located on the Cape does not have an advisor and students there must keep in touch through one of the nearer clusters. All the UWW staff are located in Wysocki House, along with Amherst's cluster advisor, Ruth Hooke.

Although most of the staff is administrative, the program has three faculty members who teach classes and do independent studies with students: the three members include Diana Diamond, who specializes in rhetoric, literature, and Women's Studies; Jackie Stanton, whose interest is psycology; and Marvin Kalkstein the resident science expert. However, as Houston explained, everyone at UWW finds himself doing a variety of jobs, including advising and administrative work, so that all positions in the program overlap at one point or another.

The staff at UWW are a dedicated group of people, working together to help people get a college degree in a way that will not interfere with their already established job or family life. It is a valuable program, and one that deserves more support and recognition in its outstanding effort to encourage people to continue their higher education.

Accused in '63 bombing

Ex-KKK member arrested

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. [UPI] — A former Ku Klux Klansman was arrested yesterday and charged for the 1963 Birmingham church bombing that claimed the lives of four young black girls.

Authorities said the arrest of Robert Chamblis, 73, came after a Jefferson County grand jury, looking into a series of racially motivated bombings during the period, issued an indictment.

A source close to the investigation said a second person was charged in connection with a racial bombing, but refused to say if the charges involve the 1963 blast.

The source said previously the investigation is continuing and more indictments are likely.

"We're not through," the source said. "This is just beginning. We expect to request the grand jury to return more indictments in the future regarding the bombings."

Sources previously said Marietta, Ga., attorney J.B. Stoner was being investigated by the grand jury in connection with the church bombing and nearly 60 other racially motivated bombings in the same period.

The name of the second person indicted was not released pending his arrest.

The blast, at the Sixteenth Street Baptist Church went off as the four young girls were removing their choir robes on the morning of Sept. 15, 1963. More than 20 other persons were treated at area hospitals.

The bombings claimed the lives of Cynthia Wesley, Carol Robertson and Addie Mae Collins, all 14, and Denise McNair, 11.

State Rep. Chris McNair, the father of Denise McNair, refused comment on Monday's indictments.

"I'm going to keep it 100 per cent," he said. "That's all I have to say. When I'm ready to make a statement, you'll hear it."

Cynthia Wesley's father, Claude A. Wesley, said he was glad some progress had been made toward solving the case.

"I feel mighty proud that some steps have been made to bring somebody to court," he said. "Some progress has been made. Of course no one has been convicted.

"I've waited this long, I'll wait some more."

When asked if grief over the death of his daughter has lessened over the years, Wesley said, "every day it hits my mind. It was the greatest shock I've ever experienced. It's just unexplainable."

The case was reopened last year by Attorney General William J. Baxley, who said he knew who was responsible for the dynamite blast that played a major role in the passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

Chambliss testified before the grand jury last month.

After the bombings, Chambliss was convicted along with Charles Cagle and John Hill in Birmingham recorder's court on charges of illegal possession of dynamite. But the convictions were appealed and the men were found innocent by a circuit court.

Central Area Council allocates annual budgets

By JULIE EAGLE
Collegian Staff

Central Area Council last night allocated annual budgets to area centers at an hour-long meeting in Chadbourne.

CAC is allocating $200 to the Sexism Program, $500 to the Racism Awareness Program, $1,950 to the Women's Center, $2,600 to the New World Center, and $3,250 for the Craft Shop. The remaining money will be channeled into a variety of events, such as coffeehouses and the spring concert.

Other items discussed at the meeting were CAC activities. The activity for this week is a bus excursion to the Alpine Slide this Friday. The bus will leave at approximately 5:30 p.m. in front of Greenough and Chadbourne and at the bottom of the Central Area hill. The cost of the trip will be $3 for the first 20 people who sign up, $4 for others.

A new activities coordinator, sophomore Jay Flynn of Wheeler dorm, was elected at the meeting. Flynn will receive a weekly salary of $10.

The position of CAC Treasurer is open and those running for office are Neal Hunter, Ken Kravitz, and Leo Murphy. Hunter and Murphy were present at the meeting to introduce themselves.

Hunter, a junior living at Brett dorm, served as representative to the Council last year. He said he has managed finances at a service station.

Murphy was "very active in Brett last year," Assistant Manager of the Collegian Graphics Department, and Assistant Manager of the Greenough Snackbar. He said he has also done bookkeeping for a department store.

CAC voted to combine the budgets of the Sexism Awareness Program and the Women's Center, alloting a combined expenditure of $2,150 for the two programs.

Cynthia Thomas, coordinator of the Woman's Center, pointed out that although both programs are similar in their purposes and functions, the Women's Center "is not combatting sexism — that's our difference ... While we are doing that, that is not our major goal". Earlier, she described the Women's Center as a "place where women can get together in a non-threatening environment."

Grad Senate votes seats

By MARY WYATT
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Student Senate last night held committee elections and discussed their purposes at its meeting.

Two senators will be inducted onto the Election Committee, including David Cohen and John Furbish. The Election Committee is responsible for the education of senate officers, and observes procedures for elections and campaign petitions.

The finance committee makes recommendations for the allocation of GSS funds. Elected to this committee were Mary Sparkes, Jim Waldo, Phil Broduer, Vic Sawicki, Kathy Farris and Alan McArdle.

Only one senator, Lorraine Yasinski, was elected to the Affirmative Action Committee this week. Two more senators and three non-senators will be elected at a later date.

UM professionals try for union status

By MOIRA CAMPBELL
Collegian Staff

The Professional Staff for Collective Bargaining (PSCB) yesterday approved its bylaws, elected officers and an executive committee in efforts to bring a petition for membership in the Union of Professional Employees (UPE) before the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission.

The petition, a standard step in the unionization process, calls for an election for professional employees of UMass to decide if they want to unionize. Approval of a constitution, the election of officers and formation of an executive committee are all necessary steps towards the presentation of the petition to the Commission, according to the newly elected staff president.

Leone Stein yesterday said "the Labor Relations Commission hearing should occur within one month, under normal conditions."

UPE is organized to further the interests of "any and all professional staff employees at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst who are not eligible for membership in any other unit," according to the UPE bylaws passed yesterday by PSCB.

The description specifically includes the non-academic staff of the University; officers of UMass, research, administrative and enforcement workers. The exact description of who is eligible will ultimately be determined by the UMass Board of Trustees.

If UMass professional employees vote for membership in UPE they will automatically be members of the Massachusetts Teachers Association and the National Education Association with which UPE is affiliated, according to UPE bylaws.

The bylaws require that "no person shall be admitted to or be continued as an active member in the Association who is not also a member of the Massachusetts Teachers Association and the National Education Association."

UPE would levy grievances between professional staff members and the administration in such areas as evaluation, promotion, merit pay increases, conditions of employment, work assignments, outside official job specification and disciplinary actions including suspension, dismissal or demotion.

Officers elected to further the efforts of the Collective Bargaining Staff include President Leone Stein from UMass Press, Vice-President Stan Rosenberg from Continuing Education, Secretary Dot G. Thayer from the Psychology Department and Treasurer David Sacket from Financial Aid Services.

The members of the executive committee who, according to UPE bylaws, exert control over the officers and committees formed within the UPE, include Ruth Hook from University Without Walls, Sally Ives from the Sociology Department, Bud Martindale from Physical Plant, Gary Scanlon from Financial Aid Services and Rick Shanor from the News Bureau.

PIRG to hold workshop

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The Mass PIRG will hold a Public Speaking Workshop this afternoon at 4 p.m. in the Student Union Suffolk room.

The workshop is part of a Public Interest Skills Program being coordinated by MassPIRG staff member Susan Kohler. According to Kohler, the main goals of PIRG are to educate students in social change, and to promote social change in general. She noted that through PIRG students can undertake individual projects. Through these projects, the students learn to use specific public interest skills. Not only do these skills help them in their individual projects, but they will also help them in future public interest endeavors.

Kohler explained that these workshops were developed with student interns this past summer in both Amherst and Boston. "The whole idea of the workshops is to help students develop into more effective social change agents by equipping them with the skills and tools that they need to be successful," Kohler added.

The regular PIRG meetings of this semester will be held on the second and fourth Tuesday of each month at 4 p.m. in room 413C of the Student Union.

According to Karen Meenan of the PIRG office these meetings will include discussion of projects, ideas, and strategies, election of members to the State Board of Directors, and obtaining student feedback.

Some of the meetings will be business meetings, while others will be Public Interest Skills workshops.

During the winter and spring credit-free workshops will also be held at UMass. The winter workshop will be in Public Advocacy. This will include skills such as lobbying, negotiating and effective letter writing. The spring workshop will be on "Initiating Petition." This will cover how to use the referendum process to get an issue on the ballot.

rhetoric." His liberal slant is evident concerning the issues of abortion and marijuana:

"I agree with Dukakis' recent decision to veto legislation which would have prohibited the use of welfare funds for abortion," Collins said "Abortion should be a personal moral decision. The state should do more to prevent the need for abortion and spend more money on adoption and daycare."

The decriminalization of marijuana is favored by Rep. Collins. "It doesn't make sense to give someone a criminal record for pot that isn't selling it."

"I'm very happy with my job as a state rep," he remarked. "My greatest satisfaction comes in helping people handle the problems they come to me with. I get about 120 calls and letters a week. One half of those are people having trouble with government — new laws, Social Security hassles, tax mixups — they come to me as a last resort. I find being able to help very satisfying."

Women's health series

Various health services offered

By JULIE MELROSE
Collegian Staff

This is a second in a weekly series of articles on women's health care.

This article represents an attempt to compile a comprehensive list of health care services available to women on the UMass campus.

For the remainder of the semester, this series will deal with specific health issues of concern to women. Hopefully, the articles will prompt women to seek help for a variety of concerns. It is important that they be familiar with the resources and facilities available to them.

A few general notes. All services mentioned in this article are free or covered under the Student Health Plan unless otherwise indicated. All contacts with the University Health Services (UHS) are strictly confidential. Services for which no phone numbers have been listed here may be reached through the main UHS number (549-2671).

CONTRACEPTION

UHS handles all methods of contraception other than abortion and sterilization, for which it makes off-campus referrals. It is required that a patient who has never been seen at UHS for contraception before attend a contraception education session which lasts approximately one hour.

Included in this session is a slide show on contraceptive methods, a film about pelvic examinations and a question-and-answer period.

Education sessions take place in room 302 of the Health Center on Mondays and Thursdays (3 p.m.) and Tuesdays and Wednesdays (7 p.m.). They are open to all members of the University community, male and female.

The Tuesday evening sessions are designed especially for couples, although everyone is welcome. In addition, there is a session for men only on the first Monday evening of each month.

After attending the education session, patients wishing to obtain contraceptive devices, counseling or follow-up care (for those already using contraception) may do so by making an appointment at UHS.

This semester, a follow-up support group for women who use diaphragms will be forming to discuss issues and concerns specific to those who have chosen this method. Meetings will be Thursdays at 2:30 p.m. Interested women should call the Community Health Education office.

Contraceptive products are available through the University Pharmacy at cost plus a small handling fee.

RAPE CARE

Rape victims may receive medical care at UHS whether or not they choose to contact the police. Services offered to rape victims include a general physical examination for injuries, V.D. and pregnancy preventive measures and counseling.

A routine part of the medical examination is the collection of sperm which may be used as evidence should the victim choose to prosecute. This evidence may not be released without the victim's permission.

The UMass Rape Task Force trains counselor-advocates who are available to rape victims upon request. These counselor-advocates provide support and information and will accompany the victim to court if necessary. Counselor-advocates may be contacted 24 hours a day through UHS or the University police. The Task Force also runs a support group for rape victims. Information is available through Everywoman's Center (545-0883).

SEXUALLY TRANSMITTED DISEASES

Resources for patients who may have sexually transmitted diseases include screening, counseling and treatment programs. A public health nurse or other staff member will aid the patient in informing sexual partners if he-she so desires.

WOMEN'S HEALTH EDUCATION

The Community Health Education office sponsors a variety of educational programs related to women's health care. Staff members will put on programs in dorms if so requested.

DES

Women who believe their mothers may have been given the drug diethylstilbestrol (DES) during pregnancy are strongly urged to be screened for vaginal cell abnormalities which may be caused by DES. The screening involves a simple staining test and can help detect any abnormalities that might become problematic later on. "DES daughters" may obtain counseling and referral services by contacting UHS.

PREGNANCY

Pregnancy testing is available at UHS by appointment. A woman must wait 42 days after the start of her last menstrual period to be tested. Problem pregnancy counseling and counseling for those who wish to discuss pregnancy with a staff member may be arranged through the Health Education Office.

PERSONAL COUNSELING

Personal counseling is available to women on campus through many different agencies.

The Mental Health Division of UHS has a large staff of professional counselors qualified to do personal, couples, family and group counseling.

Everywoman's Center has two counselors on the staff. Both of them do feminist counseling; one does Lesbian counseling. The term "feminist counseling" refers to a type of counseling that concentrates on the individual woman's potential and needs rather than societal expectations of women.

Other counseling services for women are at Room To Move (545-0400) and the Lesbian Union (545-3438).

Peer Sex Educators and Student Health Aides working in the dormitories provide information, counseling and referral for issues of sexuality and health care.

Payment of the Student Health Fee at UMass entitles you to the use of a rare resource: easily accessible, low cost health care. Use it.

High officials cited for committing sexual acts

Columnist Jack Anderson reports that several high government officials, including Mississippi Senator James Eastland, appear to have successfully blocked the prosecution of a Mississippi police official who allegedly forced a woman to have sex with him.

Anderson quotes F.B.I. sources as saying that Lieutenant Jack Moulder, a vice-squad chief in Jackson, reportedly obtained warrants for the arrest of a woman on drug charges. Moulder then threatened to serve them unless she (quote) "submitted to him for sexual intercourse, both natural and unnatural."

After the charges were investigated by the Jackson Police Department, the F.B.I. was called in to determine whether the woman's civil rights had been violated. Sworn statements from witnesses, and other evidence, including a lie-detector test of Moulder, backed up the woman's story.

Anderson reports, however, that Moulder unsuccessfully attempted to rig the polygraph test given him. When he failed it anyway, the vice-squad chief threatened to expose all he knew about the after-hours activities of certain powerful political and business leaders in Jackson if he was prosecuted. Anderson says Moulder is reported to have said, "If I go down, I'm not going down alone."

After that threat, Anderson reports, the investigation began to go Moulder's way.

The Mayor of Jackson suddenly declared that the evidence against Moulder was inconclusive and returned the vice-squad officer to duty.

The Mississippi Bureau of Narcotics suddenly found three warrants against the woman in question, and threatened to send her to prison for allegedly "buying drugs" from state officers.

In Washington, Senator James Eastland of Mississippi complained to the Justice Department about the F.B.I. handling of the case. Two agents from Washington were quickly dispatched to Jackson.

Shortly after that, Anderson reports, all investigation of Moulder was quickly and quietly dropped. Robert Haulberg, the U.S. attorney from Mississippi, attempted to present the case to a grand jury, but was overruled by the justice department.

Senator Eastland, who heads the Judiciary Committee in the U.S. Senate, in the meantime, says he "can't remember anything" about the alleged sexual extortion affair.

Legionnaires disease still affects many Americans

BURLINGTON, Vt. [UPI] — In an unusual step, the national Center for Disease Control, Monday set up a field laboratory at the Vermont Medical Center Hospital to study what officials said is an apparent outbreak of Legionnaires disease.

The laboratory, staffed by two specialists, is believed to be the first of its kind ever established outside CDC headquarters in Atlanta.

A statement released by the Medical Center Hospital listed the two specialists as Drs. Claire Broome and Stella Goings. Dr. Broome is an expert in growing and isolating the organism believed responsible for the disease and Dr. Goings is a specialist in hospital infections, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Officials yesterday confirmed two more cases of Legionnaires disease, bringing to at least four more cases of the pneumonia-like illness identified in Vermont since July. One of those cases involved the Sept. 15 death of a person who was not identified by hospital authorities.

The other three cases involved people released in good condition from the hospital, including one last Saturday.

It was recently confirmed that the death last year of a Medical Center nurse was the result of the disease and last June a patient at the Veterans Administration Hospital in White River Junction was released in good condition after a bout with the disease.

Ecology kick—of the body

[UPI] — Young America's off on a kick that sounds like a jawbreaker — The Ecology of the Human Body Movement.

It's meant to be a life saver! There's no national or local organization. No membership list.

The goal in this movement: postpone the date with the undertaker as long as humanly possible.

One becomes a member in good standing by taking exceedingly good care of her-his life-support system for survival on planet earth. That is, the human body.

Fill it with poisonous chemicals or foods, mess it with drugs or cigarettes, pollute it with venereal disease, don't give it enough exercise and, well — the lifespan is going to be shorter than nature intended.

A guy who is careless will not get as many years out of his life-support system as a pal who pays as much attention to himself as he did to his first car.

But why call this the Ecology of the Human Body Movement? That's what it is.

Ecology, you see, is the branch of science concerned with the inter-relationship of organisms and their environment.

What goes into the body gets in through the mouth, nose or skin. Some chemicals, for example, are absorbed through the skin. Food — solid or fluid — goes in through the mouth.

Things that mess up the body also go through the mouth — alcohol, cigarette smoke, foods tainted with carcinogenic chemicals, for example.

Some things that foul the inner environment go through the veins — as happens when one shoots up with drugs.

The air that goes into the system through the nose can be loaded with harmful junk, too. Pollutants from auto exhausts, chemicals from a steel mill, gases and some solids — such as in cocaine sniffing.

Young Americans on the Ecology of the Human Body trail are trying to fill body maintenance requirements — nourishment and activity — necessary to keep functioning properly and strongly.

News in Brief

Hospital beds to be eliminated

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The nation's hospitals should eliminate 100,000 unnecessary beds by 1984 and increase occupancy rates of those remaining, the Department of Health, Education and Welfare said Monday.

HEW proposed new national health planning guidelines to control the growth of health care facilities and equipment.

"The guidelines will help put the brakes on construction of new hospital bed space and high cost specialty services, such as open heart surgery and computerized x-ray scanning," HEW Secretary Joseph Califano said in a statement.

Hospital costs "now threaten to bankrupt our health care system," he said.

The guidelines are intended for use by the 205 local health systems agencies across the country in planning the allocation of health resources.

The guidelines set as a goal a reduction by 1984 in the supply of non-federal hospital beds from 4.5 beds per thousand persons to 4 beds per thousand.

Quinlan case is just old hat

LANDING, N.J. [UPI] — A television drama last night renewed interest in the Karen Ann Quinlan right-to-die case, but folks in her home town said they were tired of hearing the same story for more than two years.

Many people in the Morris County area where Karen lived said they have been reading about the historic case since she slipped into an irreversible coma on April 15, 1975.

For them, the recently published book by the Quinlans and the television movie are just another version of the same old story.

"People are fed up around here. I just don't feel things like that should be exploited," said Roberta Morris, who lives near St. Clare's Hospital in Denville, where Karen was first placed on a respirator.

Alonso dances 'Giselle' again

NEW YORK [AP] — Alicia Alonso, who danced her first "Giselle" in 1943 in the United States, is back to do the difficult ballet. For the first time in years she's here under a visa granted by her native Cuba.

Miss Alonso, one of the century's most highly regarded ballerinas, is 56 and still going strong in a profession whose stars usually retire in their mid 30s.

Miss Alonso, director and prima ballerina of the National Ballet of Cuba, takes ballet class for an hour and a half in the morning and rehearses one to three hours in the afternoon, six days a week.

She says she isn't sure why she is able to perform a difficult, full-length ballet like "Giselle" at her age, but notes, "It is a mistake thinking that dancing is done with the legs. The mind is most important."

This is Miss Alonso's fourth visit to dance in the United States in the last two years but the first in which her visa was issued by Cuba. Previously she had gone from Cuba to Mexico and then on to the United States.

Mass. auto insurance lowered

BOSTON [UPI] — The state's auto insurance rating bureau yesterday recommended significant reductions in the cost of most automobile insurance coverage for Massachusetts drivers next year.

Last month, the insurance industry's Massachusetts Automobile Rating Bureau requested a 7 per cent, $55 million rate increase for 1978.

James Hunt, director of the Insurance Department's Automobile Insurance Rating Bureau, said the group's recommendations would not be completed until 8 p.m. yesterday but would call for "significant" reductions in "most" major classifications of auto insurance across the state.

He confirmed that the most dramatic recommended reduction would be in the cost of collision insurance.

Hunt said the bureau would not recommend any increases for types of coverage, but would recommend that the costs of some odd, little-used types of coverage remain the same.

Stiff criminal penalties against producers of pornographic films

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The House voted yesterday for stiff criminal penalties against producers and distributors of pornographic films and other materials depicting sexual exploitation of children.

The measure, passed on a 375-12 vote and sent to the Senate, would provide up to 20 years in prison and a $50,000 fine for anyone producing or participating in sexual abuse of a child under 16, and up to 15 years in prison and a fine of $25,000 for distributing or showing the materials.

The provisions were added to a bill extending the 1974 child abuse act for five years through Sept. 30, 1982. The original measure dealt with physical abuse of children, and sexual exploitation was added to its coverage.

The overwhelming vote came despite warnings that the bill might not stand up in court. Those warnings came from Rep. Peter Rodino, D-N.J., chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, and Rep. John Conyers, D-Mich., whose judiciary subcommittee earlier Monday approved its own child pornography bill.

"What we are asked to do here is the reverse of our intention," Conyers said. "You are going to furnish an obvious out to any lawyer representing a child pornographer and who has read the decisions of the Supreme Court on obscenity."

New York is darkened again

NEW YORK [UPI] — Consolidated Edison blacked out part of Westchester County and cut power by 8 per cent in New York City's five boroughs yesterday.

"We have a report of trouble on our system in Northern Westchester," a Con Edison spokeswoman said. "It appears to be storm-related trouble on transmission lines."

Blacked out in Westchester County, which lies immediately north of New York City, were the communities of White Plains, Pleasantville, and part of Mount Vernon. Con Ed said power was cut off in those areas in an effort to avoid further trouble.

The utility urged customers to turn off all unnecessary appliances, such as air conditioners, washing machines and toasters.

The reduction went into effect as a heavy thunderstorm was forecast for the city, packing gusty winds and heavy lightning.

It was the first major power reduction since the one that preceded a massive citywide blackout July 13 when the city was left without electricity for up to 25 hours.

The spokeswoman said the 3:30 p.m. EDT voltage reduction came after the utility lost generating capacity at two Indian Point, N.Y., nuclear generators and its Bowline Point generator, also in northern Westchester.

The oil-fired "Big Allis" plant in Astoria, Queens, was brought back into service.

"All our generators have gone to maximum capacity," she said. "We are appealing to the public to cut down on usage."

The Pope cites 80th birthday

VATICAN CITY [AP] — Pope Paul VI marked his 80th birthday yesterday with a regular day of work while world leaders lauded his drive for world peace. He appeared in good health despite his stated belief that death is approaching.

President Carter's message of congratulations cited the Pope's "tireless efforts to promote human rights" and deep appreciation for the moral leadership.

As on previous birthdays of his 14-year-old papacy, the pontiff shunned excessive public observance. The white and yellow vatican flag used to mark such occasions was raised over public buildings, but the offices remained open.

Bugging studied on Panama treaty

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A Senate subcommittee issued a subpoena Monday directing a former Army sergeant to produce any records on allegations that U.S. intelligence bugged Panamanian delegates to the new Panama treaty negotiations.

The subpoena named Hor Rodriguez Brustmeyer, 28, formerly of Brooklyn and believed to be in Panama now.

A spokesman for a Judiciary subcommittee said its chairman, Sen. James Allen, D-Ala., and members met yesterday and decided to issue the subpoena. The subcommittee also voted to subpoena any records of various federal agencies relating to Brustmeyer or his service in Panama. The agencies are the FBI, Justice Department, Army Department, Defense Intelligence Agency, Central Intelligence Agency and the Army Records Center.

Widespread reports in the past month said U.S. intelligence had bugged the Panamanian treaty negotiators in 1974 and 1975, collecting information about their personal and sexual habits.

These reports said the Panamanians discovered the electronic surveillance and used the information as blackmail to obtain more favorable treaty terms.

Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, testifying Monday before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said the Panama Canal treaties were "not affected in any way" by U.S. intelligence monitoring.

Vance said he wanted to "lay to rest" reports that the American government monitored Panamanian negotiators.

The Senate Intelligence Committee had been handling the case exclusively until Allen's subcommittee subpoenaed Brustmeyer.

The Intelligence Committee has held two secret sessions, including interviews with CIA Director Stansfield Turner and Ambassadors Ellsworth Bunker and Sol Linowitz, who negotiated the pacts.

Intelligence Committee Chairman Daniel Inouye of Hawaii told reporters after the second session there was no indication U.S. intelligence activities had affected the outcome of the negotiations.

Another diamond broker reported missing

NEW YORK [AP] — Another young diamond broker was reported missing yesterday as police and Orthodox colleagues of one who disappeared on the eve of Yom Kippur were puzzling over that case.

Authorities had not immediately linked the disappearance last Tuesday of 25-year-old Pinchos Jaroslawicz with the report filed yesterday that Shlomo Tal, another diamond dealer, had not been seen for three days.

Police had ruled out kidnaping in Jaroslawicz' disappearance because no ransom had been reported and said that because of his reputation, they did not think he had embezzled the fortune in gems he was believed carrying with him. The case was assigned to a missing persons squad.

Last weekend, Jaroslawicz' Jewish colleagues assembled one of the most unusual search parties seen in this city, where almost 17,000 missing person reports are filed each year.

A matter of taste

greg tarpinian

When asked how it was that he chose to look at the world the way he does, a prominent UMass Economics professor said, "Because it tastes good; it makes sense to me."

Baffled by this simplistic appraisal of the relative merits of competing world views; and understanding the irrelevance of the empiricist approach to understanding reality, a student asked, "Why does it taste good; what determines one's preference?"

Briefly, this is what he said: "You and I are each products of history. We were born; we live; and we die. We were born in a certain way, in a certain place, at a certain time. We live a certain way, we lived a certain way, we were taught to live a certain way. And we die somewhere, at some time, for some reason. All of these things have or will have their own effect on the way we look at the world around us, and our roles in it. We are, in large part, determined by our own history. But the beauty about history is that we can also determine its course.

As students at UMass we find ourselves in a unique historical and social setting.

People have little say in the decision to take certain classes, live in certain places, eat certain food, cash checks in particular places, park in certain lots, pay certain fees, deal with certain professors, smell certain smells, read certain books, come to school before Labor Day, and on and on.

Several thousands complain each day.

Very few take it upon themselves to change it. Paradoxically, history can be changed; history can be made; history can be wiped out. It isn't all recorded. It won't all be recorded. It does happen, however. People like you and I have changed things.

Some questions, with their mechanical answers, emerge: Why don't people act to change things? It's their history, of course. When do people act that haven't acted before? When things get bad enough. Why don't people act when things are bad? It's their history.

What? Where does this leave us?

It provokes many to say that things on this campus don't "taste good". It leaves many more to say things don't "look good". When things don't taste good, you don't swallow them, for fear of becoming sick, pissed off, disheartened, or used. When things don't look good, you stop looking. You try to forget you saw them. You avoid them. You look above them, below them, but not at them. If you catch youself looking you flinch. You don't, however, try to change them. It's too easy to close your eyes.

Most everyone will tell you that many things don't look good at UMass; Southwest, graffitti, urine on the rugs, broken windows, leaky ceilings, artificial streaks, the library walls, and President Wood's helicopter.

Not everyone will tell you that things taste so bad that they want to get rid of them. Not everyone will get to the point where they consider, compare, spit, and then start acting in such a way as to change the way things are; even though we can collectively alter the course of our own history as students at UMass.

Seldom are people in this society taught that they can assume control over the way their lives are going. Our history dictates that we remain passive: "Don't speak unless you're spoken to; don't you dare contradict your father; don't touch the glass, it might break ... " Our individual survival in this society dictates that we maintain that passivity: "Don't rock-the-boat, you're liable to get fired; better get your hair cut if you want to get hired; better not say something the professor doesn't like, you won't get an 'A' ... "

What if a large number of us didn't like what was happening to us? Would our survival be threatened? Could we change things? Could we alter the "taste buds" of the generations to come?

Sure. It's happened before. The American Revolution. The Civil Rights Movement. The eight hour work day. Public schools for the working class. Social Security. The divesture of stocks in Southern Africa by the UMass board of Trustees. The peasant rebellions of 1348.

> What if a large number of us didn't like what was happening to us? Would our survival be threatened? Could we change things? Could we alter the "taste buds" of the generations to come?

All of these things have resulted because of hard work, commitment, sweat, and organization.

In order for you and I to live in a world in which all people can go to school, live in a decent environment, learn, and assume responsibility for the direction of their own lives, we must organize. We must begin dealing from a position of strength not weakness; numbers not words; expectations not reservations.

In short, we must begin to think seriously about the future course of our own lives, evaluate the worth of the situation in which we find ourselves at UMass, and ask whether it is the model for what we hope will come.

If we find ourselves disenchanted we must think of alternatives. A Union of students, addressing the real needs of students, is such an alternative. But it isn't going to come about through high-powered media tactics, a student senate 'facelift', or sloganizing. It will come about through participation, concern, and an awareness that things can and should be better.

It will taste good. It will make sense.

In favor of student towing

To the Editor:

This Wednesday night, September 28, the Student Senate has its last chance to decide on the proposal for a student run tow service. If for any reason they do not approve the plan, bids will go out and UMass students will be faced with another year of Amherst Towing.

The idea for a student run tow service clearly reflects the desires of the student population. Time and again the senate has ignored this mandate and chosen to take the less controversial path [for them] of doing nothing. The present state of affairs is intolerable for many students who desperately need some relief from the caprice of Amherst Towing.

A student run tow service is not a new idea, it has been modified a number of times trying to find the most acceptable plan. These are the Pro's and Con's of the present proposal.

Advantages

1. All revenue from towing and storage fees would be kept in the UMass community.
2. A student run tow service will provide approximately 280 hours per week of student employment.
3. A grievance procedure will be created that will be easily accessible to the students.
4. Storage facilities would be more conveniently located on campus.
5. Cost per tow would be reduced four dollars and possibly more.
6. Profits [if any; the system can run at cost], would be channeled back to student activities.
7. The plan is simple and geared towards protection of students cars and property.
8. A student run tow service is feasible and can be implemented quickly. An attack on the parking regulations, although closer to the root of the problem, would be a protracted struggle with no clear end in sight.
9. The Amherst Towing Company would be eliminated from UMass forever!

Disadvantages

1. A student run tow service would require an initial 5 year loan of $30,000 from the Student Senate.
2. Students would be put into a position of towing other students.

In weighing these arguments, keep in mind the factors that will remain constant irregardless of who is doing the towing. First of all, towing will continue to be done in response to a police call. Which cars are to be towed will still be determined by the police in accordance with university Motor Vehicle Rules and Regulations. Secondly, we do not like our cars being towed no matter who does it.

The Committee to Stop Amherst Towing has collected 6000 signatures and spoken to hundreds of students on campus. The input from these students indicates that a student run tow service would be a big improvement over the present situation. Students who support this proposal need to make themselves heard on this issue. Make sure that your student representative is aware that you believe this proposal to be a priority and to vote accordingly. For more information please call 253-7124.

Young white males should stick together

To the Editor:

It may be that affirmative action will for some of us mean "discrimination in reverse". If so, we'll just have to grin and bear it. What I'm hoping is that we white males, especially we younger white males who are most likely to be affected, can begin taking steps to look after one another like many blacks and women have done. And if we can do it quietly and decently without a lot of righteousness and fanfare, maybe all of us, in the long run, will be better off.

Guy Traynor

Money wasted on Kent State

To the Editor:

$2738 have just been wasted. This is one seventh of the money that will be taken from an account for sponsoring organizations. The Student Senate gave that amount to a handful of UMass students [estimated 110] who are planning to demonstrate this coming Saturday against the building of the gym at Kent State.

After talking to various students on campus, I found many were against the senate's decision for appropriating this sum of money.

Many felt that the money should have been spent for things at this university and not Kent State. This money could have been spent on this campus for programs which would benefit a greater number of students, rather than allowing a select few to express their political beliefs.

If these few are so dedicated to this issue, they should be out peddling for this money. But they are so unorganized that it makes it impossible for them to get together and raise the money on their own, so they take your money instead.

Voting for senators is taking place today; be sure that the senator you vote for does what you want and not what he wants; he represents you, not himself, at these senate meetings.

Edward D. Mansur

Anita deserves respect

To the Editor:

While reading Niel Moeller's brilliant satirical commentary on Anita Bryant, one must pause to wonder what motivates the author to hurl down such invective "from on high."

It is impossible to determine whether Mr. Moeller has a personal stake in the gay liberation movement, for while passing judgement on the sexual practices of others, he is reluctant to admit to any of his own.

I suspect that what truly motivates Niel is the powerful emnity that we all feel for a strong ideological adversary. An adversary strong enough to risk bearing the brunt of a thousand Johnny Carson jokes and ten thousand editorials like Mr. Moellers, all to speak out for what she believes in. An adversary of such determination that she would risk a professional career, her livelihood, to speak out for what she believes is right. There is no blame in fearing and respecting such a person.

And yet, curiously enough, the criticism directed at Ms. Bryant these days never seems to get above the level of personal slurs, and sophomoric puns. In vain, I have searched for a newspaper article that explores the complexities of homosexuality in a mature and thoughtful fashion.

Perhaps the great wrong that Anita Bryant committed, and that for which she surely will hang, is that she has dared to be different. For in an age when homosexuality is considered to be acceptable after as little thought as when homosexuality was condemned, Ms. Bryant refuses to think the same way everyone else does.

"All I can say to Anita Bryant is Good Luck," wrote Mr. Moeller. Well, I can't say anything to Anita Bryant. Because of her opinions, she would never be allowed on campus.

The return of people power

b.j. roche

"We've got the power!"
Crowd of twenty five hundred at Saturday's rally at Kent State,
"You've got our pies too!"
Aaron Kaye, yippie.

Strange bedfellow indeed.

Frieda Kreitner, 50 year old housewife from Cleveland was there. So was Aaron Kaye, alias the Pie Man, who has pied such luminaries at Abe Beame, Phylis Shlafly, and E. Howard Hunt. And Bill Kunstler was there, allegedly attired in a bullet proof vest.

They were three of the hundreds who had made the political pilgrimage to Kent State last weekend. The demonstration was in protest of the building of a gymnasium on the ground where National Guard Troops opened fire on students seven years ago. And liberal democracy being what it is, each attendant came with his-her own political rap on the subject. Nevertheless, the differences among the Revolutionary Student Brigade the Spartacus Union, Alumni of Kent State, the vegetarians and the carnivores, ivy leaguers and state schoolers, anarchists, communists and young democrats were all laid aside long enough to create an environment of enthusiasm, support and hope.

You can put your fingertips through the bullethole in a sculpture atop Blanket Hill, although I didn't try. It's much more difficult than it first appears.

And the plowing up of the land has begun, but it's still not too late to sod it over without too much change in the original site. As of last weekend it wasn't too late to stop.

The Revolutionary Student Brigade organized the trip from Amherst, and two busloads of people left the Campus Center Friday evening. Before leaving, ten "affinity groups" of eight persons each were formed. Each group included a student who had been to Kent State previously, who acted as historian, legal advisor and general information person. The Brigade should be commended for its organization, as should the Student Senate for its funding. UMass was the envy of the higher priced spreads, as it was the only school which provided almost total funding for the trip.

Those attending from UMass were not raving radicals; not all agreed with the Brigade's politics. Though the analysis of the Kent State situation varied, all recognized that there is something wrong here. The demonstration was a statement of that belief.

Perhaps if anything, Kent State has given us something to stand up for. After years of ambiguities and tenuousness, the young people of the nation are needed again. The call has been confused by the political motives of radicals and conservatives alike; nevertheless, it is up to the individual to sort out his-her feelings and examine his-her political priorities. It is a responsibility with which most of us are unfamiliar, having been born later than our counterparts of the sixties. The changes of the seventies reflect and compensate for that shakiness.

The use of affinity groups is one such change; the individual is important, but not totally alone. As part of an affinity group I was one in 2500 last weekend, but I was also one of eight very different and interesting people. Hence, an experience which could have been quite scary if I had gone it alone became more fun, more informative and less risky.

The rally was highlighted by a short speech by Bill Kunstler announcing the suit against Kent State President Brage Golding and the Grand Jury which is reportedly investigating the leaders of the May 4 Coalition, who had organized the rally.

After a couple of hours of speakers the march began around campus, circling back to its origin point.

As the march arrived back to the rally site a recording of "Ohio" was played on the podium's loudspeakers. The effect was at once chilling and enraging. Up the hill lay the site, and the decision as to whether to occupy the land had yet to be made, officially anyway.

The front of the otherwise orderly march began running up the hill to the chain link fence, which students, faces covered with bandanas, had begun to pull down.

A tide of people swarmed onto the site, muddier than usual from the light rain that had been falling. In the end, a group of half a dozen students sat triumphantly atop a yellow earthmover. Their faces were covered with bandanas as they made speeches from atop the monstrous dozer. As they spoke, two people spray painted "We won't forgive or forget" on the machine.

It had been a victory by default, as few police were to be seen at the site until the speeches had been finished. As students were leaving peacefully a crew of about six riot police were seeing that they kept on going.

I sat down for a breather after the rally before heading back to the bus, and it was then my pleasure to meet Jamal the gypsy, who was a great fan of Taj Mahal (a UMass alumnus). We talked and I asked him what he had thought of the day.

He was optimistic. "If you can make things crumble in a police state like Ohio, you can do it in the entire country. I really believe that."

We exchanged goodbyes and I went to catch up with my group. The sun was coming out and I looked up to see the clouds moving on. From the corner of my eye I noticed a police officer on the roof of a nearby building with a movie camera aimed at me, shooting.

Pot-smokers and capitalists

By STEPHEN A. MODENA

It is a well worn truth that the capitalists are our oppressors. The truth of it is clear as the print in Collegian articles and supplements which tell us so. Sometimes it is couched in the tight rhetoric of a Revolutionary-Student Brigade letter to the editor; sometimes in the people-ese style of Nkrumah Lumumba Olinga of Nummo News.

This short article will dare to be pro-capitalist in a very leftist, hand-wringing atmosphere. Some people might even see some logic in it.

Capitalism at any level, as I personally understand it, operates on a speculative basis. Someone gets a bright idea or has an attack of intuition. He-she calculates how much gain there is to be made if money is laid out now, versus how much will come back if the idea or venture works.

That is how gasoline arrives at the pump ready to fuel your car or food at the co-op to fuel your body.

I can discuss the operation of capitalism at any level for illustrative purposes since any RSB member would readily swear on a stack of Mao's Sayings that capitalism is a total rip-off from top to bottom, everywhere, anytime.

Any capitalist likes to estimate the risk involved in lending his-her money to a stranger. How many strangers have you lent money to lately? Taxes don't count.

Now, let's take a look at the last joint you smoked and how it may have arrived to you. So you bought less than an ounce from a good friend and he-she let you smoke some before CASH payment, right? You know that person made something on it, but the price was right for that beautiful stuff. Besides, he-she gets the stuff on a trip out-of-state every two weeks and someone has to pay for gas and just living. Anyway, you are a steady customer and the cops aren't too hard locally, so the risk is low here and the price isn't a "rip-off". Therefore, it is understood that price will vary depending on quantity, quality, availability, and the chance of getting busted and confiscated.

That out-of-state buy is likely to have passed through a number of hands in the distribution system since it landed on the coast of Maine. But those are all quantity deals and each finger that touches it gets a few pennies an ounce mark up adjusted to the same conditions as above.

Let's stop for a second. If you're buying some stuff for five bucks, there's no hassle. But, if you have got to lay out $20,000 CASH because they won't sell in a lot smaller than that, where do you get the money?

From a bank, you get the money. Maybe not the Chase Manhattan, but a bank anyway. Now if this bank "red-lines" you, you can't bitch to the state anti-discrimination commission, can you? You understand that he-she only wants to protect his-her investment and there is nothing personal or anything like that involved. It's unfair, but usually capitalists have to think that you will really score big; and the return on the investment that they set definitely violates the usuary laws (state interest ceilings).

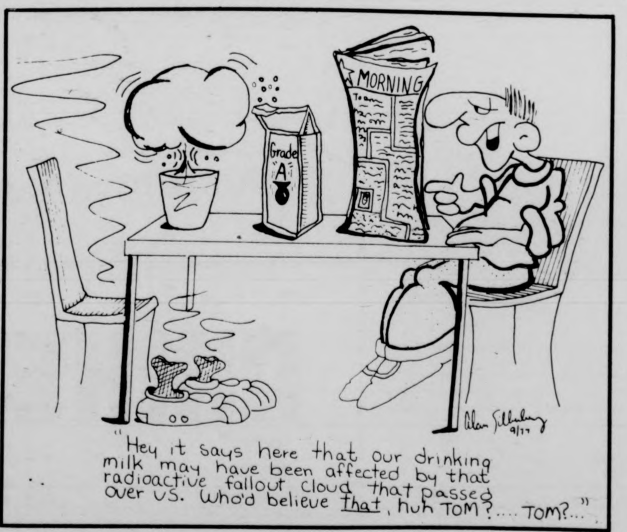
Now think all the way back to the grower, that peasant in the highlands of Haiti who grows the stuff because the police will kill him if he doesn't. If he got paid just 10 per cent of the final street value of what he grows in one season, he'd be OK. He is really getting ripped so you can smoke a joint.

The vicious capitalists of the story would tell you straight to your face that everyone has to make a living. The peasant is lucky that he was chosen to grow the stuff, because he was starving before anyhow, given the government and the impoverishment of Haiti.

The RSB would legalize the stuff, destroy the blackmarket by instituting a state co-operative, and the peasant would be "looked after" like in Cuba.

However, the facts of today are: marijuana growing and distribution is a growing investment area with increasing demand for quantity and quality. Nonetheless, it is still a speculative investment constantly demanding in the inflow of more new, high-risk capital.

In short, smoking a joint fires a blood-sucking profiteering adventure in the best tradition of the Industrial Revolution, never stopping to count the social casualties among the oppressed. Where are your principles?



"Hey it says here that our drinking milk may have been affected by that radioactive fallout cloud that passed over us. Who'd believe that, huh TOM?.... TOM?..."

'Kojak' needed for testimony

MIAMI [UPI] – A defense attorney plans to use television violence as grounds for acquittal of a 15-year-old youth charged with murder who has been a virtual TV addict for the past 10 years.

The trial of Ronney Zamora, accused in the shooting death of an elderly woman, opened yesterday with jury selection.

His attorney, Ellis Rubin, has pleaded Zamora "not guilty by reason of insanity because of his intoxication with television violence."

Circuit Judge Paul Baker previously ruled he will allow the novel devense, but warned Rubin, "I will not permit testimony on how television violence will affect children in general.

"There is no question that the effects of television violence is a new defense and I'll not preclude the defense, but I'm only concerned with how it affects this defendent in this case," he said.

Baker also said he will allow defense testimony from Telly Savalas, star of the television show "Kojak." Savalas, a critic of television violence, was subpoenaed by Rubin during a visit to Miami Sept. 17.

Zamora is accused of first degree murder in the shooting death June 4 of Mrs. Elinor Haggart, 83.

She was found shot to death in her Miami Beach home, which is next door to Zamora's. Pathologists said she died of one gunshot wound to the head, inflicted by her .32 caliber pistol.

A co-defendant, Darrell Agrella, also 15, will be tried separately in November.

Zamora's mother, Yolanda, said in a court deposition she would wake up in the middle of the night and find her son in front of the television set. She said she would send him to bed time after time, but he would always return almost immediately. In the morning, she said, she would find him asleep on the floor in front of the set.

Mrs. Zamora said her son once asked his father to shave his head like Savalas and acknowledged "Kojak" was his favorite show.

She said her son's fascination with television started at age 5 when a baby sitter put him in front of the set and forgot about him.

Middle East peace is hopeful

UNITED NATIONS [UPI] – Many of the world's most prominent diplomats came to New York yesterday in hopeful search of breakthroughs on peace in the Middle East and the transition to black majority rule in Rhodesia.

But Don Jamieson, Canada's secretary of state for external affairs, told the opening general debate of the 1977 U.N. General Assembly that the global body's record in solving problems is poor and that some of the world's headaches are even bigger and more dangerous than a year ago.

Secretary of State Cyrus vance set talks with Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan and U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim. Egyptian Foreign Minister Ismail Fahmi was waiting for a private chat with Vance.

Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko was scheduled as the first of the superpower delegates to speak. His address today could include comment on the U.S.-Soviet decision to continue observing the 1972 strategic arms limitation agreement beyond its Oct. 3 expiration.

Most delegates from the 149 U.N. member nations concentrated on a pair of weekend developments:

– Israel agreed to a U.S. proposal that Palestinian representatives be included in a pan-Arab delegation at any reconvened Middle East peace talks in Geneva. But Fahmi then said any such talks would have to include the Palestine Liberation Organization.

– Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith said in Salisbury he may allow blacks to join the Rhodesian army they have fought for five years. Smith previously had turned down such a proposal, contained in a new U.S.-British plan.

Israel said any Palestinians in an Arab delegation at Geneva cannot be PLO members. But without the guerrilla group, Fahmi told reporters, such a pan-Arab delegation "will be a non-starter."

WMECO is under question

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. [UPI] – Rep. Richard P. Roche, D-Springfield, yesterday asked the state Department of Utilities to investigate whether Western Massachusetts Electric Co. illegally billed consumers for political activities.

"The Department of Public Utilities should consider asking WMECO, as well as other utilities, to make available reports providing individual accounting of all contributions to support or oppose political referenda," Roche said.

He earlier said WMECO had illegally charged its customers "tens of thousands of dollars for political and other purposes." The utility has denied any wrongdoing.

But Roche said yesterday "any individual or business which has control over basic necessities, such as electricity, have an extra responsibility to be accountable to the public they serve. In order to end any doubts or arguments over the points I have raised, I would urge the DPU to conduct a vigorous, thorough and fair investigation into utility finances."

Dorms to hold fire drills

Within the next few weeks, total evacuation drills will be held in all dormitories on campus. The reasoning behind this drill is two-fold:

— to fulfill the University's obligations in meeting state law on school evacuation drills, and — to acquaint all residents with the sound of the fire alarm system, so that in the future when that sound is heard, they will leave the building.

This will mark the fourth time the drills will be performed. In the past, they were met with varying degrees of success. As in past years, the drills will be announced in all buildings via the public address system just before the fire horns are sounded.

Evacuation during a fire alarm was an important lesson learned by those in JQA Tower last semester. A Friday night party was held in the building. At 1 a.m. Saturday morning, someone pulled a false alarm. The fire trucks came, there was excitement for a while, and then everyone went to bed. At 3:30 a.m. a fire broke out in a room on the tenth floor. The occupants activated the building fire alarm system immediately. However, no one wanted to leave — thinking it was only another false alarm. As heat and heavy smoke rolled into the corridor, residents became acutely aware that there was indeed a fire, and began to evacuate.

The tenth floor now was being obscured by smoke, and some residents had to travel down the corridor. Others evacuating from above the tenth floor were met by heat and smoke in the stairwell. Since the stairwell is totally enclosed and shouldn't be subject to smoke, investigation revealed a fire door on the tenth floor was held open, permitting heat and smoke to be drawn into the large stairwell in much the same way as a chimney would work.

Some residents encountering these formidable conditions on upper floors had to be led to safety by counselors, concerned friends, and firefighters.

History has proven that fatal fires can occur in steel and concrete structures, even though the outer shell, wall, floor and ceiling members and non-combustible. It is the contents of these buildings that do burn. Desks, chairs, bedding, paper, books, posters, stereos, etc., are all combustible.

University policy states that in the event of a fire, the area around the fire should be sealed off, the building fire alarm activated, the 5-3111 emergency number called to report the fire location, and the building evacuated.

Last year, 70 false alarms caused hundreds of students and staff to be inconvenienced. As more and more false alarms are registered, the University population becomes apathetic towards evacuations.

A false alarm is a criminal offense, and the responsible party can receive a jail sentence, a stiff fine, and be removed from the University academically.

Fire kills 12,000 people a year in the United States and injures several million more. The next fatal fire could be here at UMass. When the fire horn sounds, take it seriously and evacuate. It may save your life.

Sports in Brief

Sox, Jays halted

BOSTON [UPI] — The scheduled game between the Boston Red Sox and Toronto Blue Jays was postponed by rain last night after the Blue Jays finished batting in the top of the first inning.

The game was re-scheduled as part of a twi-night doubleheader beginning at 5 p.m. tonight. Umpires waited over an hour for showers to subside before deciding to call the game.

The Blue Jays loaded the bases against Luis Tiant in the first inning on a double by Bob Bailor and a pair of walks, but failed to score. Tiant was listed as a possible starter along with Bob Stanley for the second game of Tuesday night's doubleheader. Don Aase will start the opener for Boston. The Toronto pitchers will be Jeff Byrd and Dave Lemanczyk.

Yanks win, 4-2

NEW YORK [UPI] — Thurman Munson singled in the decisive run in the fourth inning and Sparky Lyle pitched three shutout innings in his 69th relief appearance of the season tonight, leading the New York Yankees to a 4-2 victory over the Cleveland Indians.

The Yankees' fourth straight win gave them a 3½ game lead over the Boston Red Sox and a four-game lead over the Baltimore Orioles, both of whom were idle and reduced their magic number for clinching the American League Eastern Division title to four.

Munson delivered the game-winning hit with two out in the fourth after Bucky Dent reached first on an infield single and stole second base. Loser Don Hood struck out Willie Randolph and Graig Nettles but Munson then singled through the left side of the infield to drive in Dent.

'84 games in L.A.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. [AP] — The city of Los Angeles, stressing its spartan bid to the end, was named over New York Sunday to be the American host for the 1984 Summer Olympic Games.

The U.S. Olympic Committee, meeting only briefly in secret after hearing the final presentations from each city, voted 55-39 to accept the proposal of Los Angeles, which last staged the Olympic Games in the United States in 1932. The USOC decision virtually assures the California city that it will stage the Games.

Mets get Medich

NEW YORK [UPI] — The New York Mets Monday obtained right-handed pitcher George "Doc" Medich from the Seattle Mariners for the $20,000 waiver price.

Medich, who broke into baseball with the New York Yankees in 1973, was 1-0 at Seattle after compiling an 11-6 mark with Oakland. The A's obtained Medich from Pittsburgh in a nine-player spring training deal after he was 8-11 with the Pirates last season.

Women trek to Boston for Franklin Park clash

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's cross country team will face its biggest challenge of the dual meet season this afternoon when it travels to Franklin Park in Dorchester to battle Radcliffe and Brandeis.

The women will be sharing the fairways and sidewalks around the Franklin Park Golf Course with the men's varsity and JV teams, who will be running Providence and Harvard.

The meet will be run over the 3.0 mile loop also used by the JV's. Coach Charlotte Lettis said it would probably be in "awful shape — a slow course," after the last ten or so days of rain.

Head coach Ken O'Brien said Brandeis would probably have pretty much the same squad as last year. They have two fairly good front runners, Donna Randle and Mona Milstein, who were 4th and 9th in last year's meet, won by UMass 23-58.

"They may not be as deep in the back, though," said head coach Ken O'Brien.

Radcliffe is expected to give the Minutewomen the most trouble, particularly out front where the Ivies have strengthened themselves dramatically with the addition of Johanna Foreman and Anne Sullivan.

Foreman has competed on numerous national teams in international competition, according to Lettis, and has run a 2:05 800 meters. She was second in the Massachusetts girls' state cross country meet, but may not be the strongest cross counnry runner on the team, Lettis said.

That distinction belongs to Anne Sullivan, who according to Lettis, won the Rhode Island state one and two mile titles in track, and the state cross country championship. She has run the two mile in 10:57 and has run 10 miles in 58 minutes.

Radcliffe was mediocre at best last year, but started to come on late in the season, and now have a year's experience behind it. UMass beat them 23-72 last year at Franklin Park.

UMass will be led by senior co-captain Jane Welzel, who is undefeated in two dual meets so far this year, and who broke the Williams course record by over a minute in her last race.

Two frosh sensations, Tina Francario and Priscilla "Dill" Wilson, and senior co-captain Sue Swartz and junior Deb Farmer, have provided meet winning depth in the first two outings.

Beth Collins has also cracked the front running group, and when healthy, Barb Callanan, Jo Chapman and Anne Bradshaw are all capable of running up front.

"This will be a tough meet for everyone," said Lettis. "We'll have to go out hard again, like we did against Williams. I think the women will have to be more conscious of places, rather than times, because the course will be slow.

"This will be a meet to show us what we need to work on for the New England's. I expect a tough meet."

The women will take the gun at 4:00 p.m. and will be attempting to raise their second to 4-0.

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27 - Born today, you are a highly individual person with strong self-determination. You find it difficult to work in any but a position of authority. Yet you are intelligent enough to recognize that you must learn to work in a suborindate capacity if you are ever to rise. You get along reasonably well with other people, and should be able to rise above your feelings about being an "underling" in the interest of serving your feelings of friendship.

Though a natural leader, you are inclined to overdo it, taking upon yourself many chores which should be delegated to others. You are quick to learn, however, and should discover that this inclination does not usually serve the interest of the project in general. Once this is learned success will come more quickly and more often.

You often grow impatient for results, putting pressures upon others without much thought for the pressures which they may already have. It is, however, to your credit, that should your actions be protested, you are willing and quick to lessen their burden.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 28

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22) — This is an excellent time to make contacts with those who can be influential on your behalf in career matters.

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21) — Don't turn your attention too completely to "visiting firemen." Take your own position on an issue and stick to it.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) — Unless you back up an idea with action, you will make no progress, no matter how creative or inventive you've been.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19) — If you are tactful in your approach to a new friend, you will soon find yourself in a favored position.

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18) — Business recently neglected should come in for more than its usual share of attention. Be deliberate in actions.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — To enjoy the end of the day, you must work during its beginning. Begin early to succeed by nightfall.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Plans for advancement may blur as you attempt to explain them to another. You may have to go back to the drawing board.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Afternoon is favorable to your interests. Employing morning hours in the interest of another will benefit you.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Be around when you're needed – especially where children are concerned. Overcome a threat of insubordination peaceably.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Enjoy yourself in the company of others late in the day. You may have to make choices, whether you want to or not.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22) — You may wish to slacken your efforts late in the afternoon. Remember, all work and no play may make you ill as well as dull!

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22) — Take time immediately for rest and relaxation. You may have been biting off more than enough to choke yourself!

Telander, Fallon cited as Yan Con standouts

UMass defensive end Steve Telander, Maine tailback Rudy DiPietro, Boston University kicker Ron Verrelli, and New Hampshire tailback Bill Coleman have been selected as the Yankee Conference defensive, offensive, kicker, and rookie players of the week following outstanding performances for their respective teams last Saturday.

Telander, a 6'3", 217 lb. senior from Rome, N.Y., was one of many defensive standouts for the Minutemen in their 17-0 triumph over Harvard. Telander had two sacks among his two four tackles and two assists, while recovering a fumble and causing two others with jarring tackles. He also caused a poor punt by pushing a blocker into the punter while playing three quarters of the game with a broken thumb.

DiPietro scored a touchdown and gained 194 yards in 34 rushing attempts as the Black Bears upended Central Connecticut, 45-20. His yards gained rushing established a new single game standard, surpassing his own record which he set last season.

Verilli was selected as MVP of the Beanpot game between the Terriers and Northeastern. He set a school record distance for a field goal (49 goals) as well as field goals kicked in a game (three). He scored 13 points in BU's 37-15 triumph.

Coleman gained 79 yards rushing in 19 carries and scored a touchdown as the Wildcats downed West Chester, 26-0. He also caught scoring passes of 49 and 12 yards from UNH quarterback Jeff Allen.

Honorable mention: Mike Fallon (UMass-QB), Ned Belardinelli (UConn-TB), Steve Tosches (URI-QB), Mike Hodgson (Me-TE), Dick Duffy (UNH-DB), Tom Marhefka (URI-LB), Maron Clark (UConn-QB), Dennis O'Connell (UConn-LB), Allen (UNH-QB).

Quinn, Arnold and Co. hit Franklin

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Celtic announcer Johnny Most would term today's cross-country meet with Providence and Harvard "World War III." Sports analyst Howard Cosell would express it as a "titantic struggle." Former TV showman Ed Sullivan would call it a "really big show."

Today at 3:30 at Franklin Park in Boston, Providence College, rated sixth in the nation by Track and Field News, hosts the Minutemen and Crimson.

"No question it is an important meet," said UMass coach Ken O'Brien. "Anytime you run against a national power like Providence, you want to do well. We will get another shot at Providence in the New England's and IC4A's, so if we beat them tomorrow, or they beat us, that doesn't mean that team has a superior edge. The teams are so close, personnel wise, you really can't predict the outcome."

This tri-meet features three teams with excellent frontrunners and good depth. However, Harvard, according to O'Brien, may be susceptible to depth problems in the fourth and fifth runners, due to injuries.

Like the Red Sox and the Yankees, both UMass and the Friars have "stars." For UMass, captain Mike Quinn and Stetson Arnold, both All-Americans, line up evenly against Providence's John Treacy and newcomer Gerry Deegan.

Last season Providence was invincible, stretching its undefeated streak to 38 dual meet victories over a four year period. The Friars were led by Treacy and Mike O'Shea who either alternated winning all the meets they ran in or finished first or second.

This year with O'Shea's absence, the Friars went out and recruited Ireland's two-mile record holder Gerry Deegan.

"Deegan, throughout the summer, was beating Treacy in long distance races. So Providence did not lose anything by O'Shea's absence. They just went out and got somebody better," said O'Brien.

Arnold, as a freshman and sophomore, ran with Treacy as a teammate and in his junior year decided to transfer to UMass. Before leaving Providence, he did manage to earn All-American status. However, Arnold had to sit out last year due to a mild case of hepatitis. He is fully recovered and should figure prominently in today's race.

With the apparent tradeoff between the frontrunners of both teams the meet will be determined by the finishes of each team's third, fourth, and fifth men. Providence, again by graduation, lost the services of John Savoie who was meet in and meet out almost guaranteed to be the team's third finisher.

"If Providence has a weakness, it's that the team's third, fourth, and fifth men are a little weaker," said O'Brien. "Losing Savoie hurt them. Last year our team was hurt by this but I feel we are stronger this year and can finish in a better position."

What it comes down to is which pack of runners finishes ahead of the others. For Providence, New England six-mile champion Dan Dillon along with Peter Crooke, Larry Reed, and Ed Hartnett, all members of last year's New England championship Friar team will match up against UMass's Kevin McCusker, co-captain Frank Carroll, Matt and Tom Wolff, and Lou Panaccione.

Cleveland Browns' quarterback Brian Sipe (17) find himself in a rather precarious position as New England linebacker Sam Hunt (50) rushes in to throw him for a loss in first half action last night.

Cockroft kicks, Pats fall

CLEVELAND [UPI] — Don Cockroft booted a 35-yard field goal at 10:15 into overtime last night to give the Cleveland Browns a 30-27 victory over the New England Patriots.

It was the Browns first overtime victory ever.

Cockroft earlier had booted a pair of 37-yard field goals, the last one giving the Browns a 27-24 lead over the Patriots with 55 seconds left in regulation time.

But New England's John Smith kicked a 34-yard field goal with no time remaining to tie the game 27-27. The Patriots moved 81 yards in seven plays, including a key third-down pass from Steve Grogan to Russ Francis for 28 yards to the Cleveland 17 with one second left.

The Browns had gone ahead after linebacker Charlie Hall intercepted a Steve Grogan pass intended for tight end Francis with 2:11 in the regulation time. Hall snagged the ball at the New England 30 and was tackled at the 27. Cockroft followed with a 37-yard field to give the Browns a short-lived 27-24 lead.

Brian Sipe connected on 16-of-23 passes for 165 yards and two touchdowns in regulation and Grogan completed 15-of-23 for 172 yards and two TDs.

The Browns' first touchdown came in the first quarter on a 5-yard pass from scatback Greg Pruitt to running back Brian Duncan. The other Cleveland tally came on a 26-yard pass from Sipe to Gary Parris with 7:20 left in the third period to bring the Browns within 17-14.

The also-rans have their say

For some, the funeral was weeks, even months ago.

And there were those that were dead before their season had begun.

But as the baseball season (basketball and hockey to get underway shortly) winds and grinds to a close, excuses for what was supposed to happen but never quite materialized, can now be expounded upon. Or what did happen?

Though some of them may not be relatively correct, they may be precise in theory.

Reasons (otherwise called excuses) why the Sox won second or third place in AL East and blew their second straight pennant:

Don Zimmer: "Well I think we had to play too rough a schedule. How can anyone expect us to do well in Yankee Stadium? Look what happened the last time we played a series there. Balls ordinarily hit in centerfield in Fenway were long outs up there. That's inhuman. And illegal. They should be forced by the league to move their fences in — especially when we come to town."

George Scott: "Not enough Blacks on the team. This team has always been run by a racist organization. Personally, I hope someone decent buys the team." (Note: Scott was traded to the Milwaukee Brewers immediately following his statement. The management felt he was a dangerous influence on the other two Blacks employed by the Sox, and was therefore a troublemaker. Billy Conigliaro is being returned to the Sox.)

Don Aase: "Pitching. That's where we blew it. I should've been brought up early in the season. I could've won the Cy Young Award. And Bill (Lee) should've pitched more often, even if Zim doesn't like him. Sure he's a little spacey, but at least he doesn't give up homers as though they were early Christmas presents."

Capt. Carl Yastrzemski: "It's those sneaky Yankees fault. All season, we counted on them choking. With the dissension on that team, there's no way they should've played this good all season. We choked instead of them. Maybe we should've gotten (Dave) Kingman for our series with them." Only goes to show you, you can't trust anyone from New York!"

Why-How the Yankees won the AL east pennant:

(Reggie) Jackson: "I have done it all. My timely hitting, only exceeded by my wonderful fielding, has gotten us (Yanks) where we are now. Next year I'm going to ask for a raise, not to mention a clause stating the exporting of one homerun-strikeout king (Kingman) who could hurt my status as a team leader. But how can I get rid of that glory hog, what-his-name, Thurmostat Munson?"

The hat-trick choke (the three stooges?):

Texas, Chicago, Minnesota. At one point late in the season, they and Kansas City's Royals were within 1½ games of each other in the AL West race. Currently, Texas and Chicago are still within 1½ games of each other, while KC is 10 up. Forget the White Sox (like their Red counterpart).

Chicago's Oscar Gamble: "I thought we were only three games back with seven games to go. I dunno. I think I got us confused with the Sox from that other league (AL East). I dunno. I'm from New York, I don't wanna get involved."

Texas' Bert Campaneris: "It's that kid, Randle's (Lenny) fault. Once he hit our manager early in the season, it demoralized the whole team. Next thing you know not only he is gone, but we've got another manager. And another. And another. Got so I didn't know who I was playing for. Hey, I can't talk to you anymore; I've gotta put my green-gold-white uniform on — got a game against the Rangers."

Minnesota's Rod Carew: "We never expected to win the division. And never expect to in the future either. This state (Minnesota) is lousy for sports. We can't play baseball. Don't have a basketball team. Our North Stars play to tie. And the Vikings couldn't win a Super Bowl game if their opponent left at halftime."

Why not the Pirates:

Pittsburgh's Bruce Kison: "Too many Blacks and Hispanic peoples. It's a well-known farce that Blacks are only good in basketball. Look at the '76'ers. What's that you say — I'm on the air now — oh, O.K. Uh, gee, I don't know how come we lost the pennant. Because Philly won it? I dunno. I'm from New York. I don't wanna get involved."

How come the LA Dodgers?

Cincy's Mr. Hustle — Pete Rose: "Hey, don't ask me. As long as I have a good season, I couldn't care less if we end up behind the Braves (Atlanta). I don't mind finishing second."

Added Johnny Bench: "Personally, I've got restaurants to run. I don't want to be freezing my --- off sitting behind home plate with snow coming down when I could be home watching the Bengals. Plus I got bored playing the Yankees last year in the Series. Let someone else beat 'em."

New students required to take a language

Proficiency test only exemption

By MEGAN O'REILLY
Collegian Staff

The College of Arts and Sciences faculty last night threw out a motion to reconsider the current language requirement which was adopted at a poorly-attended faculty meeting last spring.

The current language department states that every CAS student must either pass a 140 level foreign language course or a proficiency test administered by the University. No exemptions based on high school foreign language credit will be granted.

The motion of reconsideration submitted by physics professor Morton Sternheim was voted down 97-42, well under the majority would have need to pass.

The entire controversy over the current language requirement is a result of a petition recently circulated by Sternheim and signed by 29 CAS faculty members who were dissatisfied with the manner in which the current language requirement was adopted. "Although the requirement adoption which was of major importance was democratic in legality," said Sternheim, "It was not in spirit as a great majority of faculty members were not present. The motion was not well publicized."

Heated debate surrounded the motion, its main purpose, according to Sternheim, was to allow a majority of the faculty to vote for his or her preference of three options regarding the language requirement. The options were to create a departmental option of defining a language requirement for their majors, 2)reinstatement of the language requirement in effect prior to May 3, or 3)to continue the current language requirement in effect, adopted May 3.

Various members of the foreign language department and CAS curriculum chairman Julius Lester interpreted the motion as a display of open hostility to foreign language and culture. "If the departments can decide that a foreign language requirement is not necessary, then what about the natural science requirements? Such action would transform the University into nothing more than a glorified community college."

Lester, whose curriculum committee originally proposed the current language requirement at last spring's meeting, supports the college's more stringent standards, reasoning that "no other colleges grant requirement exemptions based on credit received a high school."

Sternheim later replied that no other college requires its majors to take an examination to demonstrate ability in a requirement either.

The well-attended meeting of 175 persons was plagued by constant confusion and misunderstanding. It was believed that a controversial proposal to vote on the motion by mail ballot was a procedural aspect of Sternheim's motion. Sternheim realized that this proposal was not specified on his motion after the CAS faculty had already voted it down.

The faculty passed a motion to send to the curriculum committee a proposal for the institution a special degree which would award a BA or BS superior to those students who have demonstrated intermediate proficiency in foreign language and in each of the three core areas, and to those who have already completed the foreign language requirement as it existed prior to the May 3 vote was also passed.

The motion was passed based on information handed out on in a memorandum at the beginning of the meeting and support by Professor DuFau, French department head. There was almost no debate on the motion whatsoever.

Election results incomplete

Voting irregularities cited

Union slate dominates new senate

By JON KLEIN Collegian Staff

The slate of students supporting the unionization effort elected all of its members while the "non-affiliated" slate won the remaining eight seats in the commuter branch of the student senate elections held last night and Monday.

One hundred thirteen senate seats were contested in the election. The Board of Governors results were not available at press time.

Ten per cent of the eligible commuter voters cast their ballots, and 25 per cent of the Greek and dormitory students also voted.

Voting irregularities were reported in Johnson, Field and Butterfield dorms. The problem at Field house was that there were no student senate ballots, only Board of Governors. Johnson had no one to man the ballot boxes so no election was held.

Field and Johnson houses will hold their elections as soon as possible, probably next Monday or Tuesday, according to Janice Perry, co-chairperson of the Student Government Association (SGA) Government Affairs Committee. There is also the possibility the election will be held one day only.

Butterfield chose to elect a dorm council along the lines of government structure planned under the proposed union. Butterfield will send a representative from the council as a spokesperson in the senate.

Government Affairs Committee co-chairperson Don M. Bishop said "the biggest problem is manpower". The lack of manpower was due in part of the fact that the elections were held early in semester before new Government Affairs people were chosen, he said. The tables were being run by dorm councils, senate volunteers and people in the dorm.

If any of the results are contested the candidate must first appeal to the Government Affairs Committee. After that they may appeal to the floor of the senate rather than the student attorney general as a last resort. Perry said she did not "expect problems."

UMASS BALLOT BOX

Eight of the 12 "non-affiliated" candidates were elected from the commuters. The election matched union supporters against those "who thought that there were other important issues" in the words of SGA Co-President Jon Hite. Others felt the non-union slate was in fact anti-union.

The non-affiliated slate was informally organized by a group of people including Hite and former SGA president Paul Cronin. These people found others interested in running on a slate not committed to any particular issue.

The union slate was organized by incumbent senators as well as those not usually associated with student government, but involved in the unionization effort. The senators convinced the others the best way to bring about unionization was by running for the senate with the incumbents for the senate.

The following are the winners and the dorms they represent. Other dorm results will be posed in the student senate office and announced at tonight's senate meeting:

Butterfield — Marie Smith; Crampton — Patricia Malumphy; Mary D. Lincoln — Charles Triangle; Thoreau — Bob Wheaton, Pierpoint — Anderson and Barenburg; Wheeler — Jay Flynn.

The following are the winners of the commuter election. They are listed with their total votes following:

Birmingham, 145: Foley, 144; Levetan, 143; Tarpinian, 136; Whelan, 133; Austen, 129; Betty Doyle, 134; Moore, 129; Hank Doyle, 124; O'Toole, 122; Gagne, 129; Cronin, 118; Kropp, 113; Kippax, 113; Souweine, 112; Balfour, 111; Kantor, 110; Martus, 101; Connolly, 100; Sasaki, 100; Epstein, 102; Melia, 120; Corrivegu, 93; Kelly, 93; Brown, 74; Campbell, 74; Dion, 77; Milender, 83; Young, 89, Aleis, 93.

Honorable Mention: Kenney, 71; Paulin, 62; Raymond, 37; Luebano, 60; Furier, 51; McGuire, 24; McEnroe, 35; Benson, 66; Bennet, 66; Smerling, 38; Schramm, 68; Cohler, 43.

Hampshire deals with ✝burnings

Meeting set tomorrow

By BETH SEGERS
Collegian Staff

The Hampshire College Third World Community yesterday said it "reserves the right to deal with the perpetrators (of any more racial incidents) by any means necessary and by its own choosing."

The Third World community released its statement in response to a cross burning incident last Saturday night outside a Third World gathering.

"The cross burning was the most blatant and despicable act of racist violence ever perpetrated on the Hampshire campus," the Third World statement read.

Hampshire College President Adelle Smith Simmons told the Collegian last night she will appoint a special committee to determine who is responsible for the cross burning. Simmons also said she will meet on Thursday afternoon at 4:30 with college faculty, staff and students to discuss the incident.

A makeshift wooden cross was placed and set afire at 11:45 Saturday night outside Merrill B. Lounge, where members of the Third World community were holding a social gathering. The fire was already extinguished by inclement weather before fire fighters arrived at the scene, a Hampshire College spokesperson said.

"This act, whether intended as a prank or not, cannot be tolerated on Hampshire property," said Simmons. "The symbol of the burning cross represents the worst aspects of racism that, unfortunately, continue to exist in our society."

The Hampshire Third World community said the cross burning act was "designed to instill fear and to warn the Third World students that it is only the beginning of further acts of violence to be inflicted on them in the future."

Simmons called upon every member of the Hampshire College community "to accept responsibility for ensuring that similar actions do not occur again at Hampshire College."

Simmons said "Hampshire, as an educational institution, has a particular obligation to strive to end racism in this society.

"I deplore such an action and am personally deeply disappointed that such an act took place on Hampshire campus," Simmons said.

Southwest to hold carnival

Money woes emphasized

By MATHEW KOVARY
Collegian Staff

The Southwest Assembly (SWA) last night voted to take steps to improve its financial difficulties by sponsoring a carnival Oct. 20-23 in Southwest, the first carnival to be held on campus, according to Joni Mersky, carnival coordinator.

"During the first two weeks of school the assembly spent $9,000 and we have the same amount left for the rest of the year," Diana Fessenden, SWA president said. "Something has to be done."

The carnival is expected to net $4,000, according to Mersky.

"There will be 2,000 helium balloons, some clowns and a dozen rides, including a tilt-a-world, a round-up and a ferris wheel," Mersky said. "The profits will be used for other Southwest events," she said.

In the past the SWA has been known as a "light touch" among non-Southwest groups looking for sponsors, according to Bonnie Ward, SWA treasurer. "Our image as a light touch has got to stop," she said.

The budget crunch was announced to assembly members one week after they turned down a request for $250 by the Revolutionary Student Brigade to bus UMass students to Kent State in protest against the building of a new gymnasium.

"When considering bills for the rest of the year, members of the assembly should exercise fiscal prudence," Gregory Maynard, SWA co-treasurer said. "We're in good shape but we have to keep our priorities clear."

In other action, the assembly plans to sponsor a movie show every two weeks at the Hampden Center for the Performing Arts, in an effort to boost finances and provide recreation.

The Social and Cultural Programs Committee, headed by John Adams dorm resident Rick Orlando, will chose the movies and anyone interested in working on the committee is welcome.

A free concert, featuring James Montgomery and Chris Rhodes, is scheduled tomorrow on the horseshoe in Southwest. Rain date will be 2 p.m. the following day.

Hatch cuts schedule

By JIM KASSNER
Collegian Staff

Students accustomed to a late afternoon coffee, tea, or gossip break in the Hatch, will soon be forced to vacate that venerable lounge.

Effective Sept. 30, the Hatchet and Pipe Lounge, affectionately called the Hatch, close at 3 p.m.

Campus Center Food Services Director Jack McGill says the Hatch just doesn't make enough money between the hours of 3 and 6:30 p.m. to justify its operation during that time.

"The costs of running the Hatch were more than was being generated in revenues," McGill said yesterday. "There's just no business between 3 and 6 p.m."

Although its doors are now bolted at 6:30 p.m., it was not too long ago that the Hatch was open until 10 p.m. When the Coffee Shop in the Campus Center complex opened in 1970, the Hatch's regular crowd began to dwindle. And finally in the spring of 1973, the Hatch began closing at 7:30 p.m.

In addition, McGill said, since the Hatch is basically a "commuter lounge", most commuters leave campus around 3 or 4 p.m. when classes are finished.

"The dining room will remain open until 6:30 p.m. for people who want to study," McGill said, "but nobody will probably use it anyway. But we'll try it and see how it works out."

According to McGill, the Hatch was barely making enough money during the late afternoon hours to cover the cost of one full-time supervisor.

"We didn't even make enough money to cover the wages of the five student employes who work during those hours," McGill said.

But, unlike 1973 when several student employes were laid off due to the early closing, McGill says no student jobs will be lost.

"The students working in the Hatch during the afternoon hours will be absorbed into other food services areas," McGill said.

"We tried leaving it (the Hatch) open late last year during finals," McGill continued, "but I think only about six people used it."

So it appears, for the time being anyway, that students, professors, and teaching assistants of Hatch 101—Introduction to Procrastination — will have to find classroom space elsewhere.

Car thefts plague lots

By JACK GRAVELL
Collegian Staff

A rash of auto break-ins and thefts has swept the campus in the past week with at least eight incidents involving between $75 and $430 damage, according to campus police.

In addition, two cars were stolen and later recovered.

Director of Public Safety, Saul L. Chafin said yesterday all car owners should check their cars periodically to avoid delay in case of theft. A UMass student's car was recovered Monday by the Springfield Police before the owner knew it was missing.

Records and a spare tire rim valued at $200 were stolen from a car parked in Fraternity-Sorority lot last week. In one of Southwest's parking lots, two radio speakers valued at $105 and some tapes were taken from a car.

Total damage and theft was estimated at $430 for a car parked in Lot 21. An 8-track tape deck, four speakers, and a camera were stolen. The roof was slashed. Chafin also recommended that students store valuables out of view.

Also, according to campus police, a 27-year-old Amherst man yesterday allegedly pulled a knife on a campus police officer who was pursuing the man in connection with the robbery of a woman's wallet in the Fine Arts Center at 11:31 a.m. Bernard S. Chase of the Village Inn, Amity St., was then apprehended at gunpoint.

Correction

The election results in yesterday's Collegian on Page 3 were for the Stockbridge freshman class, not for the Stockbridge Student Senate as reported.

SMU sues state on freezing order

BOSTON [AP] — Southeastern Massachusetts University has launched court action to force Beacon Hill officials to keep their hands off personnel decisions.

The suit, made public yesterday, is scheduled for a preliminary hearing in Suffolk Superior Court tomorrow.

Principal defendants are Administration Secretary John R. Buckley and Educational Affairs Secretary Paul Parks. SMU charged that Buckley and Parks have illegally imposed a hiring freeze because the school has not submitted a personnel stabilization plan showing how 38 jobs will be eliminated.

The action is viewed with interest by other schools, faced with the same showdown. An attempt several years ago by a predecessor of Buckley to veto a University of Massachusetts leasing agreement was thrown out by the state Supreme Court.

UMass President Robert Wood told Parks last week that he cannot find any law authorizing the secretary to order the school to submit a personnel stabilization plan.

While UMass has not yet gone into court on the issue, the state colleges were reported to be considering a suit similar to SMU's.

Buckley and Parks ordered the schools in August to file "attrition and stabilization plans." When SMU did not comply, a ban on all hiring was imposed.

The appeal by SMU for a restraining order nullifying the freeze contends that the action is illegal because it violates the school's fiscal autonomy. The litigation asks the court to force Buckley, Parks and others to process personnel forms and to declare the stabilization directive for higher education invalid.

Buckley recently imposed a similar freeze on agencies within his own secretariat. The freeze was lifted last week when a stabilization plan was filed, a Buckley aide said.

The stabilization plan is the key to Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' stated goal of reducing the number of state workers by 3,000. The governor wants the cutback to be effective in July, two months before his expected primary contest for renomination.

Because of fiscal autonomy, only SMU trustees can make the personnel decisions inherent in the directive from Buckley and Parks, the court suit argues. Under fiscal autonomy, schools have broad powers in personnel and spending decisions.

The hiring freeze threatens, according to the SMU petition, to do irreparable harm to the school, its students and employes.

Reps void abortion financing

WASHINGTON [AP]— The House rejected yesterday a proposal to use federal funds for abortions in cases of rape, incest or medical necessity, clearing the way for a compromise with the Senate on abortion and passage of a $60.2 billion social legislation bill.

By a vote of 252 to 164, House members rejected a resolution that would have endorsed the abortion language already agreed to by the Senate.

The lopsided defeat was far short of the two-thirds majority needed for the House to adopt the Senate's more liberal approach to abortion funding.

The House position is that federal money should be spent on abortions only when a woman's life is jeopardized by a full-term pregnancy.

House and Senate conferees are now expected to resume efforts to reach a compromise on the volatile issue.

Senate conferees had demanded the vote by the House and walked out of a conference after House members refused to agree to one. The senators maintained that their chamber had twice rejected the House position on abortion.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill had predicted that the House would not accept the Senate's language, but he also said that Senate leaders were confident that even if the language were defeated, the abortion question could be resolved within 48 hours.

The dispute by the House and Senate conferees was delaying passage of an appropriations bill for the departments of Labor and Health, Education and Welfare. Current funding for those agencies runs out on Friday.

Parents reject proposal

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Pregnancy-related death and injury among poor women are likely to increase with the withdrawal of public funds for abortions, Planned Parenthood said in a report yesterday.

Federal funds for all but life-threatening pregnancies were cut off Aug. 4 under legislation which expires Saturday. Congress was expected to act this week on a new version of the anti-abortion law which Planned Parenthood opposes.

"Pregnancy-related mortality and morbidity, which have steeply declined in this decade, are likely to rise again, with the poor, the black and the young the main victims," said Planned Parenthood's Alan Guttmacher Institute in an analysis of Department of Health, Education and Welfare data.

The ban would cause increased death and injury among poor women from botched, illegal and late abortions and increases in unwanted children, illegitimate births among teenagers, and social costs.

It said at least 261,000 low income women — 85 per cent of them welfare mothers — obtained government subsidized abortions last year at a cost of $61 million.

The average cost of an abortion in the United States last year was $280 — or $42 more than the average monthly welfare payment for a welfare family, Planned Parenthood said.

The cost of an abortion is less than monthly family welfare payments in only 13 states and the District of Columbia.

Lawlor visits class

By RICHARD LENIHAN
Collegian Staff

The winner in last week's Northampton School Committee primary last night stated before a Project Ten Practicum in city politics he felt he would have won by a much wider margin had it not been for bad weather.

John D. Lawlor, who finished first in a field of three, addressed his talk to the subject of campaign strategies. Explaining his victory, he said, "We spent more time listing and developing issues, which is supposedly not popular any more."

Lawlor went against another political tradition by not going door-to-door, opting instead to concentrate on candidates' nights, factory appearances and bingo nights.

"The only reason I vetoed the door-to-door campaign is that everyone else was doing it," he said. "It becomes a matter of over-saturation. It was a calculated risk and I think this time it worked out."

Lawlor, who has been active in Northampton politics since 1952, said his name was a liability as well as an asset. Responding to the question of voter familiarity, he said, "While you pick up friends you also, by taking stands, pick up enemies."

He responded to accusations that he won last week because he is a member of a Northampton political "machine" by saying there are no real machines in Northampton. "Each candidate develops his own organization," he said.

Lawlor discussed the importance of elderly, female and ethnic voters to the election results. Although he would not say if the success of female candidates was due to a high turnout of female voters he did say, "Whether they (the voters) were female or not, they voted for female candidates."

Discussing voting among the elderly he said, "Transportation is no longer of primary concern among the elderly because of the large number of ballots filed early." He also said ethnic background was only important in certain wards.

While Lawlor was the clear winner of his race, there will be a recount to determine who will get the second spot on the ballot. Christine F. Grab, a Smith College student, beat out Robert P. Wolff, professor of philosophy at UMass, by 31 votes.

A poll of Northampton voters, taken by several members of the class before the election foreshadowed "two major upsets", according to instructor Ken Mosakowski. One was the loss of incumbent Mayor David W. Cramer and the other was the victory of Adeline Murray in the city clerk's race.

Project Ten, now known as the Inquiry Program, is an experimental program based in Pierpont House in Southwest. Students in the program learn through seminars, workshops, and tutorials. "City Politics" is a practicum in local politics. Students in the class gain experience by working in campaigns for various candidates in the area. Activities include polling, handing out pamphlets door-to-door and at the polls. Several students in the class had worked for Lawlor, and Mosakowski, said he thought it may have made the favorable difference in the outcome of the primary. Lawlor expressed his appreciation to the students for their help.

Holiday exams irk Jews

By MICHAEL McGRATH

A memo sent to the faculty by Provost Paul L. Puryear stating quizes and examinations should not be scheduled on Yom Kippur Day, Sept. 22, has created a misunderstanding, according to Thomas Chamberlain, scheduling officer.

Chamberlain said, "The words 'should not' does not mean the professor cannot give tests on this day but that he has been advised not to."

Some students, according to Pinky Batiste, co-president of the Student Government Association, thought no tests were to be given on this day and did not attend class because of their religious beliefs.

"As a result," said Batiste, "the students missed the tests given and are worried about the consequences."

Associate Provost Vere Chappell explained, "Both the administration and the faculty have had experience with this type of situation and we do have a general policy which should be followed, though there is no set law, because each professor has his own schedule to meet and may be forced to administer tests these days."

The procedure to follow, according to Chamberlain, is that any student who has religious intererence with his classes should make arrangements with the professor previous to the class. If arrangements cannot be made, the student should see Chamberlain, who will resolve the matter.

"If students come to us with problems, we attempt to help them, but only two students have contacted the administration in this case and as far as I know their problems have been solved," said Chamberlain.

The great white fear, affirmative action?

The case of Allan Bakke, a 37 year old white male, who charged the University of California medical school with 'reverse discrimination,' will reach the Supreme Court in October. Many view this case as the most important court hearing since the 1954, Brown vs. The Board of Education. Allan Bakke's case certainly warrants the attention of everyone, because the final decision of the court will definitely touch us all.

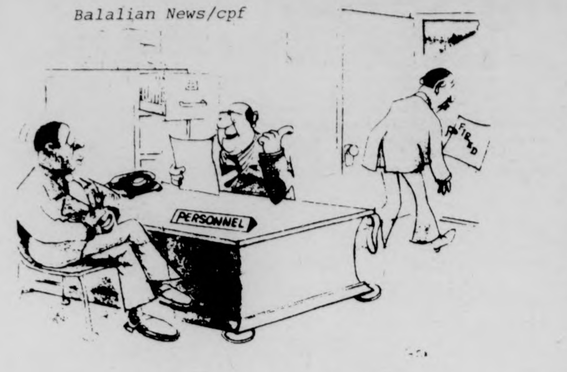
As Ronald Arena pointed out in the editorial section of Monday's Collegian, affirmative action does not guarantee, demand, or oversee that a certain number of blacks or women be hired by a given university or firm. The intention of affirmative action is to assure that a sincere effort be made by those universities and firms, to recruit, train, and hire qualified minorities.

Strangely enough, it seems to be the sincere-genuine clause of affirmative action, that is causing all the furor. If a sincere effort is to be made by respective schools and firms, then it stands to reason that some whites who normally might have gained entrance to graduate schools or job employment, now will not, due to the recruiting and hiring of qualified minorities.

Yet in the words of Arena, "should a citizen like Bakke, guilty of nothing more than being a white male, be stepped on in an attempt to make a path for minorities and women to the employment line?"

I too pose some questions. Should a tired old woman riding a bus, guilty of nothing more than being a black female, be arrested because she denied the laws of Jim Crow and failed to give up her seat to a white male? Should three little girls sitting in a Birmingham church in 1964, guilty of nothing more than being three little black girls, be dead now from a bomb hurled by whites into the church? Should the Scottsboro boys, guilty of nothing more than being nine black males, been incarcerated for a crime they never committed, all because of the false testimony of two white females who lied about being raped in order to cover up their own promiscuous? Should a citizen like Craeman Gethers, guilty of nothing more than being a black male, be snatched from an institution of higher learning and jailed, simply because "someone" black committed a crime, and "someone" black has to serve time.

Balalian News/cpf



"By golly, you're right! You were the last one hired--Well, you won't be the first fired. There's one ahead of you."

Throughout our history, being guilty of nothing more than being Black, Latino, Native American, or Asian-American, has meant discrimination, oppression, suffering, blood, sweat, and tears, incarceration, and death.

To automatically assume that because of affirmative action, any minority student to benefit from the act will all possess cums of only 2.0 and be accepted, while whites, of course having nothing but 4.0 cums, will be rejected. This trend of thought is absurd and racist.

Did anyone notice how sickfully quick, mainstream America tossed out of her thoughts that maybe, just maybe mind you, that the minority student with a 3.7 cum will not be automatically rejected because he-she graduated from a non-white college or university.

For Harvard Medical School to realize the educational imbalances in our elementary-secondary school system, and to offer a program of special instruction for minority students before enrollment, is an example of a sincere effort to recruit minorities. Yet to assume that all minority students need special instruction before being capable of competing with their fellow white constituents is wrong.

I remember watching an episode of "All In The Family," where Archie Bunker failed to make it as a member of a prestigious bowling club. A black man who bowled as well as Archie but not better, was accepted because he was black. A friend of Archie's, attempting to console him remarked that things were changing and everyone will have to learn to accept them. Archie acknowledged that things were changing but noted that everytime it does he receives a kick in the butt.

I feel that many whites think that it will be very easy and painless in correcting past wrongs. This is not true, and should not be expected. It is very easy to take a stand on an issue, but very difficult to deal with the issue. Whites as well as blacks felt that "separate but equal" was wrong. Yet whose cries were heard when black children first began to sit beside white children in the classroom?

It is a fact that minorities and women have been discriminated against in job employment. Yet who cries out "reverse discrimination!", when minorities and women rightfully step through that door of opportunity, barred for so long by the same people who now are devoted opponents of affirmative action.

It is going to hurt, white America. It may be known as affirmative action, quotas, the civil right act to employment, or whatever. But the sting will be felt, because whites will have to deal with the possibility of losing employment not only to other whites, but also to qualified Blacks, Native-Americans, Latinos, and Asian-Americans. Understandably, this will be difficult for many whites, but there is no way this can be avoided.

Minorities have pained and hurted for so long from past and present injustices of our society. Now the time has come for whites to taste this bitter pill. It is my hope that white America will decide to hurt along with the rest of her citizens so that a true start for a better tomorrow can be made.

In defense of third world corridors

By MARY E. CUSTARD
Black Affairs Staff

Year after year Third World students fight to keep Third World corridors, now someone has decided that they are detrimental.

Third World Corridors are and were not designed to be totally political, although in Amherst anytime Third World people are together in any type of organized group, it is thought of as political.

Commentary

Just because Third World students live together does not mean they are prevented from dealing with non-third world students in the dorm. If minority students did not want to deal with white students, it wouldn't matter if they were the only Third World students on an all white floor. The corridor does not prevent dorm interaction, that decision is made by the individual.

The primary reason for the Third World corridor is not social. True, they may be many social gatherings on the corridors, but this does not mean little or no studying is done. If your head is where it's suppose to be you will study. If all you're here for is socializing you will do it no matter where you live.

Education cannot be limited to academics. Third World Corridors provide education, maybe not in the traditional sense through books and in the classroom, but from living together, learning from and about each other, uniting for a common cause, and helping each other out when the need be.

As long as Third World corridors exist, they will have spiritual, cultural, political, organizational, and educational values.

Dear Terrell,

I think you are so right about the Third World Corridors being detrimental. If I am separated from my Black brothers and sisters, how am I supposed to experience the good and beauty they have to offer and vice versa. Some white people have never lived near any Third World people outside of the university and they have all kinds of crazy ideas about Third World people. Yet by living with them in dorms they can clear up these misconceptions and see how much they have to offer. Also when these people graduate and go out into the world, they will be able to have a more open mind and know that all people are equal. It does not matter what the color of one's skin is, and that we all need each other in order to find true happiness.

David Sibeko writes UMass

I read with the greatest pleasure in a national newspaper that the Board of Governors of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst have resolved to sell all the stock held by the University with companies that invest in apartheid South Africa.

The struggling people of Azania, whose suffering is growing in direct proportion with the intensity of the struggle, will regard this act as a concrete gesture of solidarity, fit to be emulated by all who genuinely uphold principles of democracy in the United States and elsewhere.

Since the University of Massachusetts in Amherst was the launching pad for the PAC Mission to Europe and the America's drive for the isolation of apartheid South Africa, when I was invited to speak there soon after the Mission was established in 1970, the Pan Africanist Congress feels justly proud to share in this achievement.

Above all in PAC we pay tribute to the student body at UMass, Amherst, and to the W.E.B. Du Bois Afro-American Studies Department and the Liberation Committee for Southern Africa, in particular, for having spearheaded the drive against links between apartheid South Africa and your University.

Excellent as this victory of the withdrawal of UMass stocks from companies investing in South Africa is we should not be complacent. The Azanian people's struggle is going to be protracted and our freedom fighters need all the moral and material support that can be raised. The examplary act of solidarity from UMass in Amherst must be extended to cover the whole of the USA, up until all economic, military, cultural and diplomatic links with apartheid South Africa have been severed. And we trust that our true friends will stay with the struggle through to total victory and the establishment of mutually respectful ties between the United States and a liberated Azania.

Sincerely,
David M. Sibeko

PAC Director of Foreign Affairs

High notes...

'HIGH NOTES' is another 'first' for Black Affairs. It is a column that has been established in The Black Affairs section of the Daily Collegian. Mario Barros is Black Affairs' literary critic. Look for his column to appear every Wednesday in Black Affairs.

Hello people, I'm Mario Barros and you'll be hearing from me in the future regarding the various Black cultural events here in the Valley. Hopefully I'll be able to give you the lowdown on concerts (both previews and reviews), plays, albums and whatever other forms of entertainment may apply.

To start off with, I'd like to express both satisfaction and sadness concerning the recent showing of the hit play, BUBBLING BROWN SUGAR. I was very satisfied with the show itself, but saddened somewhat by the low turnout by the Valley's Black population. I really expected to see a bigger turnout but that's the way it goes ...

The music world is pretty quiet at the moment but a few worthy notables are, Mass Production and Rose Royce, both with strong second acts and Barry White making a strong bid to return from the bargain bins to his former status. Mass Production continues to deliver the strong word (their stage show has got to be checked out!!) but more importantly, they also continue to render those ballads which are soooo mellow. On this LP they are thankfully much more noticable. Rose Royce has mellowed out somewhat with pretty good results. The LP has a laid-back feel to it and the slow cut, "Waitin' On You" has all the smoothness of "I Wanna Get Next To You." Barry White's latest is pretty nice and contains the monster, "It's Ecstacy When You Lay Down Next To Me" (how's that for a long title!?). The rest of the LP carries on the same mood and sets a very nice tone for your evening if you know what I mean.

That's all for now, but do keep your eyes out for the upcoming George Benson concert and two new LPs by Ashford and Simpson and by one of my favorites, Impact, a group that features ex-Temptations singer, Damon Harris. So til' later take care and be watchin' for the word.

Boiling Black Molasses

Considering the fact that both of the performances of Bubbling Brown Sugar were almost sold out, it is safe to say a large portion of the campus community saw the show. Many were probably excited by what they saw and assumed that they had walked away with a fairly decent view of what Harlem was like in the 20s and 30s. One could also say that the show gave Black actors and dancers some work for a minute, and one could also safely say that the actors and dancers had portrayed what they thought Harlem was like in the 20s and 30's.

In the first place, many of the clubs in Harlem where the top flight bands played only catered to the White clientele and many of the downtown clubs did not allow Black folks in them. Another factor that is very important is manyof the Black folk in Harlem were hard working people who did not frequent the night spas in abundance. One got the impression from the play that Harlem was aglow twenty four hours a day with people adancing and asinging up and down the street. A kind of plantation North atmosphere.

I was offended by the fact that the arrangers and composers of the songs presented were not properly identified with a slide of that person. One of the most significant pieces in the production "Love Will Find a Way" by Eubie Blake was an important song of that era and I felt that it was important for the audience to know that, as was it important for the audience to know the identity of Bert Williams, Miller and Lyle, Ethel Waters, and Bessie Smith when their materials were presented.

One could be misled by reading the play bill. It would have you thinking that credit should be given to people who had not originally conceived of these ideas. It was a classic, cheap ripoff trick of playing on the ignorance of the audience if they did not know any better.

I am sure if anyone was sitting past the fifth section, nothing was audible.

I must give credit to the musicians in the production. They did at least stick as close to the music as possible. I hope that these observations are taken in a positive vain so that aspects of the Black Musical Theatre when presented, can be seen in their most accurate historical perspective.

Bill Hasson

I CANNOT LIE

I cannot lie
I need my black man by my side
I need his brain power
I need him to think
I need him to stand tall like the mighty pine
I need his mind to merge with mine, to keep us in line with the light of truth
No! I cannot lie
I need my man
by my side
I need my man
to plant good strong seeds of light
I need my man
to be my friend
I need my man to be my lover
I need my man
to help create a strong black tomorrow absent of sorrow
I need what I have
I have what I need
Strong black feeling in control
My man is brain soul power
No!
I cannot tell a lie

TM techniques hard to accept?

Graphic by Randy Glenn

By CHRIS BOURNE
Collegian Staff

There have been many claims for Transcendental Meditation since it was first introduced to this country in the late 1950's. Some of these claims, such as lower blood pressure, improved performance and better attitude, have been partially substantiated by research at Harvard, Stanford, UCLA, and other universities around the world.

The newest claims for meditation are somewhat harder to accept. They include levitation and invisibility. "We like to call them supernormal abilities," said Eric Schwartz, a mediator who claims to be able to levitate himself.

Schwartz, who has been meditating for about five and a half years, learned the technique of levitation in Switzerland at the Maharishi European Research University (MERU). "The first evidence of these supernormal abilities came about a year ago. Two women at MERU reported experiences like levitating," said Schwartz.

Schwartz declined to demonstrate his abilities because it's the policy of the TM Program not to give performances. "If we did give demonstrations, people might get the wrong idea about what we're trying to do," Schwartz said. "I think this is part of the higher consciousness that we are trying to attain, not an end in itself."

The powers are referred to as supernormal because "they are powers that aren't normal right now." Schwartz feels they will become accepted in the future. "Look at all the things we do every day that would have been regarded as magical a hundred years ago. Things like flying and walking on the moon."

Schwartz doesn't see the powers as violating natural laws. "I think that we're using laws that we don't understand yet. For instance the invisibility might be caused by bending light rays around the body. Einstein predicted that massive objects would bend light and it has been proven that it happens. That's why you can see stars around the edge of the sun during an eclipse."

Irene Cullen, who runs the Amherst TM Center on Lincoln Ave., said there are about 1,500 meditators in the area out of a population of about 150,000. She said anyone can learn to meditate through an introductory course.

"The course cost $85 for students and that's all. You can keep on meditating for the rest of your life. There are seminars that are offered free of charge that you can attend."

Cullen also said there are advanced courses offered for additional costs but you don't have to take them.

The courses, which teach the supernormal abilities, cost about $250 a week. "They involve staying at centers for a while. Most of the centers are rented; we don't own them."

Cullen said there are five branches to the TM Program. "There is the International Meditation Society (IMS) which teaches the techniques to adults; the Students International Meditation Society (SIMS), which teaches the techniques to students; the Spiritual Regeneration Movement, which was the first branch of the program; the Maharishi International University, which is the college that conducts research into TM; and the American Foundation for the Science of Creative Intelligence (AFSCI), which conducts research into the theoretical side of TM. We are a non-profit organization certified by the U.S. government." Cullen also said SIMS is a Recognized Student Organization (RSO) group.

Cullen said courses which teach supernormal abilities can be taken by anybody. "At first, they were only offered to people who were trained as instructors, but now they are open to anyone who has been meditating for six months or more."

The abilities don't mean you can sit down and alleviate yourself across the Atlantic said Schwartz. Most people are only able to stay a few inches off the ground for several seconds. Cullen showed several pictures of people levitating. One showed a man about six inches off the ground. Another series showed two women sitting side by side; one of them moves up and forward toward the camera.

There are about seven people in the Amherst area who are able to levitate according to Schwartz. Several more are attending training sessions.

Host Family Program continues at Amherst

By MARY WYATT
Collegian Staff

Amherst College, in an effort to alleviate the anxieties of international students, has continued the Host Family Program, begun in 1972.

UMass had the original international student association from which Amherst College adopted the idea. "Our program got its start when the concept of host families was brought up at an Amherst Town Committee meeting," said Mrs. Alfred Guest, founder of the Amherst College Program.

"From there, I took it to the 'Women of Amherst College' who decided the idea would be beneficial for the incoming students," she said.

"The ordeal of living in a foreign country can bewilder incoming freshmen," she said. "We attempt to contact the students before they come to Amherst in order that they have an interest in coming.

"Also, they are met by their host families when they arrive. We are trying to help the international students with the little things that would confuse them. For example, shopping downtown or opening a checking account," she added.

Approximately 15 students are participating in the program. Each is assigned a host family, volunteers who are Amherst College administration and faculty.

Mrs. Douglas Wilson, program coordinator, said, "We ask the families to invite the students to their homes for dinner at least once a month and include them in family excursions and celebrations. In this home away from home, the students learn about American social customs and have a place to turn in times of stress," she said.

Nuclear bomb test successful in Nev.

YUCCA FLAT, Nev. [UPI]— A weapons-related nuclear device in the 20 to 150 kiloton range was detonated deep underground at the Nevada Test Site yesterday. Although officials had warned it could sway tall buildings in Las Vegas 95 miles away, the blast was not even felt there.

The device, codemaned "Coulommiers" after a variety of French cheese, was triggered at 7 a.m. PDT at the bottom of a vertical shaft 1,738 feet deep.

A puff of dust swirled up above ground zero when the device was touched off at a site in the northern portion of Yucca Flat, but a spokesman for the Energy Research and Development Administration said ground movement was very slight.

The test was termed a success and no radiation leaked into the atmosphere.

Observers in Las Vegas 95 miles away were unable to feel the blast. Federal officials had warned that workers in high rise buildings should seek secure footing at blast time because of shock waves that could sway tall buildings.

For several years U.S. scientists have been working on development of a nuclear device that would be difficult to detect when it was detonated.

Tuesday's lack of ground movement could indicate the yield was at the lower end of the 20 to 150 kiloton range — the equivalent of a maximum force of 150,000 tons of TNT — or that scientists have succeeded in developing a nuclear device that is difficult to detect.

Coulommiers was the 306th U.S. underground nuclear test since the ban on atmospheric testing went into effect in 1963.

USSR eyes arms deal

UNITED NATIONS [UPI] — The Soviet Union yesterday offered to join with the United States and Great Britain in a treaty to ban underground nuclear testing for a limited period.

In a speech to the U.N. General Assembly, Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko said, "The prohibition of all nuclear weapons tests would be a major step conducive to lessening the threat of nuclear war and deepening detente."

The United States has long sought a comprehensive test ban treaty. Negotiations are scheduled to resume in Geneva next week and the announcement by Gromyko caught American officials by surprise.

Shortly after Gromyko's speech, the Soviet diplomat and Secretary of State Cyrus Vance left for Washington for talks in the White House with President Carter.

In his speech, Gromyko said the Soviet Union had repeatedly stressed its willingness to enter an agreement banning underground testing.

"Today we are taking one more step forward," Gromyko said.

Black youths riot in Dimbaza

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa [UPI] — Police fired birdshot and teargas yesterday to disperse a mob of 500 black youths that set fire to government offices in the black township of Dimbaza for the second day in a row, police said.

Maj. Gen. Dawid Kriel, Deputy Commissioner of police in charge of riot control, said there had been no injuries and no arrests.

Kriel estimated damage to the building and a Ciskei government light delivery van that was gutted by fire at $10,000.

Disturbances in the township, 40 miles northwest of East London, began Monday when youths set fire to the offices of the Eastern Cape Bantu black Administration board.

A 17-year-old black youth died in the flareup of violence when police fired into the crowd.

The new outbreaks of violence followed the funeral Sunday of former student leader Steve Biko, who died more than two weeks ago while in police custody.

Mexican opium poppies destroyed

MEXICO [AP] — Helicopter XC-GID shuddered and bucked as pilot Carlos Aguilar Lomeli, hunting opium-producing poppy fields, coaxed it up a windy canyon high in the Sierra Madre Mountains.

Four-hundred feet above, flying backup in another Bell 212, Juan Flores watched Lomeli's machine laboring in the thin air, its cargo hold filled with a plastic tank containing 250 gallons of gramoxone herbicide.

"Left, come left, Lomeli," Flores called over the radio. "Straight ahead now. You're lined up."

With the 40-foot spray boom barely skimming the tops of pine trees, Lomeli suddenly found himself over a one-acre clearing filled with 2½ foot high crimson flowers.

For five seconds, herbicide drained from the helicopter. It would leave the field, about 350 miles south of Columbus, N.M., chemically burned in 36 hours.

Lomeli and Flores are agents of the Mexican attorney general's office and part of a 250-person, 18-helicopter task force waging a ground and aerial war against opium poppies.

The poppies come into season in the spring and fall here, the periods of maximum rainfall.

The task force, with support from the army, covers a four state area stretching from the southern end of Sonora and Chihuahua, which border Arizona, New Mexico and Texas in the north, down through the coastal state of Sinaloa, bordering Sonora on the south, and parts of Durango, east of Sinaloa.

The man who heads the task force in the area, designated as Region Six, is Carlos Aguilar Garza.

Aguilar Garza, who is headquartered in Culiacan, says the area is by far Mexico's largest producers of opium, the source of heroin.

U.S. drug enforcement officials, who fly with the Mexican crews as observers, say the area accounts for a major portion of the heroin sold in the United States. Mexico has become the main supplier of heroin in the States.

Wheaton man kills two in car

BELTSVILLE, Md. [UPI] — A Wheaton man was charged with murder yesterday in the deaths of a man and a woman in a car police said he forced through a guard rail and down an embankment.

State Police identified the victims as Michael P. Ferencz of Stratford, Conn., and Terry Wright, 18, of Birmingham, Ala.

Police said John R. Orange, 22 repeatedly rammed the rear of Ferencz' car as it drove down the exit ramp between southbound I-95 and eastbound I-495 at about 1 a.m. The victims' car crashed through a guard rail, down a 180-foot embankment and landed on its top.

Police said Orange's car also went over the bank and he suffered head and back injuries. Police said Orange was naked when the accident occurred.

KKK march in Alabama

MONTGOMERY, Ala. [AP] — With a medley of tunes, not just the old theme song of racial strife, the hooded remnants of the Ku Klux Klan are marching again. And, again, they are encountering angry resistance, black and white.

But the battleground is moving also to the courts, says Imperial Wizard Robert M. "Bobby" Shelton. And, he says, in combating school busing, "we're even offering our legal services to blacks."

Some black parents indicated a willingness to accept the offer, Shelton says, "but the NAACP and other organizations scared them off."

Shelton, who reigns over the United Klans of America, says the KKK is becoming more aggressive and more visible in court and in the streets.

And, as beofe, its marches have touched off racial violence even though Klan leaders, in some instances, maintained that their protests were aimed at nonracial issues.

About 100 Klansmen who paraded through downtown Mobile last Saturday carried signs denouncing the state's work-release program for prisoners, which allows convicts to take outside jobs before they are released.

Blacks stood by, jeering the white-robed marchers and drowning out their speakers with songs and freedom chants.

A black policeman, Donald Pinkney, off duty and out of uniform, was beaten by fellow officers and arrested on a charge of assaulting another policeman. Pinkney's father said his son attended the rally merely as a "citizen and observer," ready to assist any other officer who might need help.

Other Klansmen, with the public support of a black city councilman, have been given a permit to parade this Saturday in downtown Montgomery. The target of their protest, they say, is the Panama Canal treaty.

Luther Oliver, one of four blacks on the nine-member City Council, supported the request for a parade permit, and even offered to sponsor it if requested. He said he is a strong believer in the constitutional right of free speech.

Task force talks on battered women

HARTFORD, Conn. [UPI] — A state task force on abused women has been told most battered females lose their best protection when they refuse to take legal action.

Connecticut court officials Monday told a state advisory committee to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights the biggest problems in the fight against domestic assaults are the victims themselves.

But at various times during the daylong state Capitol hearing, women spectators angrily denied that courts do everything possible for battered women.

Either through fear or change of heart, battered women often decline to press charges even though the husband or boyfriend has been arrested, according to Irving Aronson, assistant prosecutor for the Hartford Court of Common Pleas.

Aronson said many of the 200 to 300 cases per month involving domestic assaults are referred to the court's Family Relations Division.

Joseph Rafala, administrative supervisor of the Family Relations Division, said only about one per cent of the more than 5,000 cases in Connecticut year year involving some form of intentional injury to a female reach trial.

KSU: real and unreal

By JOHN BERGMAN

Practically all of it was real. Above all else, even the awe that the over 2500 gatherers showed on their faces at KSU on Sept. 24, the predominant realness of it all is this writer's most immediate conclusion.

Before the rally, the people, most of them students, strolled around and looked at the campus. Some were shown a May 4, '70 bullet hole which went through a half-inch thick portion of a tall, steel structure. The bullet was fired from a National Guardsman's M-1 rifle.

A noontime gathering of all persons was held at the base of the same hill where nearly seven and a half years before, KSU students sprinted up in terror, scampering around a massive building.

Just prior to "beating feet" to the gathering site at noon, this writer saw what he deemed the only "unreal" spectacle of the day: A gravestone (albeit with roses) which so inadequately commemorated the four slain — Sandy Scheur, Jeffrey Miller, William Schroeder and Allison Krause — it was pitiful. It seemed a dream to me for a moment that this gravestone should not have engraved on it a single word of how they died and what were the circumstances.

A fellow named Carter introduced musicians whose appearances were scattered among over a half-dozen speakers at the gathering in "the valley". The speakers included William Kunstler (a lawyer who defended the Chicago 7), who predicted, "I'll bet most newspapers will say tomorrow that 200 people were here, but look around'ja; you know it's bullshit!"

KSU students holding up a huge "Build Our Gym" banner tried to distract Kunstler's fat, booming voice with cries from a porch area, but the 58-year-old lawyer trudged determinedly on, denouncing injustices in places like Angola and South Africa and urging us "not to forget" injustices in our own country like the Wilmington (N.C.) 10.

Another speaker, a Revolutionary Student Brigade member who said N.Y. City was his home, criticized the rich-income classes for their almost total control of all of the U.S.'s wealth and control "at a time when many from other classes, especially in the ghettoes, are starving." In firebrand fashion, he also knocked the Bakke decision as well as "the prejudices of the N.Y. Daily News and 1001 others (newspapers) like it."

A KSU black leader voiced KSU's black groups' alliance with opposers of the Kent State murders "for the first time since it happened," according to a reliable source.

Then, following Kinstler's warning "not to forget", the 2500 marched to four different buildings which they dedicated to the four slain.

The united vows of "Sandy Scheur (Jeff Miller, Bill Schroeder, Allison Krause), your spirit lives, we'll never forget, we'll never forgive" wailed throughout tne sky, as did a vocal, genuine, "Kent means: Fight Back!"

The fight climaxed at the proposed gym site which about 55 per cent of the embattled foot soldiers occupied. A woman told folks to return on Oct. 23, the date when the gym's construction is scheduled to begin in earnest.

NBC people, photographers and FBI men were at or near the site while the cops were mainly plainclothesmen, save for three very noticeable ones on a rooftop who aimed their cameras towards us.

Someone yelled that it may be teargas time, to get those bandanas ready for protection. The teargas never came and the mob circled the site's perimeter before exiting.

The Sept. 24 rally might have stopped KSU's trustees from planning to build the gym at that site, one of seven sites on that campus, the largest land-wise in Ohio. At least, the rally may have received enough media exposure for many readers to realize that not just a handful of "activists" oppose the gym site.

After all was over — the shouting, a few arrests (very few 'incidents' actually occurred) and the blaring of Niel Young's "Ohio", PLUS the occupation of the site, I recalled one guy at the latter who scanned the rooftops to make sure the Guardsmens' cameras didn't suddenly become rifles, and brother, this dude was "scared shitless."

"This dude" was me.

Right decision - wrong reasons

michael p. doran

The Bakke case presents a problem not only for college students and those wishing to go to graduate schools, but to every American because it encases so much that is wrong in American society.

What the case boils down to is this: There now exists in this countries' institutions of higher learning quota systems that prescribe so many seats for whites and so many seats for minorities. A man named Bakke is protesting this system in the Supreme Court, saying that his space in Davis (UCal) medical school was given to another person solely because he was white while the other person was of a recognized minority.

U-Cal felt that in order to adhere to Affirmative Action guidelines they would need to set up a quota system. From their point of view a quota system is the only way to make sure they are complying with these guidelines, and I think it is easy to see their point. If your federal grants and other funding depended on compliance with Affirmative Action guidelines you would want to be as sure as possible that they were adhered to. It is unfair for the government to set up guidelines without setting up means for compliance. Moreover it is unrealistic for us to ask, in carefully worded bureaucrateese, that these guidelines should be met by some other means. Quasi-imperatives were historically the lifeblood of racism in this country.

I am not, however, satisfied with the way quotas are set up. What happens with the present system is the same old story; so called social progress is made at the expense of the poor and the middle class. Instead of the minorities filling the spaces of those who have been the traditional racists in this country — those with the power and the money — the minorities are filling the spaces of those who are from the middle classes and couldn't afford Harvard, or those who didn't know a legislator on the appropriations committee.

To be a demagogue for a moment I would like to suggest a new quota system: Admit everyone on the basis of the old system, then delete from that list everyone from a family making over $75,000 a year along with those that got a letter of recommendation from a powerful legislator. Then fill in with minority applicants. This will insure that the admission to medical school or any school is not only free from racism but is also free from any social class discriminations. But, knowing this system would be unacceptable in the United States I have come to accept that the inevitable burden of paying for the sins of racism will have to be borne by those who are innocent of it.

I predict that the decision in the Bakke case will be to uphold the quota system. Unfortunately this will happen for the wrong reasons. The Supreme Court will not decide this case on the basis of the constitutionality of racism, but rather on the position of our country in a world concerned with the racism in Africa. We would not be able to say to the Blacks who will eventually take back all of Africa that we are not racist — but that we do little to make sure that minorities get into our graduate schools — and still expect them to believe us. The Soviet Union could present a better case. It is clearly in the interest of our industrial and technological conglomerates to "appear" to be representing a non-racist country. I dislike being on the side of these people, and I dislike the way quotas are geared to make the middle classes pay for the past policies of the upper classes, but at the moment I think this is the only way to progress in any significant way.

Do RSO's promote factionalism?

commentary

By STEPHEN N. MATHIEU

I'd like to point out a problem that I feel is reaching crisis proportions on this campus. It is one that affects every student that pays his or her SATF fees at the beginning of each semester.

Supposedly, the SATF money belongs to all of these students, so theoretically, it should be spent in areas where everybody can share and benefit from it. However, at the present time, that is not happening. Let me explain.

There are certain RSO groups on this campus that do seek to serve everybody. To mention a few, there are the various student coops: stereo, auto, photo, etc. Also, there are organizations like Earthfoods, Peoples Market, UMass Student Federal Credit Union, Lecture Notes, Index, Collegian, Student Video Project, Outing and Ski Clubs, Room to Move, and the transit service here on campus.

Everybody on campus can benefit from these groups and services. Everybody is invited to take part. However, that is not the case with a number of other RSO funded groups. The groups of which I speak are those private and special interest groups, at least one of which every student at the university is not a part. Let me isolate a few of these groups as an example.

Everywoman's Center, according to the publication, "Where Your Buck Stops", in the Spring of 1977, "is a place where women can drop in for information, conversation, and coffee. There is always at least one staff woman available to women calling or coming into the center." Without my doing a thing, I and every other man on this campus have been isolated and told that this place is for women. Half of the campus is ostracized from this group. Then, in answer to this, a men's center is created — another group that in name alone isolates itself from half of the campus.

Resources Judaica is another group of which I speak. Their goal is to promote awareness of the Jewish Community on this campus. This is all well and good, but if you fund this group, should you not also fund a Moslem group, a Catholic, an Episcopalian, and a Presbyterian group? It's only fair.

Next, I'd like to focus my attention on the various RSO funded Third World groups, specifically, CCEBS, Black Scientists, WBLK, BMCP, Afro-American Society, Asian-Am, Ahora, and Bilingual Collegiate Program.

CCEBS (Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students) is a program to allow admission to low income and academic problem-bearing Black Students. (Where Your Buck Stops — 1977). This is a great thing, in theory, but why should it extend only to Black and Third World students? Are not there a lot of poor and academic-problem-bearing White students out there who deserve this same opportunity? Why then, is this discrimination made?

WMUA, since I've been here, has always been open to all students, regardless of race, color, creed, or national origin. Why, then, is an all black operated and controlled radio station being set up on this campus? It seems to me that this is totally contrary to the idea of a fully integrated campus community.

To dwell no further upon these groups, I'd like to point out a fact that I find quite interesting about all of the private and special interest groups on campus.

They all profess that their main cause is to "increase the social awareness of the UMass community with our cultural programs." I say no, not true. I believe that the members of most of these groups are seeking to identify with somebody else with the same ideals and aspirations. They are motivated more by their own selfish desires than anything else. If these people were as socially aware and concerned as they make themselves out to be, Belchertown, and Northampton Volunteers, Room To Move, the Red Cross, and other organizations like this would be turning volunteers away in droves. However, such is not the case. They seek "social awareness" only when it will somehow benefit themselves.

In my hometown, there exists a British American Club, a Franco-Am Club, a Finnish and Irish-Am club, and many other social and cultural groups of this nature. They all perform some tremendous services for the community, and what's more, they all fund themselves. And they have existed for years. So, in closing, I'd like to put forth a challenge to all of the private and special interest groups on campus: Prove to this community that you could make it in the "real world". Get off the public payroll and support yourselves.

My guess is that those groups truly dedicated to their cause will find a way to survive, but the handout seekers won't have the guts enough to make their groups survive. Their cause will no longer seem that important.

The party phenomenon

By ELLEN PLAUSKY

Is it true that UMass has more parties per weekend than books in its library? Is it true that the students here party more than they study? Do some of the true party fiends actually know what studying is? Or better still, do they care? The answers to these questions later.

UMass, to some of the state (and probably the country) is known as a party school. At least, at my high school it was. Whenever I mentioned that I was planning on attending UMass I had to be prepared for a succession of jokes and cute comments which, it seemed, were inevitable.

So, last year, with beer mug in hand and a bottle of vodka tucked in my suitcase; and with glistening expectations, I arrived on campus. But try as I might, I was unable to find a party till later that evening.

And it was a party. Lasting well into the night, I can only be thankful that the next day was set aside for pre-registration with no classes.

Since UMass students were rumored to live from party to party, it seemed like I'd have a lot to adjust to.

When I started meeting people, though, I realized that parties were not the only thing on campus. Everyone else was interested in their studies, student government, sports teams, and the wide range of clubs on campus. But, what happened to the UMass party spirit?

Well, I found it. It's still alive and kicking on weekends (and nightly in certain Southwest towers). And I've adjusted to it. Weekend parties are a great relief from the pressures of a busy week on campus. The majority of students submit to at least one weekend party, whether it's for two people or an entire dorm.

Friends visiting UMass on weekends get the wrong idea about us. They see our school only as a continuous party. But, maybe it's better that they think of us that way. It sort of lends an aura of magic to their impression of us. And, as long as we know that we do study, why not let them think whatever they want?

Oh, the answers to the questions in the first paragraph are: no, probably, possibly, and I doubt it.

— See you at a party sometime ...

More on pot and capitalism

To the Editor:

I agree with Stephen Modena's characterization of the marijuana industry as a "blood-sucking profiteering adventure ... " I think the pot business is analogous to our tobacco industry. Both gain enormous profits from the sale of historically non-essential [luxury-pleasure] drugs which are, for whatever socio-political reasons, now considered essential by large segments of the population. While one industry is said to be legal and the other is called illegal, it has been politically expedient for the product only of the legal industry to be officially deemed hazardous to our health. There is a factor of legal risk in the illegal industry. But I suspect that a survey of those incarcerated for pot related 'offenses' would show that the amount of risk to the big profiteers is very small. [Imagine putting cigarette smokers by the score in prison, and throwing an occasional tobacconist or cigarette truck driver!] Indeed, the main effect of the illegality of the pot business, and the main difference between the two smoke industries is that with pot, merchandise and profits are not subject to restriction or taxation. Big time pot speculators are making fantastic profits, and as Mr. Modena says, they are " ... in the best tradition of the Industrial Revolution ... "

I do not agree with his contention that there is a connection between pot smoking and political idealism or even political awareness. Mr. Modena implies that there is such a connection when he asks his final question of pot-smokers, "Where are your principles?"

I do not agree that we live in a "very leftist, hand-wringing atmosphere."

Finally, I think that Stephen Modena's gibes at Nummo News and the Revolutionary Student Brigade are not humorous and have no place in the Collegian. His insidiously racist words are no better than a cross burning on a lawn.

Getting the story straight

To the Editor:

The Collegian news editor received a call from us complaining about the inaccuracies and misleading nature of the article entitled, "LSO provides free legal help," printed in Monday's Collegian.

Our main concern is that inaccurate news coverage results in a loss of credibility for all of us.

Among the many inaccuracies we wish to correct are the following:

1] our staff attorneys are not graduate students — they are law school graduates and certified attorneys having passed the Massachusetts Bar Examination.

2] Although it is a conflict for us to represent one student against another, no such conflict exists between students and faculty members.

3] The Ombudsman is not a legal services office.

4] Students should call to make an appointment before discussing their legal problem with our staff.

5] While all staff members share in decision-making and other day-to-day office tasks, we do not "change" roles, i.e. a non-certified attorney cannot practice law.

Legal Services welcomes coverage by the Collegian, but next time, please be fair to us and your readership and get your story straight. Thanks.

Afternoon crowding on BR route

To the Editor:

I am sending this letter in the hope of improving an intolerable situation. That is, the overcrowding on the Belchertown Road [BR] bus outbound runs after 11 a.m. weekdays. During the lunch rush and through the afternoon there are many people trying to get to Amherst Centre. They must take the Belchertown Road buses, due to the restriction on discharging passengers in town on the Belchertown Centre and South Amherst routes. This makes overcrowding on the BR outbound inevitable.

The solution to this problem would seem to be to run buses specifically to Amherst Centre, as you seem to do occasionally. These buses should run within two [2] minutes prior to the Belchertown Road outbound. This would allow the people going to town to board this bus, and the people going further on the BR route to board their bus. This would insure that no-one trying to get to Rolling Green, for instance, would be left behind because they were unable to fit on the bus which they were waiting for. Thank you very much.

Richard Sidney

Beating the bus-stop blues

To the Editor:

Do you ever get upset or disgusted with the bus service at UMass? Does it always seem that the buses are late when the weather stinks or when you are in a hurry or when you ran to make it to the bus stop on time? Has a bus driver ever bypassed the stop you wanted to get off at?

Did you ever realize that YOU could help alleviate these problems? Do you know about the sign above the front door that says "EXIT THROUGH REAR" or something similar. Even more important, do you do it? Do you know that almost all the buses have a cord to pull that alerts the driver to the fact that you want to get out?

Buses sometimes run late — it's a fact of life. There are times when the traffic is bad, sometimes they break down and occasionally there is a new driver. If you think about it, you can probably remember sometime when you were in a private vehicle and the traffic was bad or your vehicle broke down. Maybe you can even remember how nervous you were when you first started to drive — it is the same for a bus driver the first few times [s]he drives a bus.

Most bus routes have either 11 or 13 stops to them. It seems like everybody likes to get in through the front door and that most people like to get out there too. Many times no one will even use the back door. Therefore the bus sits at a stop for a minute longer than necessary. In this case 10 stops theoretically means a bus 10 minutes late. Now, whenever possible, people getting in the front as others exit through the rear helps speed the bus on its way. It also makes sense that when almost no one is getting off the bus but a whole lot are getting on that some of the people attempting to ride the bus should get on through the back door.

The bells and buzzers are really handy things if used properly. The time to pull the cord is not after the bus is past your stop and it's not even when the bus is at your stop. The time to use it is just BEFORE the driver reaches the particular stop. Please realize though that the driver is not deaf and only one person needs to pull the cord for any one particular stop.

UMass bus drivers are not tour guides. Therefore when a driver yells out "SBA" or "School of Ed" [s]he is not pointing out the sights of Amherst, but asking if anyone wants that particular stop. Let them know that you want to get out, but don't necessarily wait for the driver to ask.

One final word. If you are running for a bus and the driver has pulled away into traffic it might not be safe for the driver to stop for you. There is probably another bus in 20 minutes or less anyway. But ... if you run at the bus from in front of it you are creating a safety hazard and there is no way you will get on that bus to ride. The driver will stop to make sure [s]he doesn't hit you, but that is it. You could get hurt practicing this stunt, and the only way the drivers have to make you realize this is by not letting you on the bus.

News in Brief

Bush meets with Teng Hsiao-ping

HONG KONG [UPI] — George H. Bush, former chief of the United States Liaison Office in Peking, met yesterday morning with Chinese Vice Premier Teng Hsiao-ping, according to the New China News Agency.

They "had a friendly conversation," NCNA said, but the agency gave no details of their talks.

Bush is in Peking on a private visit. On Monday night he was honored at a banquet hosted by Hao Teh-ching, president of the Chinese People's Institute of Foreign Affairs.

Brzezinski meets Schmidt in Bonn

BONN [UPI] — President Carter's national security adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski arrived yesterday on the third leg of a three-nation European tour.

Brzezinski met with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt who also hosted a dinner for the President's security adviser.

Diplomats said East-West relaxation of tension, the Belgrade follow-up conference on European Security and Cooperation, proposed troop cuts in Central Europe and human rights problem topped the agenda in the Bonn talks.

Classes resume at Medford H.S.

MEDFORD, Mass. [AP] — Classes are scheduled to resume at Medford High School today after two days of racial tension which led to the scool's closing yesterday.

School officials closed the 3,800 student high school Tuesday shortly before noon, a spokesman for the high school said.

Afternoon classes were interrupted Monday after fighting broke out among several students. The school also was evacuated Monday for what turned out to be a false fire alarm.

Police said no arrests were made. They said about 10 Medford officers were at the high school Monday and Tuesday.

The Medford School Department issued a statement Tuesday saying the four-year school had been shut down for the day "in the interest of the health and safety of the students."

Franklin teachers fined and jailed

FRANKLIN, Mass. [AP] — Fines of up to $600 per day were imposed yesterday on about 50 striking Franklin teachers, as negotiators returned to the bargaining table in an effort to end the 13-day dispute.

Other teachers have been jailed.

Frank Davis, Norfolk Superior Court clerk, said Judge John Greaney imposed retroactive fines on about 50 striking teachers. He said the fines included $50 daily levies for last week; $100 for those out of work Monday; $200 for yesterday; and $400 for today.

Davis said the fines set by Greaney will continue to increase until Friday's $600 levy. Thereafter, he said, the fine will be $600 per day.

Greaney said the Franklin town treasurer may be ordered to impound the salaries of the teachers who have been fined. The judge said the money seized would be turned over to the court to pay the teachers' fines.

Murderer appeals death law in Fla.

NEW ORLEANS [UPI] — Attorneys for convicted murderer John Spenkelink yesterday pleaded with a federal appeals court to delay his execution until he can appeal the constitutionality of Florida's death law.

An earlier stay order by a lower court expires Friday.

"The appeal has been filed and presented to a three-judge panel," said a spokesman for the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. "They would have to rule before Friday."

Spenkelink, 28, was convicted of shooting and hacking to death a fellow prison escapee at a Tallahassee, Fla., motel in 1973.

Not enough evidence yet for Kent State retrial

CINCINNATI [UPI] — In his first reaction to a court order that he must again stand trial in the Kent State shootings case, Ohio Gov. James A. Rhodes contended yesterday there is no evidence he caused the deaths of four students on May 4, 1970.

Attorneys acting on Rhodes' behalf appealed the retrial order by arguing in court, "There is no evidence that any action, or omission to act, of Gov. Rhodes was the cause of any injury ...

"There is no evidence that Gov. Rhodes misused any of his powers. There is no evidence that Gov. Rhodes took personal command of the National Guard at Kent or that he issued any order to the National Guard on May 4, 1970.

"The uncontroverted evidence in the record can lead reasonable minds to only one conclusion: at all times Gov. Rhodes acted reasonably, in good faith and within the scope of his duties as governor."

Rhodes had ordered the guardsmen into Kent to quell an anti-Vietnam war demonstration and the guardsmen shot and killed four students and wounded nine others.

Rhodes' appeal to the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals was the governor's first reaction to the court's order two weeks ago that a retrial be conducted in a $46 million lawsuit filed by relatives of victims against Rhodes and guardsmen.

Tropical storm threatens Bermuda

MIAMI [UPI] — Tropical storm Dorothy, located southeast of Bermuda, threatened yesterday to become the fourth hurricane of the season within 24 hours, the National Hurricane Center said.

At noon EDT yesterday, Dorothy was centered near latitude 31.3 north and longitude 63.7 west, about 100 miles southeast of Bermuda. Packing top winds of 50 miles an hour, the storm was moving east-northeast at 20 miles an hour.

Hurricane forecaster Paul Hebert said Dorothy, the fourth storm of the Atlantic season, passed about 100 miles south of Bermuda yesterday, but no strong winds were felt on the island.

The hurricane center also reported several areas of cloudiness and showers over the western half of the Caribbean, but none showed evidence of organization.

The season's first two hurricanes, Anita and Babe, came to life in the warm waters of the Gulf of Mexico and moved inland in Mexico and Louisiana, although neither caused major damage.

Anita aimed its 186 mph winds at the Texas coast and threatened residents from Corpus Christi to Brownsville for two days. But it then took a turn to the south and cut across the northeast coast of Mexico, flattening a small fishing village Sept. 2.

It slammed into a mountain ridge and broke up into little more than showers before its remnants crossed into the Pacific Ocean.

Babe was a minimal hurricane packing winds of 75 mph when it cut across the Louisiana coast near Morgan City, 110 miles west of the mouth of the Mississippi River Sept. 5.

The storm sent tides eight feet above normal and cut electrical power and evacuation routes in several coastal communities.

Boyle's murder trial postponed

MEDIA, Pa. [UPI] — Former United Mine Workers President W.A. "Tony" Boyle left Crozer Chester Medical Center yesterday, one day after his second murder trial was postponed because of his health.

Delaware County Judge Joseph Catania rescheduled the murder retrial for next Jan. 16 when Boyle again will face charges for the slayings of union rival Joseph "Jock" Yablonski and his wife and daughter in 1969.

Catania granted the postponement for the ailing 75-year-old former union boss after hearing testimony in his chambers from doctors about the defendant's medical condition.

Boyle, who has a history of heart problems, was taken from the courthouse to the nearby hospital Sept. 19, suffering from chest pains. Doctors at the hospital did not diagnose his illness as a heart attack but said he suffered a "cardiac episode."

Students then and now

LOS ANGELES [AP] — Eight years ago, UCLA student body president Tom Norminton set aside money from his office budget to buy gas masks for the staff.

Norminton's wife, Meg, was student body president at UCLA last year, and it's obvious times and issues have changed. One of her toughest financial decisions was what kind of table to buy for the prospering student union.

"In the '60's, there was something bigger than all of us," said Mrs. Norminton, who was back on campus this week as a part-time student. "Now, there's nothing more important than you are. So people are into EST, yoga, biofeedback."

Mrs. Norminton, 22, who headed the student government from the spring of 1976 until she resigned last fall, said her husband "was president in the middle of the war, with the riots."

"My year, the students went to school, went home and got drunk," she said in an interview in her husband's swank Beverly Hills law office. She works in the law office along with going to school.

Norminton, 29, remembers his year as president from 1969 to 1970 as having "a crisis every day.

"There was always a crowd or a mob," he said. "The anxiety level was really high. I can remember coming back to my dorm room and thinking 'How can this go on? What's going to happen?"

What happened, the couple agreed, is that student energy burned out and they became tired of fighting. That fatigue has combined with the lack of a central issue to unite students in the '70s.

"When I ran for office," said Norminton, "people wanted to stop the war."

When Mrs. Norminton campaigned, "they wanted benches at the bus stop and pass-fail grading" she recalled.

The couple agreed there are many issues to fight for now — including the environment, equal rights, gay rights — but the only goals common among most students today are similar to those most parents have for their offspring — getting good jobs and making money.

New England Governors adopt next year's budget

ROCKPORT, Maine: Governors Dukakis and Thompson (N.H.) share a light moment at the fall meeting of the New England governors.

ROCKPORT, Maine [AP] — The New England Regional Commission adopted a $7.7 million budget yesterday, including $3 million to help rehabilitate New England's railroads.

The spending plan for the 12-month period beginning Oct. 1 focuses on transportation, economic development and energy programs of the federal-state panel.

Funds to repair railroad roadbeds, creating 350 jobs, will help 14 railroads in the six-state region.

Of the total, $962,000 will be spent in Massachusetts, followed by Maine, $632,000; New Hampshire, $414,000; Connecticut $407,000; Vermont, $339,000 and Rhode Island, $277,000.

The Boston and Maine Railroad would receive $832,000, the most of the individual railroads, followed by the Providence and Worcester Railroad, $515,000; Maine Central, $458,000; Bangor and Aroostook, $350,000; Central Vermont, $212,000; and Lewiston and Auburn, $112,000.

Railroads receiving $50,000 or less each are Narragansett Pier, Rhode Island Port Authority, Rhode Island DOT, Delaware and Hudson, Montpelier and Barre, Vermont and Green Mountain.

The NERCOM funds will hire labor, with the railroads supplying materials and supervisory personnel.

David Stein, NERCOM transportation program director, said additional funds would be spent to determine the transportation system that would best serve New England's commercial and recreational needs in the future.

Stein said that for many purposes, railroads provided the most energy efficient means of moving goods. He said one $69,000 study would try to find a way to reduce the reliance on automobiles for travel in New England.

Another $30,000 of the $3.4 million transportation budget will be spent to assure progress continues on plans for high-speed rail passenger service between Boston and Washington.

Plans for Nuke

ROCKPORT, Maine [AP] — The regional administrator of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency told New England governors yesterday that he wants to bring about "a healthful and pleasing environment for the region."

But William Adams Jr. said he did not expect it would be necessary to run head-on with economic development goals to carry out that policy.

Adams, who became the region's EPA chief in July, spoke to the New England Regional Commission, which is made up of the six New England governors.

New Hampshire Gov. Meldrim Thomson asked Adams how he felt about nuclear power. Plans to build a atomic power plant at Seabrook, N.H., have stirred public demonstrations, and led to the arrest of 1,414 demonstrators at the plant site earlier this year.

"Nuclear power has a place in our society," Adams said, adding, "I expect the problems of Seabrook are behind us now."

Construction of the $2.5 billion plant was delayed for more than four years because of regulatory challenges.

Job opportunities for volunteers are available

Volunteer opportunities are still available through the Boltwood-Belchertown Project.

The project, a student-run organization based at Belchertown State School, offers a wide range of volunteer programs including: community exposure and awareness, dance-coffeehouse, creative expression, leisure time, citizen advocacy and public education.

Volunteers receive an initial orientation, continuous supervision and direction as well as the option to participate in periodic workshops related to the field of developmental disabilities.

Students do not have to be in a human service-related major to volunteer. It takes only a willingness to meet new friends and learn new skills. One colloquium credit is also available.

Unauthorized vehicles continue to be towed

Unauthorized vehicles parked in edge or peripheral lots on campus are subject to towing, just as they are in core lots.

Any vehicle that does not have a parking decal assigning it to the lot it is parked in will be considered an unauthorized vehicle. Vehicles without decals should be parked only at meters or in the Campus Center garage. Those persons who wish to purchase decals may do so at the campus parking office. Spaces in many parking lots on campus are still available.

If students, faculty, staff and visitors will comply with these regulations, "there should be a reduction in towing," according to Saul Chafin, University director of public safety.

Attempt to cross Atlantic again delayed by Dorothy

BAR HARBOR, Maine [UPI] — Tropical storm Dorothy, charted just south of Bermuda Tuesday, forced yet another delay in a planned attempt to cross the Atlantic by balloon.

Balloonists Dewey Reinhard, 47, and Steve Stephenson, 44, both of Colorado Springs, Colo., had been preparing for a liftoff as early as Wednesday morning when they received word that the low off Bermuda had developed into a fast-moving storm, headed in a northeasterly direction.

"We were just sitting down to lunch when we got the call," said Don Whitton, technical adviser to the $250,000 project. "It now looks like Saturday is the earliest they could go."

Whitton said Reinhard is determined to make a successful crossing and is taking no chances.

"Dewey won't be rushed into it," he said.

Reinhard, a businessman with considerable experience in ballooning, has been preparing for the trip a long time and had thought a "12-hour window" in a weather system would be available for a Wednesday liftoff.

Weather experts had calculated that if the silver and black "Eagle" took off before the "window" opened, it would carry Reinhard and Stephenson around in a circle. But they had warned if the liftoff were too late it would be caught in a "trough" carrying it toward Florida.

Originally, the pair planned to lift off last week, but a computer charting their course showed prevailing winds would have pushed them across the continent towards Michigan rather than over the ocean.

Meanwhile, they have worked on refining the performance of electrical equipment they will carry with them.

Negotiations underway for medium security prison

BOSTON [UPI] — Negotiations are under way between state officials and lawmakers to locate a medium security prison and additional pre-release centers in the Boston area in exchange for a population cut at existing prisons, Senate Ways and Means Chairman James A. Kelly said Tuesday.

Kelly, D-Oxford, said he favored the Boston location for a new prison because 73 per cent of the population incarcerated at Walpole, Norfolk and Concord state prisons was from within Route 128.

"We are trying to work out a compromise with Commissioner Hall and the Black Caucus whereby if the Correction Department would agree to set a capacity limit on Walpole at 500 beds we would try to get a medium security facility inside 128," Kelly said during a recess in a pulbic hearing on a $5.26 million capital outlay budget.

Kelly said he, Correction Commissioner Frank Hall and legislators planned to tour the Boston area next week to inspect proposed sites for the medium security and pre-release centers. Kelly said unused facilities at Boston State Hospital would be included on the tour.

The budget would provide funding to allow the Correction Department to renovate facilities at the Bridgewater and Gardner state hospitals and turn each into a 150-200 bed medium security prison to relieve alleged overcrowding at existing prisons.

However, representatives of a half dozen groups opposed to prison expansion testified at the Senate Ways and Means Committee hearing that prison admissions during the last eight months were significantly lower than estimated by correction officials a year ago. They said overcrowding no longer was a significant problem.

"The department has revised its predictions for the end of this year downward by 600 — that is, the prediction has been reduced by precisely the number of new prison cells originally requested by the governor," John Osler of the Massachusetts Coalition Against More Prisons told the committee.

Millers Falls Company may move from county

GREENFIELD, Mass. [UPI] — The Millers Falls Co. may move its plant from Franklin County if state and federal financial commitments for a new Deerfield industrial complex are not finalized this week, a spokesman said Tuesday.

James N. Mitchell, president of Millers Falls Co., said the commitments must be finalized by Friday and construction must begin within three weeks if a timetable set by the tool manufacturer's parent company, Ingersoll-Rand, is to be met.

"What happens during the next two days is crucial to Millers Falls building in Deerfield or anywhere in Franklin County," Mitchell said.

The company employs 600 people and is one of the county's largest employers. It had repeatedly threatened to leave the area before deciding to move its plant from a nearly 100-year-old building in Greenfield to the proposed Deerfield complex.

Mitchell and members of the Deerfield Economic Development and Industrial Corp., planners of the complex, planned meetings with state and federal officials this week to discuss the proposed $1 million plant.

The state is to provide 30 per cent of the cost of the proposed industrial complex, which would then be leased to Millers Falls, and the federal Economic and Development Administration would pay 70 per cent of the construction cost.

Four journalists named to join Nieman Fellows

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. [UPI] — Four journalists from other countries were named Tuesday by Harvard to join 11 Americans in the 40th class of Nieman Fellows for 1977-78.

The four associate Nieman Fellows are Arun Mathai Chacko, 29, chief reporter for The Indian Express in New Delhi; Obed A. Kunene, 40, editor and political columnist for Ilanga in Durban, South Africa; Karol J. Szyndzielorz, 40, senior columnist on foreign affairs for The Daily Zycie Warszawy in Warsaw, Poland, and Satoshi Yoshida, 29, economics reporter for the Kyodo News Service in Tokyo, Japan.

Chacko plans to study international relations, comparative governments and fiction writing. Kunene will concentrate on the social, economic, political and educational disciplines and the mass media. Szyndzielorz will focus on international problems and energy policies. Yoshida will study the history and government of the United States and the effect of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations on U.S. foreign policy.

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 28 — Born today you are an ambitious and impatient person who finds it difficult to wait for results. Your impatience with slow results can turn to pessimism and you tend to waste a great deal of emotional energy bemoaning false hardships. You admire people who get things done, little realizing that you are, or could be, one of those people yourself. You are quite willing to work hard and long for what you want – but you are not willing to wait in the wings for situations to resolve themselves naturally.

You are admired for your intelligence, but you are not an intellectual. Problems, plans, ideas in the abstract don't appeal and are often incomprehensible to you. Yours is a practical intelligence, enabling you to grasp and employ principles of mechanics. As a student, you may not enter into discussion very much and, as a result, may gain a reputation for being either shy or sullen. Fortunately, you are neither; your tendency toward silence in groups will pass with the passing of your student days.

You will give a great deal of your time and effort to secure the happiness, of loved ones. Whatever criticism may be leveled at your perhaps inordinate urge for success NOW is almost completely negated when this aspect of your character is understood.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 29

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22) — Ideas without action might as well be non-existent. Implement new plans; delegate authority.

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21) — If you wish to improve your performance, relax. There is little progress to be made if your nerves are showing.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) — You would do well to turn your thoughts to the various tasks at hand. Don't spread yourself too thin.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19) — Take decisive action before it's too late, regarding the future of a youngster. Educational matters are important.

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18) — Procrastination is the enemy of progress. Make sure those under your care realize this before it's too late.

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20) — Carry out your plans to the letter, or you may unwittingly leave out something essential to the success of the whole.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — A question of education arises early in the day and may conflict with questions concerning vacation-time.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Carry out plans this morning before you attempt to draw up new ones for new projects. Introduce an old friend to a new one.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Promises may delight others, but accomplishments will satisfy your own soul more. Please your own sense of self.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — An unusual business opportunity may cause you to change plans. An emotional confrontation at evening unsettles surroundings.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22) — Remain alert to the minor changes of mood exhibited by others during a time of ticklish enterprise. You can make or break the day!

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22) — It will take considerable thought and only a little less action to bring you to the top of your form today.

Phillies top Chicago; clinch flag

CHICAGO [UPI] — The Philadelphia Phillies are National League Eastern Division Champions for the second consecutive year and slugger Mike Schmidt feels it was harder the second time around.

The Phils captured the division title yesterday when pitcher Larry Christenson hit a grand slam homer and drove in five runs to record his 18th victory, a 15-9 triumph over the Chicago Cubs. The win sends the Phils against the Dodgers in a best three-of-five series for the NL pennant starting in Los Angeles next Tuesday night. Philadelphia's last pennant came in 1950.

"We climbed a bigger hill this year than last year," Schmidt said after hitting his 38th homer and scoring three runs. "I feel we're a better club than last year's when we had a 15-game lead through most of the season. We had to come from behind this time."

Christenson was the star in the clincher as the right-hander paced the Phils' 16-hit attack off six Chicago hurlers. Christenson, 18-6, went seven innings and left during a five-run Chicago eighth. Tug McGraw mopped up for the Phils.

"It was one of the best hits I had but not the best," said Christenson of his third home run of the season. "I recall last season when I hit two off of Mickey Lolich in New York to help in a come-from-behind victory. It came at a time when the team was struggling."

With the Phils leading 4-2, Christenson's homer highlighted a seven-run seventh inning off reliever Dennis Lamp. The other runs scored on Garry Maddox's two-run single and Bob Boone's RBI double. Boone knocked in three runs altogether and Schmidt hit his homer in the eighth inning.

NY warned on stub sales

NEW YORK [UPI] — The State Attorney General yesterday asked four New York professional sports teams to end their practice of requiring fans to purchase one or more exhibition game tickets if they buy season tickets.

Attorney General Louis J. Lefkowitz said season ticket fans should have the right to choose freely whether they wish to purchase tickets for exhibition games.

In letters to Roy Boe, President of the New York Islanders; Michael Burke, President of Madison Square Garden Center Inc.; Ralph Wilson, President of the Buffalo Bills; and Norman Sonju, President of the Buffalo Braves, Lefkowitz said the practice placed an "unfair burden" on fans.

The practice of requiring fans to buy preseason tickets is followed by the New York Knickerbockers and Buffalo Braves of the National Basketball Association, The New York Rangers and Islanders of the National Hockey League, and the Buffalo Bills of the National Football League, Assistant Attorney General Stephen Mindell said.

The leagues have left the matter to the discretion of team management.

Russell signs with ABC-tv

NEW YORK [UPI] — Bill Russell, generally recognized as the greatest defensive center in the history of basketball, signed an exclusive multi-year contract yesterday with ABC-TV as a sports commentator.

"Russell's future with ABC will not be limited to basketball," said Roone Arledge, ABC news and sports president, in making the announcement. "He will be an all-purpose sports commentator and, because of his intelligence, quick wit and current affairs we expect him to add a special dimension to many of our programs."

Russell, a veteran of 11 championship Boston Celtic teams and a five-time most valuable player in the NBA, covered pro basketball for the network from 1971 to 1973 and worked for ABC at the 1972 and 1976 summer olympics.

Soccer poses ad dilemma

NEW YORK [UPI] — The scene: soccer fan in front of a TV set. Television announcer: "The Cosmos are backing Seattle to the wall.... Pele centers to Beckenbauer... A pass to Hunt on the wing.... He shoots.... Oohhh!! The goalie pushes it round the post. Now the Cosmos line up for a corner kick....

"And we'll be back in a minute with more soccer action."

Who will know what happens during that minute? Only the fans at the stadium.

The agonized TV viewer watches a commercial, opens a beer or crunches a potato chip in frustration.

Soccer is a non-stop sport. Will it change to meet the demands of commerce and bring in the money it needs to grow?

"No," is the resounding answer given by the North American Soccer League Commissioner, the president of TVs — the independent television network that broadcasts NASL games — and at least one general manager.

"I don't think it's in anyone's interest to change the game," Phil Woosnam, the commissioner, said recently.

But some suggested changes have been bandied about by those who think or fear that soccer may have to meet the demands of a public and television used to stop-and-go sport, bred on the excitement of high-scoring games.

The main fear is that businessmen will bully or entice soccer officials into instituting timeouts, an artificial stopping of the game to permit TV commercials, which are common to other American sports.

Woosnam says such a change has no place in soccer's future. It would destroy the game's momentum, which he says is a "critical factor."

Nevertheless, the television viewer still sees a game that is interrupted by ads.

"It's a real irritant, it breaks the flow of the game," said Dick Berg, general manager of a new franchise in Oakland.

At Berg's suggestion, the Dr. Pepper soft-drink company tried one solution to the problem during the past season— a commercial that occupied three-fourths of the screen, the remaining quarter being devoted to the match.

"It got just a fantastic response," Berg said. "I think it will become a part of all our sports programming."

Eddie Einhorn, president of TVs, disagrees.

"That's completely against the whole theory of advertising," he said. "No client is going to go for that."

Einhorn said TVs does attempt to stage the commercials when play is at a lull and makes the interruptions longer, but less frequent, because fewer interruptions are less "offensive."

Following this policy, TVs missed two goals in the seven games it televised this season. Einhorn said missed goals were replayed.

"I haven't got one bad piece of mail at this office," he said.

But Woosnam, like Berg, argues that there are incentives for sponsors at least to give the new split-screen commercial format a testing.

"I think it's going to have a positive influence, it will keep people tied to the television while the sport proceeds on a normal basis. Instead of going to the kitchen, like they might do in football, they'll stay in front of the TV, and the commercials," he said.

He also said that because of soccer's "international aspect", it is in Madison Avenue's interest that it succeed unblemished here.

"That opens up an entire new field for Madison Avenue and the media," he said, speaking of possible U.S. World Club and World Cup contenders of the future. Einhorn also thinks international competition will "spice up" soccer's appeal.

"This is a natural growth of the sport. Country to country competition is bigger than league competition," he said. "The whole soccer world culminates in the World Cup."

As a matter of record, in soccer-mad Europe, live game coverage is never interrupted by ads. Britain, Belgium, France, Germany, Switzerland and other countries broadcast commercials before the game, at halftime and afterwards. The Coca Cola Co., another soccer sponsor, says it has no plans to use the format but is keeping its options open.

Luncheons

Today at 12 noon, the UMass football team will present its second luncheon of the year at the VFW Building on Main St.

The public is cordially invited to attend each luncheon, which will feature Coach Dick MacPherson and several of his players and coaching staff.

The luncheons will be held each Wednesday from now until the end of the season.

Yanks win, Sox chase

Sox silence Jays

BOSTON [UPI] — Bill Campbell, looking every bit like the million-dollar relief pitcher the Red Sox purchased last winter, notched his 30th and 31st saves last night in keeping Boston's flickering American League East pennant hopes alive with a 6-5, 5-1 sweep of the Toronto Blue Jays.

Campbell, who leads the American League in saves and has made 68 relief appearances, pitched 1 2-3 innings in each game to pass Dick Radatz for the Red Sox' club record for saves. He has been credited with nine saves in his last 10 games.

The victories stretched the Red Sox' winning streak to five games and eight of the last nine games.

Carl Yastrzemski and Jim Rice each passed milestones in the nightcap won by Luis Tiant, now 12-8. The 38-year-old Yastrzemski, who drove in two runs in the opener, knocked in his 100th run with a third-inning groundout in the second game, making him the fifth oldest player in Major League history to drive home 100 runs in a season.

Rice, who missed the first game because he was stuck in traffic, had a pair of hits to become the first Boston player with 200 hits in a season in 30 years. Johnny Pesky, Boston's first base coach and Rice's batting instructor, accomplished the feat three times, the last time in 1947.

The Red Sox built a 5-0 lead through six innings of the nightcap, getting two runs in the second off unlucky Dave Lemanczyk. George Scott and Fred Lynn hit one-out singles and Butch Hobson was credited with an RBI double when second baseman Dave McKay and rightfielder Otto Velez collided on the third baseman's fly. Lynn, who moved to third on Hobson's hit, scored on Denny Doyle's groundout.

In the third, Ted Cox singled and Rice doubled for his 200th hit before Yastrzemski grounded out scoring Cox. Boston added two runs in the sixth on a single by Carlton Fisk and a triple by Scott, who continued home on a throwing error by McKay.

Toronto Blue Jays' outfielder Al Woods was carried off the field last night in the 2nd inning, in the first game of a doubleheader at Fenway Park. Woods was injured after he chased down a ball hit by Red Sox rookie Ted Cox. (UPI)

Yanks roll along

NEW YORK [UPI] — Thurman Munson scored from third base on Jim Bibby's second wild pitch of the ninth inning last night enabling New York to score a 2-1 victory over the Cleveland Indians, the Yankees fifth consecutive win.

The triumph, their 11th in 13th meetings with the Indians this season, reduced the Yankees' magic number for clinching the American League East title to three games.

Munson led off the ninth with a single and moved to second on Bibby's first wild pitch of the inning. After Reggie Jackson drew an intentional walk, Lou Piniella advanced the runners with a sacrifice bunt. Then, with Dave Kingman at bat, Bibby, 12-13, threw a pitch into the dirt, for his third wild throw of the game.

Dick Tidrow started his seventh consecutive game for the Yankees since being inserted into the rotation for injured Catfish Hunter. He pitched 7 1-3 innings before giving way to Sparky Lyle, who pitched 1 2-3 innings to raise his record to 13-5.

JV's nip PC

By KEVIN McCAFFREY
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — While the war was raging over the running supremacy in New England varsity competition, UMass coach Arnie Morse's squadron encountered a battle of its own in the JV ranks, as the sub-varsity teams from UMass, Providence and Harvard met yesterday at Franklin Park.

After the dust settled the freshman harriers had shutout the Crimson, 15-50, and surprisingly manhandled the Friars, 23-35.

Individually, Providence's Dave Ball ran the soggy 3.1 mile course in 15:23, good for a 5 second victory over Kevin Molteni of UMass. Mike Dorion of UMass was third.

Rounding out the scoring positions for the Minutemen were Craig Arnold, Bob Hunt, and Tim Beauparlant, who finished 5th-7th, all under 16 minutes.

"The Providence team possesses three very good runners," said Coach Arnie Morse." The winner of today's race, Ball, is a 4:08 miler from Ireland, and Radcliffe was Rhode Island's state champ. The competition was there and we responded. I'm pleased with the way they tackled the course, I told everyone to attack the second mile hard, and that's exactly what they did."

The times turned in by Molteni and Dorion are the third and fourth fastest times ever recorded for a UMass runner on the Franklin Park course.

"Yes, I'm happy with the times, and I'm impressed with Molteni and Dorion," said Morse. "Our fifth place finisher Tim Beauparlant was a pleasant surprise as he raced above expectations."

In the past few years teams from Providence and Northeastern have posed the only serious threats to the Minutemen's stronghold of the best JV team in New England.

The sole challenge left to the team's winning ways confronts them this Saturday at Franklin Park, when Northeastern and St. Johns stroll into town.

Linksters capture fourth NE title

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's golf team, sparked by strong performance from co-captains Flynt Lincoln and Jim McDermott and sophomore Vic Lahteine, squeezed by a determined Central Conn. squad to win the rain-shortened New England Championship yesterday at Hampden Country Club in Springfield.

It was the Minutemen's fourth consecutive New England title and their second straight victory of the fall season. Last weekend, the linksters won the Yankee Conference Championship at Stowe.

The tournament, scheduled to be a two-day tournament, with one round at Longmeadow Country Club and one round at Hampden, was shortened because of constant rains on Monday to an 18 hole affair at Hampden.

Half of the 42-team field teed off early yesterday morning, while the other half played their 18 later in the afternoon.

UMass, one of the teams to play in the morning, posted a total score of 310, best four of five scores counting. They then had to wait and see if their effort would be good enough to win.

Central Conn. playing in the afternoon round, paced by consistent scores from all five players, finished only two shots shy of the mark at 312. Southern Conn., URI, and Quinnipiac all finished at 314. After going to the score of the fifth man, URI finished third, Southern Conn. fourth and Quinnipiac fifth.

Once again, the Minutemen were led to victory by co-captains Lincoln and McDermott, who continued to play the steady, consistent golf that has been their mark over the years.

Lincoln, a sophomore, playing in his home town of Longmeadow, shot a super round of 75, only a stroke off the medalist winning score of 74.

The medal was won by Bill Littlejohn of Salem State, who won it on the second hole of a four-man playoff.

Lincoln, who started his round slowly, finished with an eagle three on the par five eighth hole.

McDermott, who was hampered by torn ligaments in his right wrist, played truly inspired golf and finished with a solid 75.

An unexpected boost to the Minuteman cause came from Lahteine. Lahteine, who shot an 80 last week at Stowe, fired an impressive 76 yesterday, and that was the key to the UMass triumph.

Junior Jeff Orr, who shot a solid 74 at Stowe, struggled to an 84 yesterday. Junior Bill Campbell shot an 88 which did not figure in the best four of five scoring.

Coach Ed Vlach was very pleased with his team's performance and felt more satisfied than he did last week. "This tournament is bigger than the Yankee Conference match," he said. "There were six schools at Stowe, there were 41 here. We beat the best in New England."

Vlach thought that his team perhaps had a slight advantage by playing its 18 holes in the morning.

"In the afternoon there were many footprints in the greens left by the players from the morning round. It made putting difficult," said Vlach.

Vlach added that the wind was not as bad in the morning as it was later in the afternoon. "We only had to play four holes in the wind," said Vlach. "The team that played in the afternoon had it for eight or nine holes."

The Minutemen will now try to make it three wins in a row as they get ready for the Toski Intercollegiate Invitational tournament, coming up this weekend at home at Hickory Ridge Country Club.

Stickers meet Owls

By JIM GLEASON
Collegian Staff

Weather permitting, the UMass field hockey team will play Keene St. today at 3:00 on the field behind NOPE.

The Minutewomen, after a win and two straight postponements, are eagerly awaiting the arrival of the Owls, who UMass defeated last year, 4-1.

UMass coach Judith Davidson said that her team should be favored, but also added that the opponents "are young and improved over last year."

"They have basically the same team as last year and I remember them as a hustling, scrappy team. So we can't play easy with them. We can beat them as long as we're aggressive too because I think we have more talent," she said.

Due to the rain, UMass was forced to practice inside all week. Yesterday was its first day outside since the end of last week. Whether there is any effect on the team remains to be seen.

The postponed game with Central Conn., scheduled for last Monday, has been rescheduled for Oct. 20.

The junior varsity game will follow the varsity game today at 4:15.

UM booters shoot for third straight win

By MARK MARCHAND
Collegian Staff

Shooting for its third straight win of the season, the UMass soccer team travels to Keene State today for a 3:30 contest.

Coached by Russ Kidd, the Minutemen have gotten off to a tremendous start this fall, as they have yet to be scored upon in their two contests.

UMass will be facing a talented Owls team which finished its 1976 season with an 8-5-2 record, although coach Ron Butcher was very unsatisfied with the mark.

According to Keene State sources, Butcher is one of the best coaches on its athletic staff and in his eight-year tenure as soccer coach has compiled an impressive 96-21-8 record. Last year, though, the Minutemen were victors over the Owls in a tight 1-0 contest.

One of the Keene State standouts is senior goaltender Tod Belron, who formed the backbone of the Owls' defense last year while allowing 17 goals in 15 contests. He also had six shutouts.

According to Kidd, though, the Owls have been guilty of some unsportsmanlike tactics in the past years.

"They have a very talented team, but they really don't play a clean game of soccer," said Kidd. "In last year's game three of our starters, including Joel Moscolo and Ed Niemiec who are with us this year, were taken out of the game in the first ten minutes due to illegal hits.

"They were very obvious violations and the tapes that we had of the game only confirmed it. I really hope today's game is not the same," Kidd added.

Kidd expressed some concern over the fact that his team has not had much outdoor practice over the past week due to inclement weather.

"I really don't think it'll have any effect, but I just hope it doesn't continue," Kidd said of the rain.

After today's contest at Keene, the Minutemen will return home to prepare for their home opener against the University of Vermont on Saturday t 11:00. The soccer team will be making its debut on the newly-prepared field directly behind Boyden building; an event that they've been eagerly anticipating since the beginning of the season.

Women harriers have close call

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — The UMass women's cross country team weathered its closest dual meet in the last two years as it defeated Radcliffe yesterday at Franklin Park in Dorchester, 28-35. Brandeis also ran, but did not finish enough runners to compile a score.

"I was impressed with Radcliffe," said UMass coach Charlotte Lettis.

Anne Sullivan, Radcliffe's standout freshman from Rhode Island, led the whole race and won handily in 17:53 for the 3.1 mile course.

Co-captain Jane Welzel ran most of the race in second, finishing 31 seconds behind Sullivan in 18:24.

Tina Francario and Priscilla Wilson moved after the two mile mark to get by three Radcliffe runners and Donna Randall of Brandeis. Francario was third in 18:41 and Wilson fourth in 19:06.

Radcliffe provided a surprise and a scare as it put three out of the next four runners across the line, with Randall sixth.

At this point, the score of the meet was 18-21 in UMass's favor, with four runners across for each team, as rapidly immproving frosh Linda Welzel finished ninth for UMass.

Then, however, Radcliffe faltered badly, and UMass took advantage of it with superior depth, as Debbie Farmer, Sue Swartz, Jo Chapman and Eileen Everett grabbed 10th-13th places to insure victory number four this season.

At the gun, Sullivan raced into the lead, and was never headed. By the two mile mark, the order was fairly well set, with Sullivan, Welzel, Sarah Linsley (Rad.), Francario, Wilson and Randall beginning to spread out.

At about 2¼ miles, Francario made a move and spurted by Linsley, followed shortly after by Wilson.

Francario said after the race, "This is the first time I really used strategy. I started slow, then focused on people's backs until I reeled them in. When I came up beside their last girl (Linsley), I knew I had her. When I made my move, I knew she would never stay with me."

Farmer ensured the win by running what Lettis called, "an incredible race." She worked the last ½ mile to pick up several positions and fill the important fifth spot.

When Lettis said, "you (the team) ran your best race so far," Farmer had the classic comeback.

"Did we run that hard?" she asked. "I wondered why I felt so terrible — I thought I was just running bad."

The Minutewomen showed how much they've improved over the last year by bettering their times from the 1976 Radcliffe meet. Welzel improved her time by 1:36, while her sister Linda, in her first year of running, ran a better time than Jane did last year (19:34 compared to 19:50).

Francario's time would've put her ahead of Amherst's Marina Buckley last year, while Wilson's mark would've placed her in second. The only other veteran who markedly improved her time was Farmer, who was 22 seconds quicker. The other vets were either hurt or sick.

"I felt good, but it had to run hard," said Jane Welzel. "The heat bothered me, though — it dried me out until I wasn't sure where I was — I just kept running."

"I don't feel anything," said Francario. "I'm numb. It was a hard race."

"I know what we need to do now," said Lettis. "We'll work on strength and distance work.

"We know exactly where we stand, so it was good that we were challenged like this. We still pulled through and that's important."

Johanna Foreman did not make the meet for Radcliffe, supposedly because of a schedule conflict. Lettis said it wouldn't have made a difference.

"Tina (Francario) and Dill (Wilson) are both better cross country runners than her, so I don't think it would have made a difference," she said.

Along with that, UMass was hampered by illness and injury. Beth Collins turned an ankle halfway through the race and may be lost indefinitely. Anne Bradshaw had a sore achilles along with her cold and didn't travel.

Jo Chapman is coming off an injury and is not quite into shape. Barb Callanan has the flu, but ran anyway, finishing looking like death warmed over. She will definitely be in the top seven when she recovers. Sue Swartz had a severe side cramp, but still finished.

"With Sue (Swartz), Barb (Callanan and Johara (Chapman) back, Radcliffe won't come as close, but the New England's will still be a battle, said Lettis.

The Minutewomen will now be idle until Oct. 8, when they will travel to Albany State.

BOSTON — Junior Dan Dillon finished a surprising third, and with teammates John Treacy and freshman Gerry Deegan tieing for first, Providence dashed any hopes of a UMass victory as the Friars proved why they are rated sixth in the nation by Track and Field with a 19-37 dual meet victory over the Minuteman harriers.

Providence raised their season record to 4-0 with a dual win over Harvard while also raising their consecutive dual meet victory streak to 40, over the last four years. Meanwhile, UMass' record stands at 3-1 with yesterday's defeat to the Friars but with a victory over the Crimson, 15-45.

Providence easily won the meet with Treacy, Deegan, and Dillon all crossing the finish line with a time of 24:01 for the five mile Franklin Park course. UMass scored next with co-captain Mike Quinn's fourth place finish (of 24:17). Junior transfer from Providence, Stetson Arnold scored his first UMass points with a fifth place time of 24:32.

The Friars put the finishing touches on the victory as Mike Byrne and Peter Crooke came in with six and seventh place finishes to ice the meet with 19 points. UMass' other scorers were Frank Carroll, 8th (24:56); Lou Panaccione, 9th (24:57); and Tom Wolff, 11th (25:11) for a team score of 37.

Harvard's first man finished after the top five UMass scorers had completed the race, producing a score of 15-45.

"Our team was optimistic on the way home from the meet that we had given Providence a hard meet," said UMass coach Ken O'Brien. "I had no idea Dillon would be this good so early. Providence has a strong team with all their runners in excellent shape, but our team showed today that we have potential to catch them."

Providence coach Bob Amato was not surprised with Dillon's performance saying that he knew at the beginning of the season that he was going to have a great campaign.

"We altered Dan's training in that we rested him for part of the summer," said Amato. "We have him gradually increasing his running workouts with the idea that Dan won't peak at the early part of the season. It seems to be working for him and I expect him to improve even more over the season."

The Providence coach added that he felt his team being picked as the sixth team in the nation was justified and may even be picked higher by the end of the season.

UMass captain Mike Quinn felt by the season's end UMass would be much closer to Providence and he personally felt that he would be closer to Treacy, Deegan and Dillon.

"This is my first actual race since last spring and also my first actual competitive racing coming off a slight knee injury over the summer," he said, "but I feel myself and the rest of the team will be closer to Providence by the end of the season."

Arnold said he had no idea that former teammate Dillon was in as good shape as he showed in yesterday's meet. He also said that by the year's end UMass will beat the Friars either in the New Englands or the IC4A's.

"I know myself that Mike and I will be much closer to Treacy and Deegan before the year's end and also our 3rd, 4th, and 5th men will move up on Dillon. We were good today but we'll get better," said Arnold.

The meet itself was run under sunny and warm conditions on a slightly wet course and was decided early. Treacy, Deegan, and Dillon broke away from the pack and ran a quick 9:05 two mile. Their teammates Peter Crooke, Mike Byrne, and Ed Hartnett were sixth, seventh and tenth while UMass controlled the fourth and fifth spots with Quinn and Arnold, respectively.

At the finish, Arnold passed three runners to the fifth position, while Carroll fought his way to eighth, Panaccione, ninth, and Wolff, 11th.

UMass will have three days to rest up before taking on two more tough opponents, Northeastern and St. Johns on Saturday at Franklin Park.

Don't hate the Yankees

It has become fashionable to hate the New York Yankees.

Hate, hate, hate. It reverberates all over campus.

"I hate the Yankees. They built up their team the wrong way ... "

"I can't stand them .. all they did was go out and buy a pennant ... "

"They make me sick. They're a bunch of egomaniacal, all for themselves, selfish players ... "

Whoa. Wait a minute. Look at the standings.

If the Yankees were (or are) a selfish bunch of baseball players, they would not be in first place.

I (and please don't throw any bricks my way) actually admire the New York Yankees.

Yes, and it's a shock even to me. Me, the Boston Red Sox fan. Me, the person who has devoted countless hours to listening to Ned Martin and Jim Woods. Me, the person who sat in the Fenway Park bleachers and cheered when the Red Sox went on their big mid-summer rampage.

So why do I admire the Yankees?

It's simple. They came through in the clutch.

Faced with media pressure, hatred from the rest of the league, and the knowledge that every team was aiming for it, New York still went out and is in good shape to win itself an American League East pennant.

Boo Reggie Jackson all you want, but he has won almost two dozen games with clutch hits.

Despise Bill Martin, but he has proven that he can manage a team to a second-straight title.

Condemn Mickey Rivers, but the man has hit over .300 and still, despite a reputation as a mediocre fielder, shone in center when the Sox played the Yanks a few weeks ago.

Now, it is true that George Steinbrenner is not among the most beloved owners in the game, but why condemn him because he has money and is willing to spend it for quality players?

And perhaps this is delving into my philosophy of professional sports, but it simply reads thusly: Pro sports are money. Them that has, gets, and them that don,'t don't.

Look at Sam Pollock of the Montreal Canadiens. Scorned and defiled by many, he still remains a shrewd operator with a keen business mind. Piling up draft choice after draft choice, he built his team into a powerhouse.

So it is with Steinbrenner. Although he hasn't taken the Pollock approach, he still used his wealth to build up his team.

People belittle the Yankees by saying they don't have a farm system. Hey, now, really. How about Ron Guidry? Or Thurman Munson? Or any of the players New York traded away to get Willie Randolph, Chris Chambliss, Graig Nettles, and Mickey Rivers? All farm system products, they.

The Yanks also have one of the best catching prospects in all of the majors resting down in West Haven. Don't think they aren't equipped with scouts and coaches.

I guess what this all boils down to is simple: envy. People who downplay the Yankees do so because they are envious of their wealth and power.

Tom Yawkey may have been a nice man, Calvin Griffith may be trying to hold the line on spending, and Phil Wrigley may have been a congenial old chap, but they are unable to function in the ruthless world of professional sports. A look at their teams' standings is proof in itself.

Good clean fun in professional sports is a hoax. It's whether the balance sheets report a gain or loss is what primarily matters now.

Money talks in pro sports. It always will. Until league offices rule that a team must hold the line on spending will there be a stop to the buying and selling.

It seems to me that most people who hate the Yankees do so because they have money and prestige.

So hate Reggie Jackson because he has a big mouth and an even bigger ego. But don't put the man down because he makes so much money. More power to him if he can get it.

Hate Mickey Rivers because he assaulted Bill Lee. But don't malign him because of his competitive spirit.

And hate Billy Martin not for his team, but for his personality.

But please don't hate the Yankees. Hate the money, if you will, but not the team.

Public higher ed wins hiring freeze battle

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

The governor's office has backed down on it's threat to public higher education's fiscal autonomy after one state university filed a lawsuit protesting the governor's attempt to institute a hiring freeze at the school.

The governor's office yesterday rescinded it's hiring freeze for the state higher education system after Southeastern Massachusetts University (SMU) took to court Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, Secretary of Educational Affairs Paul Parks and Administration Secretary John R. Buckley.

Parks, Dukakis, and Buckley could not be reached for comment last night.

Dukakis plans to cut 3,000 jobs from state payrolls by means of an attrition program before his re-election bid in 1978. The governor has instituted a hiring freeze on state agencies not complying with the attrition program.

Originally included among the state agencies were the state's higher education institutions.

SMU claimed in it's suit that the governor's hiring freeze violated guaranteed fiscal autonomy of the higher education institutions.

The governor's office sent letters in August to state colleges and universities outlining the attrition plan to trim personnel. Additional letters were sent in September threatening a hiring freeze if attrition goals were not met.

While UMass received a letter in August, UMass President Robert C. wood last night said the University did not receive the September letter.

Assistant Secretary of Educational Affairs Richard Ames said, "We all agreed that we did not have the legal authority to freeze hiring, because of fiscal autonomy."

"There had been a misunderstanding," he added. Ames said he expects court proceedings to be halted in light of the "clarification".

UMass-Amherst Student Government Association co-President Jon Hite said "the governor's threat is another act of his insensitivity to the needs of public higher education.

"SMU's lawsuit took a lot of courage, but their victory will have far-reaching impact of all public higher education," Hite said.

12 dorms to hold repeat elections

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

Irregularities in the Student Senate and Board of Governors elections held Monday and Tuesday have forced new elections in twelve dormitories, as well as appointments of new senators by the Greek council. Board of Governors elections will be also repeated.

According to Government Affairs Committee co-chairperson Janis Perry the new elections will be held before October 10th.

Monday is the deadline for all challenges. Challenges must be submitted by 4:00 p.m. The committee will meet at 5:00 p.m. to decide which challenges are valid. They will also designate the time and place of the new elections.

Unchallenged senators will be seated next Wednesday at the senate meeting.

Co-chairperson Donald M. Bishop said the irregularities were caused by a shortage of people to run the election. "Everywhere the problem has been man power," Bishop said. Perry added "it's the same problem every year."

Irregularities were reported in the following dorms: Chadbourne, since about fifteen write-ins all had the same handwriting; Field, because the ballots were delivered to the dorm a day late; and Brett, since there were forty more ballots cast than there were computer cards of eligible voters. Bishop said the Brett returns were an apparent attempt at "ballot-stuffing".

Johnson, Lewis, VanMeter North and South, did not hold elections due to a lack of people to staff the polls. Cashhin, Knowlton, Coolidge, and Kennedy Lower and Middle had ballot boxes missing. Moore did not hold an election.

The BOG elections will be repeated because, "many places ran out of BOG ballots," Perry said. There were enough missing ballots to change the results, she added. The Government Affairs Committee hopes to hold a centralized BOG election possible at a dinning commons, she said.

The Greeks were originally allocated four seats in the senate, but the senate last night voted to give them two more. The top four vote getters will be seated in the senate while the Greek council will appoint the other two.

Senate Speaker Brian DeLima said to alleviate the problem of finding election workers he hoped to form an election commission to run all future elections.

During this election, the tables were staffed by dorm councils, senate volunteers, and people in the dorm.

In other results the commuter election matched a union slate against a non-affiliated slate. The union candidates elected all of its members, while the opposing slate elected eight of it's representatives.

With 113 senate seats at stake, ten percent of the eligible commuters voted. Twenty five per cent of the Greek and dorm students voted.

Bromery won't ask for top spot; trustees would have to 'invite' him

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

UMass-Amherst Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery last night said he would have to be invited to apply for the post of UMass president, or someone would have to enter his application for him to consider the UMass presidency.

Bromery told the Collegian in a telephone interview from Ohio last night he "would not send in an application for the presidency."

He said either the UMass Board of Trustees would have to "invite" him to apply as a candidate to replace president Robert C. Wood, who is resigning January, or someone would have to enter his application for him.

Bromery also said while he has heard "rumors" that he is among candidates being considered for director of the United States Geological Survey, he has "not been contacted by anyone from the federal government" about the post.

"I am not actively seeking any other positions outside the University," Bromery said. He added he saw last Friday's issue of Science magazine which listed him as a candidate for the federal post.

Bromery said there would be "a lot I would have to understand from the Board (of Trustees)" before he would consider the office of UMass president, or serve as interim president.

The University trustees this summer determined that anyone appointed as interim president in January cannot be considered for the permanent position.

"I am not actively seeking any other positions outside the University."—Chancellor Bromery

"I would need to know what kind of president the board would want," Bromery said. "I would need to know whether they wanted a continuation of a Bob Wood presidency, or what."

Bromery also responded to reports in local media which said he has served as chancellor here long enough.

Bromery said he has "exceeded the average life span" typical for a position like his, but added "as long as I am effective, I will stay (at UMass)."

"I would leave the University in a difficult position if I were to exit now," Bromery said.

Bromery said the University is in a "fairly high degree of flux" now. Examples of this, he said, are that there are many new trustees seeking to settle into their roles, and the uncertainty in the University over the status of UMass-Boston Chancellor Carlo L. Galino. Sources say Galino is presently petitioning the trustees to stay on the past University retirement policy.

Bromery is also in charge of formulating and implementing policies concerning collective bargaining with the faculty union in the role as the University Executive Vice President.

Bromery took the position in March after about 1600 faculty on the Amherst and Boston campuses a month earlier chose the Massachusetts Teachers Association to represent them at the bargaining table.

Bromery took the position saying he would work in that capacity until Dec. 31, 1977, at which time a review would be conducted by himself and the trustees to decide if the position is a "workable one."

Bakke case—viewed from UMass

By MARK HORAN
Collegian Staff

In less than one week, Allan Bakke's landmark reverse discrimination case will go before the United States Supreme Court.

What effects could the Supreme Court decision have on the three campuses of UMass, and in particular the Medical Center in Worcester? After talking to administrators on all three campuses the apparent answer is — very little.

The Bakke case centers around a white California male, Allan Bakke, whose application to the University of California Medical School was rejected. Bakke fought the case in the California Supreme Court on the grounds that he was discriminated against by a quota system.

The system he contends, allows less qualified minority students to be admitted to the school.

The California court upheld Bakke's case and ordered him to be admitted, saying that the 16 seats reserved for minorities was discriminatory. Next week the University of California will bring the case to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The UMass-Worcester Medical Center affirmative action director, Margaret Booker, told the Collegian that the school does not use a quota system.

"We set a goal of 10 per cent students with minority backgrounds and we try to meet it through our recruitment," said Booker. She added the school has met that goal or come close but standards have not been lowered to achieve that goal.

Booker continued by saying that the Medical Center can only admit Massachusetts students. Consequently, they advertise throughout the state with only a slight emphasis on minorities, she said.

"We have used present minority students to recruit potential minority candidates," added Booker.

At the Boston Campus, Dean of Admissions Douglas Hartnagel said that the school also has "goals we set in relation to the area we serve."

Hartnagel said the goals are proportionate to the population of the greater Boston area. The goals are met through their recruitment programs only, he said.

"Our recruitment has been pretty much on target," said Hartnagel, while adding that no standards are lowered to admit minorities.

Hartnagel did say some students apply through the Special Admissions Program, which is designed for students with special academic problems (such as communications disorders or older students).

At the Amherst campus, Assistant Dean of Admissions Juan Caban said that the campus has no quotas and no goals in admissions of minority students.

"We try to recruit minorities, but our standards are not lowered," said Caban.

Caban said both he and Assistant Dean Muriel Wiggins go to high schools specifically to recruit minority students. Caban is the admissions officer in charge of the Bilingual Collegiate Program, while Wiggins works with other minority students and the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students (CCEBS).

Amherst man charged with knife attack

An Amherst man arrested by campus police for allegedly pulling a knife on a campus police officer pleaded not guilty in Northampton District Court Tuesday on charges of larceny of less than $100, assault with a dangerous weapon, and carrying a dangerous weapon on his person.

Bernard S. Chase, 27, of the Village Inn, Amity St., was being pursued by a campus police officer in connection with the robbery of a woman's wallet in the Fine Arts Center at 11:31 a.m. Tuesday when he allegedly pulled a knife on the officer.

His case will be continued to October 4th.

The Chair Affair

A 22 year old UMass student was arraigned in Hampshire County District Court and charged with petty larceny yesterday, police said.

Edward Mulvaney, 427 Greenough, was arrested by Amherst Police at 1:30 yesterday morning for carrying a chair out of the "Time Out" bar in Amherst Center.

On September 26-7th, police said 10-speed orange bike belonging to David E. Stutack of 411 John Adams Tower was stolen from the John Adams Tower bike rack. The bike was valued at $200, police said.

Will Step-up Patrols

Police said on September 27th between 5 and 6 p.m., the ramp door of Whitmore Administration Building was kicked in. The vandal didn't enter, police said, even though a window was broken.

Police reported $125 worth of damage was done to the windshield of a car belonging to Jeff D. Helgerson of 302 Thatcher, Northeast. The car was parked on Thatcher Way.

On September 26th between 3 p.m. and 1 a.m. the following morning, a Concord men's bike belonging to Gerald E. Hallaren Jr. of 296 North Pleasant St., was stolen from the Graduate Research Center rack police said.

Police reported they are increasing patrols to prevent break-ins.

Seabrook nuclear station faces construction delays

CONCORD, N.H. [AP] — After years of regulatory setbacks, construction of the Seabrook nuclear power plant now faces some delay from labor disputes.

Two-percent of the construction work is completed, a Public Service Co. spokesman syas, and already the plant is troubled by labor problems.

As of yesterday, 850 construction employes were at the oceanfront site, most of them working on excavation, erection of temporary buildings and installation of utilities.

But there was no work on the cooling tunnels and related marine activity because of disputes with two unions — International Union of Operating Engineers and The Laborers International Union of North America.

The dispute with the operating engineers deals with bargaining problems. The issue with the laborers is money — the hourly rate and differentials for underground duty.

The company maintains that technically, lack of work by those unions isn't a delay because the work hasn't begun and the dispute is but a minor part of the entire construction picture.

Frank Shants, PSC spokesman, said that eventually the entire work force will be as large as 3,000 persons, and only 250 of them will be connected with work on marine and tunnel operations.

"It is not a strike. It hasn't shut down the project. It doesn't affect the rest of the project. And we are hoping it will be resolved," said Shants.

In 1972, Public Service estimated that the plant — which would use two nuclear generators — would be completed between 1979 and 1981 at a cost of $1.2 billion.

Now, the company hopes to have the first generating unit completed by the end of 1982 and the other two years later at a cost of $2.3 billion.

The company blames the delays on federal regulatory agencies which have been reviewing and re-reviewing the plant. Environmental groups have contributed to the delays with appeals.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission, for instance, has yet to complete its activity on the proposal. It has set dates in October to receive briefs on the company's financial status and another review of the cooling tunnels.

Dean of Students William F. Field and other University employees have been named in a $1,000 suit filed by members of Outfront, a monthly UMass student newspaper.

The suit alleges the defendants caused various reference and production materials belonging to the newspaper to be removed from the Commuter Lounge sometime during last Intersession and discarded.

Also named in the suit, filed Tuesday in Hampshire County District Court, was Bernard F. Wilkes Jr., assistant director of the campus center; Dudley Bridges, manager of campus center building operations; Edward Kelley, professional technician; and other campus center employees.

Neither Field, who was then acting director of the Campus Center, nor Bridges, could be reached for comment last night. The two were most active in negotiations with Outfront before the filing of the suit.

Wilkes said the fact that the suit was filed Tuesday was "news to me" and said he had little firsthand knowledge of the affair. He maintained his only involvement with the matter was a discussion in a Board of Governors (BOG) meeting and through an agent of the company holding the University's insurance policy.

The negotiations prior to the filing of the suit included the filing of a claim by Outfront for reimbursement through the insurance company. The claim was denied.

James Starr, student Legal Services Office attorney, and BOG co-chairperson Michael Pill, also an attorney, prepared the one-page complaint, 16 plaintiffs' interrogatories and the accompanying summonses.

Energy chief says NE must save oil

By ERNIE CORRIGAN
and FRED WINER
Collegian Staff

The New England Director of the Federal Energy Administration, Robert Mitchell, yesterday said the logical solution to New England's energy problems is the high conservation of existing oil reserves, the increased use of coal and nuclear power.

Mitchell predicted the energy outlook for New England will be grim if an alternative source of energy to reduce our dependency on oil is not found.

"In 1971 our import of oil from OPEC was 14.2 million barrels of oil. We are now importing 41.3 million barrels each year. Massachusetts depends on oil for 85 per cent of its energy needs. If we don't do something to turn the flow, we are just going to die on the vine," Mitchell said in a lecture in Hasbrouck Auditorium yesterday.

Mitchell pointed out that our present rate of extraction our coal reserves will sustain us for 400-500 years. "But, (because of environmental opposition), we can't mine it and we can't burn it."

Mitchell said there are problems with nuclear power. He cited transportation and storage of nuclear wastes, and plant safety as major concerns. "And these," he said, "have not been addressed satisfactorily to this point."

Mitchell, however, advocated the limited use of nuclear power. "In the context of today's technology," he said, "it is logical for us to proceed with Seabrook I and II."

Mitchell said the public must be educated on nuclear power to eliminate the high degree of emotionalism attached to it.

"We've got to do something to discourage the emotionalism, and get down to a more realistic approach to the problem," he said.

"If nuclear proliferation isn't safe at this point," asked a student, "how can limited use of nuclear be considered safe?" Mitchell replied he believes at the present level nuclear power is "reasonably safe," and they have a "satisfactory technology and reasonably satisfactory plant safety."

He was then asked if he felt that "reasonably safe" was safe enough. He answered, "I think so."

Mitchell also discussed the need for conservation of oil which he feels, could save up to 97 million barrels of oil per year, by 1985. The United States in the first half of this year has increased its consumption of oil by 6 per cent, he said. He also added, 11 per cent of the world production of petroleum is used to fuel this country's automobiles. "I hope", said Mitchell, "that we are never as dependent on one source of energy as we have done in the past."

Proponents of alternative energy sources such as solar, wood, and geothermal would have been displeased with Mitchell's forecast of their viability in the future. "The combination of these three sources will only yield a savings of 39 million barrels of oil per year, by 1985," he said. Mitchell said he feels these industries have potential in the future, but for now "the technology is not there." New England could quadruple its use of wood with proper forestry management, but we need a more efficient way to burn it."

As for solar power, Mitchell said he feels it has the potential to provide 25 per cent of our energy needs, but even then not until the year 2020. Geothermal power is the most uncertain of the three in his opinion, he said. "In a couple of years we can look at it to see what it may be able to do," he said.

Student leaders are opposed to new appointment rules

By DAN HUSE
Collegian Staff

Opposition to a recently passed motion calling for broader participation in SGA appointment procedures was raised at last night's student senate meeting.

SGA co-president Pinky Batiste and Acting Attorney General Paul Yanowitch opposed the motion, saying that it violates the constitutional powers of the SGA presidents' office.

Backers of the resolution claimed that it follows the spirit of the unionization movement by decentralizing the appointment procedure.

The controversial resolution, passed last week by a vote of 16-14, requests that the SGA co-presidents extend the process of selecting candidates for SGA boards and committees to include the Nominating Subcommittee of the senate. Appointments have in the past been made by the SGA presidents' office and approved by the senate.

Yanowitch said he felt the resolution is unconstitutional. Referring to the selection process, Co-president Batiste said, "if it's given to a committee it will never get done."

Senator Greg Tarpinian said the resolution is only a request, but "if the co-presidents do not abide by the resolution it is a political statement on their—part in contradiction of the will of the senate."

In other business, the senate allocated $450 to send Senator Kwaku Saunders to Los Angeles to meet with Stevie Wonder and his agents in an attempt to secure an agreement for a concert to be held at Alumni Stadium in the spring.

The senate also voted $800 to sponsor a debate to educate UMass students on the Bakke case, which is coming up in the Supreme Court.

In addition, $500 was given to help MassPIRG sponsor a lecture by Ralph Nader on initiative petitions as a means of student political action.

Support groups form; discuss sexism

By RUTH MCGORTY
Collegian Staff

Plans for the creation of a support group to counter departmental discrimination against women was discussed last night at a meeting led by undergraduate Janet Oppenheim.

Oppenheim said the support group would differ from the existing women's centers on campus. A group of women from each department would meet to discuss the problems relating to that field. "Men can sympathize with your problems, but not empathize," she said.

Oppenheim started research on discrimination against women faculty last semester, in conjunction with a seminar "Women in Science" she taught during Women's Week. At that time she said she interviewed some of the women faculty in the Science Department to hear grievances. Surprisingly, many women opened up and told her the problems of discrimination, she said.

Oppenheim, with the support of two faculty, Dr. Janis Shaeffer and Dr. Grace Rollason, has been working on organizing women support groups in the departments.

She said the group would try "to funnel discrimination to the right authority and to be supportive. Also, it will give women who are having trouble the chance to stand together."

"The group would be a form of discussion to get together and talk about problems," she said.

Problems in areas including academics, career opportunities, thesis work, and personal problems would be discussed.

At present, there are support groups in Zoology, Botany, and Forestry Departments. Oppenheim said she would like to see them in every department. The ultimate goal Is to have an office for support groups, with a file on each department, so that women can find out what's going on, she said.

She said her next step will be to seek out at least one women from each department to act as a liaison to the support group.

Any women faculty member or students interested in helping with the organization contact Janet Oppenheim at 545-0162.

UMass has been selected as the host for a "Wheel Chair Superstar Competition" to be held on Saturday October 22nd at Boyden Gym, according to Larry Lajoie, the competition's coordinator.

Lajoie said applicants will be able to compete in any five of 10 scheduled events.

Points will awarded to the top five scorers. There will be eight divisions and an individual's total score will go towards a final score in that division.

"The person with the highest score will be the overall winner, but trophys will be awarded to the first second and third place in each competition," Lajoie said.

"To make it a fair competition, Lajoie explained, "we broke it down into eight divisions ranging from severely inconvenienced down to blind, deaf or no limbs involved, and everything in between."

The main site of the contests will be by Boyden gym, but events will also be held on the banks of the campus pond and on the library lawn.

Applicants can contact the Handicapped Affairs Office located in the Dean of Students Office in Whitmore, or can call-write Lajoie at 8 Hartford St., South Hadley. Telephone 553-5557.

A meeting for volunteers to help with the running and scoring of the competitions will be held tonight at Thompson 104 from 7-8 or may call Lajoie.

Hampshirites respond to cross burning

By SUSAN O'NEIL
Collegian Staff

Representatives of a Hampshire College third world organization last night said they were doubtful that an all-campus meeting, called after a cross burning incident at the school last weekend, will eradicate racism on campus.

"I really don't think the all-college meeting will do any good," said Irvienne Goldson, a Hampshire College third world spokesperson. "It might serve to let everyone know what happened, and it might get people thinking, but that's all that can be expected," she said.

Lauren Price, another third world spokesperson, disagreed.

"We're going to try to rectify these problems in general. We will try to overcome any racist attitudes which may be present, and try to straighten things out," Hampshire public relations director Peter Gluckler said last night.

Hampshire President Adelle Smith Simmons called the all-campus meeting of students and faculty after the cross burning incident outside a party for minority and foreign students.

Gluckler said several specific proposals would be discussed at the meeting, and that the school planned to intensify its investigation of the cross burning. A committee will also be appointed to look into racism on campus, Glucker said.

"This incident was abhorrent and insensitive. We ought to do everything we can to overcome these things," Gluckler said. He said the majority of people on campus found the incident "generally disgusting."

Gluckler said the school had not received any negative comments about a statement by foreign and minority students Tuesday. The statement vowed to use "any means necessary" to end "racist" incidents "of terrorism by some white students." "They can't be blamed for using strong language in that statement. They're damned mad," Gluckler said.

"I doubt they'll ever catch the person who burned the cross," Goldson said. "It probably wouldn't do any good anyway, since racism would still remain even if they removed one or two individuals."

UMass video news show kicks off its first season

By AMY KAPLAN
Collegian Staff

The Student Video Project, who last year produced UMass' original soap opera, "Strife of Life", will be continuing its programming this year with a new show called "Valley Magazine." The show will follow a documentary format, including many topics of interest to students such as academic and recreational tips, information on local personalities and campus news.

The Student Vidio Project, a Recognized Student Organization (RSO), is located in room 409 in the Student Union Building. According to David Skillicorn, Managing Coordinator, training students in all aspects of video television, and producing various shows of interest to students are its main for students interested in video work. Hopefully they can eventually use video as an integral tool for social change," Skillicorn said. The equipment and resources are accessible to all students, and training workshops are offered three times a week to familiarize students with video equipment and its uses.

During the 1976-77 academic year, a variety of activities were videotaped on campus and in the surrounding community. These were shown on closed circuit televisions in the Hatch, Campus Center Coffeeshop, Blue Wall, and on the Amherst Public Access Channel. Some of the programs shown included speakers from the Distinguished Visitor Program, concerts on campus, live coverage of the 1977 Toward Tomorrow Fair, and the May 1977 occupation of the proposed Seabrook Nuclear Power Plant. These tapes, after being viewed by students on campus, were put into the videotape library.

Besides Strife of Life the project last year produced a magazine video show, "Improvisions".

According to Michael Cuddy, production coordinator, plans are now underway for a continuation of the magazine show, based on the WBZ "Evening Show" in Boston. The title of the show recently changed to "Valley Magazine", will be shown every other week on campus. Cuddy said "Valley Magazine" is an ever expanding project involving many new video concepts."

Besides "Valley Magazine", there are a variety of new shows planned by the project. One ongoing series about the University Dancers is now being taped. Cuddy said he hopes the program will "show some of the joys and frustrations of being part of a dance ensemble."

A "Women's Video Collective" has been formed within the project to involve women in the training and production process. In addition, the position of Third World coordinator has been established to meet the needs of the Third World community, Cuddy said.

Coverage of home basketball games and a weekly campus news show are two other projects being planned.

Skillicorn said he feels "student interest and commitment are the prime factors determining what is taped. Any important events or speakers on campus are viable resources for video production," he said. For example, two and a half hours of the September 24 protest at Kent State was taped on location in Kent, Ohio according to Mark Gunning, Education Coordinator.

At present, sixty students are involved with the project, however, any student can become a member and is entitled to use the equipment.

A meeting will be held tonight in the Cape Cod Lounge at 8 p.m. Topics to be discussed are plans for the year, a general overview of the structure, and demonstrations of video equipment.

Stevens boycott group gathers local support

By PATTI TROPED
Collegian Staff

Early last semester a student organization was formed with the hope of educating consumers about allegedly illegal and exploitive acts being practiced by the J.P. Stevens Company, the second largest textile corporation in the United States.

J.P. Stevens with 85 plants nation-wide, is based primarily in North and South Carolina.

Michelle Naples and Jeniffer Wexler, spokespersons for the UMass committee to boycott J.P. Stevens said last night, "Our group has been involved for the most part in supporting the boycott at the local level. We have worked through the summer holding public meetings to educate the consumer on the issues, as well as talking with representatives of local stores selling J.P. Stevens' products."

They have also set up a table in the campus center concourse, where members of the UMass community are encouraged to stop by and ask any questions they may have on the issue.

The group has been working closely with the national boycott supporting organization, which is primarily concerned with getting the larger chain stores to stop selling the products. They have been successful thus far in getting Bradlees to join in the boycott effort, as well as awakening the interest of other stores that may be potential supporters, Wexler said.

Michael Schippani, boycott coordinator of Boston, is scheduled to speak at a public meeting for support tonight at 8:00 at the Springfield-Westfield-Chicopee Labor Council Hall, located at 164 Chestnut Street in Springfield.

Egyptian foreign minister sees Mideast 'explosion'

UNITED NATIONS [UPI] — Egyptian Foreign Minister Ismail Fahmi warned yesterday Israel was pushing the Middle East toward "an explosion" from which "no one in the world" would be safe.

Fahmi said he would introduce a seven-point resolution in the United Nations demanding Jews quit establishing new settlements in occupied Arab lands and calling on Israel to stop imposing Israeli law on Arabs in occupied regions.

Fahmi flatly rejected a proposal Israel said it agreed to a unified Arab delegation at any peace talks in Geneva to include Palestinians so long as they are not members of the PLO.

In the toughest address yet during the largely ceremonial speeches in the opening debate at the 1977 U.N. General Assembly, Fahmi challenged his Israeli counterpart, Moshe Dayan, "to stand here before you" and pledge Israeli willingness to get out of the occupied territories and to recognize the right of Palestinians to an independent state.

Dayan sat quietly, listening with arms folded — but there was no indication of an Israeli walkout. "We are not children," one Israeli diplomatic source said.

Fahmi said that if the situation in the Middle East "remains stagnant, an explosion will become inevitable, an explosion that will dwarf all previous ones with no one in the world safe from its devastating material and spiritual consequences."

Fahmi's speech indicated a toughening of the Arab stance even as hopes for a reconvening of Middle East peace talks in Geneva, brightened a few days ago, again appeared to be dimming.

In related events, President Carter, seeking a "mutually acceptable road to Geneva" for Mideast peace negotiations, met with leaders from Syria and Jordan yesterday and heard Arab insistence on a PLO role in the talks.

Foreign Minister Abd Halim Khaddam of Syria told reporters after meeting with Carter his country stands firm on its position the Palestine Liberation Organization should participate in any talks — a policy rejected by Israel.

Carter also met with Sharif Abdul Sharaf, chief of the Royal Court of Jordan.

There was considerable stir within the White House after Arab journalists quoted Khaddam as saying of his meeting with Carter that "our two viewpoints coincided to form a unified Arab delegation, including the PLO."

News in Brief

B-1 bombers remain in budget

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The House Appropriations Committee yesterday refuse to cut $463.4 million from the Pentagon's budget for construction of three B—1 bombers.

The surprise 34—21 vote was to reject President Carter's proposal to eliminate the B—I Bomber funds from the current 1977 budget. Under a 1974 budget law the panel's vote apparently is not subject to further consideration in the House.

Carter earlier ordered a halt in production of the B—1 but the money involved in Wednesday's vote was approved by Congress last year and was available for obligation until Carter proposed 'recision' of the funds.

It was Carer's 'recision' proposal that was rejected.

The law requires that Congress vote to approve proposed recisions within 45 days after they are made or the money automatically remains available for spending.

The 45 days will expire Oct. 4. Rep. Sidney Yates, D-Ill., an opponent of the B—1 and a member of the appropriations panel, sought to send the recision measure to the floor of the House but he was defeated on a 27—23 vote.

WBZ-TV spurs inquiry of House

BOSTON [UPI] — The Massachusetts House yesterday unanimously authorized an investigation into questions raised by a television news team regarding the conduct of a number of legislators, including Speaker Thomas W. McGee.

The unusual vote came after lawmakers spent more than two hours criticizing the report by WBZ TV's investigative news team, which focused on gifts received by legislators, appearances by lawyer-legislators before state commissions and possible conflicts of interest.

The House voted 226-0 to have its Ethics Committee investigate specific references made by the news team in a 37-minute report aired Tuesday night. The action places the committee chairman, Thomas H.D. Mahoney, D-Cambridge, in the difficult position of investigating McGee, the man who appointed him.

"The committee accepts this challenge, or assignment, with the greatest pleasure," Mahoney told the House. "We realize it will not be the most pleasant of tasks."

The commitee is scheduled to deliver an interim report within 30 days.

The WBZ report also referred to Senate President Kevin B. Harrington, D-Salem, and House Majority Leader William Q. MacLean, D-Fairhaven, in an examination of legislators jobs.

U.S. abortion funds object of debate

WASHINGTON [AP] — Pressure mounted yesterday for quick House-Senate agreement on an abortion policy before money runs out for government social service agencies whose funds depend on the outcome.

House and Senate conferees planned to try to write a compromise somewhere between strict limits on federally funded abortions, which have been adopted by the House, and more liberal ones endorsed by the Senate.

At stage is a $60.2 billion appropriations bill for the Department of Labor and the Department of Health, Education and Welfare for fiscal year 1978. Current funding for those agencies runs out Friday, the end of fiscal year 1977.

State budget goes minus abortion bill

BOSTON [AP] — A supplementary state budget will go to the Senate floor next week minus an anti-abortion amendment, but with an additional $11.6 million in appropriations.

The version agreed to Wednesday by the Senate Ways and Means Committee brings the total budget to $31.3 million, instead of the $19.7 million voted by the House.

The committee voted to separate the money part of the budget, including some $16.1 million for a state employee pay raise, from an amendment to ban the use of state funds for welfare abortions.

"I don't want to tie up an item I know will be vetoed with the pay raise, and, therefore, deny those raises to state employes who negotiated in good faith," said Sen. James A. Kelly Jr., D-Oxford, committee chairman.

Kelly's move passed by a 4-1 vote of committee members present with only Sen. Joseph Walsh, D-Boston, dissenting.

Rep. Raymond Flynn, D-Boston, author of the abortion rider, has said he will attempt to amend the bill when it comes back to the House fpr approval in its new form. However, Kelly said opinions differ on whether an amendment is possible as long as an identical bill is still pending.

The largest item added by the Senate committee was $11 million to finance the cost of medical care for general relief recipients at city-owned hospitals.

SEC starts probe of Lance's bank

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Secúrities and Exchange Commission took legal action against "insiders" who got a $2 million loan from the same Chicago bank which loaned $3,425,000 to former Budget Director Bert Lance, Commissioner John R. Evans said yesterday.

Evans said a commission investigation is underway.

Evans told the Senate Banking Committee that SEC investigators had found many cases in which insiders got personal loans from banks in which their companies had deposited funds.

These included a $2 million loan to two directors of Daylin, Inc., by the First National Bank of Chicago, the same bank which loaned Lance $3,425,000 while holding deposits of $250,000 from his Georgia bank.

Evans said the SEC sought civil action against the Daylin directors because the loans were not disclosed to stockholders as required under federal securities laws.

Chairman William Proxmire, D-Wis., asked Evans whether he saw any difference between that loan and the same bank's loan to Lance.

"In principle, I don't see any," Evans said, but added he did not wish to discuss Lance because of the investigation.

Senators stonewall natural gas bill

WASHINGTON [AP] — Leaders of a Senate filibuster on natural gas pricing showed no signs of surrender yesterday as the impasse slowed other congressional business and threatened to force the Senate into a second all-night session.

Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia continued a simple tactic of trying to wear down the two freshman Democratic senators carrying on the filibuster in the name of low natural gas prices for consumers.

But Democratic Sens. James Abourezk of South Dakota and Howard Metzenbaum of Ohio vowed to block a vote on deregulation by the unusual device of calling up about 500 amendments, one after the other, for Senate action. There was little debate, just a seemingly endless string of votes on proposals that had little chance of passage.

With the exception of a two-hour breakfast break, the Senate had been in session since 9 a.m. Tuesday.

At issue is a critical portion of President Carter's energy plan allowing for higher natural gas prices at the wellhead, but providing for continued federal controls.

Late Tuesday, Carter administration officials said they would agree to a compromise natural gas price ceiling of $2.03 per thousand cubic feet, a 28 cent increase over $1.75, the original price in the energy plan.

The price is currently fixed at $1.46.

On the only real test vote so far, the Senate indicated tentative although narrow support for an industry-backed deregulation plan sponsored by Sens. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Tex., and James B. Pearson, R-Kan.

Abortion controversy solution: birth control

By TOM DEVINE

The longer the battle over abortion rages in America the further away we seem to be from a final solution to the issue. Part of the reason for this is that both sides in the issue hold such irreconciliable views. To the anti-abortionists abortion is murder while to supporters it is a basic human right. With no middle ground for compromise the argument becomes more and more heated, but with no solution in sight.

"To the anti-abortionists abortion is murder while to supporters it is a basic human right."

To complicate matters, there has been virtually no insight or leadership offered by our Government as to how to proceed in this matter. Since abortion is such an emotional issue (sure to alienate voters no matter what position is taken), most politicians avoid discussing it as much as possible. Consequently, we have witnessed in recent years the spectacle of the issue being thrown back and forth between the courts, the Congress and the states with the result that nothing has been resolved to anyone's satisfaction.

Personally I'm unconvinced that life as experienced by a fetus is of any less value than the lives I see pass before me in the Campus center coffee shop. However I won't bore you with my views since I hope that abortion itself, with a little bit of progressive thinking, may well become irrelevant in the near future.

It's no news to anyone that our planet is becoming grossly overcrowded. As our population relentlessly rises the quality of our lives correspondingly declines. Our democracy works far less effectively with a large population than with a smaller one, and it is hard enough for us to provide a decent life for our people without adding to our numbers.

Scientists have been telling us for over thirty years that we must implement some type of national birth control program or face the inevitable decline of both our cultural and political institutions. Despite all warnings however, our government has chosen to follow its usual policy of doing nothing until a crisis arises. (The best example of this policy is our nation's energy program. Although the present shortages were predicted by scientists decades ago, nothing was done until the shortages actually occurred. Now we have to resign ourselves to the wholesale raping of the planet just to buy us enough time to develop alternate energy sources.)

Despite the fact that progress in the area of birth control has been inexcusably slow, some startling breakthroughs have been achieved. For example, scientists are currently perfecting a tiny valve-like instrument that if inserted in the body by a simple operation, would have the effect of making pregnancy impossible. The nice thing about this device is that it wouldn't interfere with your sex life in any way. Then if you decided to have a child, you would simply go to your doctor and have the valve adjusted. If you were a normal, healthy person to begin with, you could have a child with no difficulty.

The effect of all this of course would be that we could have children strictly by choice and not by chance. Without unwanted pregnancies there would be no need for abortions. It sounds ideal, but there's a catch to it.

This new birth control device, along with a host of others now under development, is not likely to become wide-spread very soon without more money for research and a greater national commitment to birth control. The best means for financing and for introducing these devices on a mass scale would be of course, our dear Uncle Sam.

It's true there is something Orwellian about the Government becoming so involved in our sex lives, but the alternative is to wait until our population problem is as bad as in China, where one must ask the Government's permission to have a child. Besides, we in America already allow the Government a great deal of power over sexual matters.

For example, in the case of homosexuals we allow the Government to deny people certain rights purely on the basis on whom they sleep with. Even something so obviously harmless as public nudity is outlawed almost everywhere, yet what possible justification does the Government have to be concerned over what we do or do not wear?

Rather than all this fighting between abortionists and their foes it might be a better idea if those who are concerned over this issue would unite in a common effort to make birth control a top national priority. For once let's try tackling a problem before it gets out of hand!

If we can only produce and make widespread (by law if necessary), these new birth control devices than we could kill two birds with one stone; our population problem and the abortion controversy.

Institutional racism

By EDWARD COHEN

I would like to respond not only to Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editor in Chief's commentary about reverse discrimination, but also of the growing racism that seems to be permeating the Collegian as of late.

To begin with, I would like to analyze what Mr. Arena has written. He writes, "proponents for affirmative action claim it can be an effective tool for improving educational and job opportunities for racial minorities and women. They are right. Opponents argue that affirmative action in its attempt to rectify both past and ongoing discrimination can itself generate "reverse" discrimination. They are right."

Who is right, Mr. Arena? You cannot make such a statement without some facts or figures to back it up. If you examined your American history books, you will see that what is now called reverse discrimination has in past years gone under different names. When mobs of angry white parents were throwing rocks at school buses of black school children, the issue was called more local community control of schools. When white police were clubbing and beating people protesting segregation and discrimination during the Civil Rights movement of the 60's, the issue was that police were trying to put down a riot against the American system of order and justice. The issue is racism.

If you have ever seen the film, "Birth of A Nation," you will see how the Ku-Klux-Klan saved the south from black politicians and "carpetbaggers". Racist stereotypes are laced throughout the film. This film describes a period of time when a post slavery government was instituting token attempts at ending practices of slavery which were part of institutional life in the United States. Slavery was legally over, but sharecropping developed into a form of legal slavery, which was in many instances as oppressive as slavery. Then as now, the concept of reverse racism was used to mask racism.

You write, "Here at our own University, we see MacKimmie dorm using quotas to fill its House Committee. Is that creating an equal opportunity?" The context that you put this in is implying that it is not creating equal opportunity. If this is the system that MacKimmie is using, and it works to create equal opportunity, then why can't it be right? I remember an article in the Collegian ot Tuesday, Sept. 20, in which attorney general Paul Yanowitch said that "This is a direct violation of the one man one vote principle of government."

If we take a look at the history book, we see the existence of the Grandfather clause, a piece of legislation adopted by many southern states after Reconstruction was cancelled, which said that a person could not vote unless the person's grandfather voted, and since the grandfathers of most black people of voting age were slaves, with no voting privileges, this successfully took away the right to vote from potential black voters. Also be aware that women had no voting privileges until the passage of the nineteenth amendment in 1920. This grandfather clause law ended equal participation in voting for black voters, and therefore in government.

Mr. Arena writes that "my inner feelings tell me that America has been and still is a racist country." You are right about this one, since any country which allowed racism to exist and which pursues an active policy of genocide against non-white people, cannot be anything but racist. You wrote that "somehow, even though I see America as discriminatory, I'll be pulling for Bakke." Please place this last statement into a proper context. If you examine enrollment figures for these various medical schools, not to mention law schools and other professional schools and colleges, you will see that the makeup of these schools is mainly all white, with only token representation by non-white students. To say that Bakke was denied a place because of an affirmative action program is insanity. For an editor-in-chief of the Collegian to take this position is atrocious.

Look at a few recent headlines: "cross burning raises controversy," "young white males should stick together," "Hampshire deals with cross-burnings." If the Bakke case is placed in proper context, then you can see a racism that is growing stronger. If an editor of the Collegian, or any mass communications person makes a stand on this issue, it should be one which helps white students deal with their own racism and the racism that they see existing in a racist system. All mass communications people should in fact support the fight against racism. It is unfortunate that the list of articles, commentaries, editorials and letters maintaining racist positions is growing. To many white students, they might even seem as though they are saying something logical, but once again, if put in a proper perspective, it's very easy for someone to twist words around and make racism sensible in a racist society.

It should be a goal of all white students to actively resist racism and end racist attacks against non-white students, to insure that there really is a movement to promote equal opportunity for all.

People by the government

The premise that this country's government exists of by and for the people, ordained over 200 years ago by the founding fathers, is very near being twisted into a de facto situation where the people exist of by and for the government.

jerry rogers

One by one in recent years various rights and civil liberties of individuals have been infringed upon and regulated by the actions of the state and federal governments.

Perhaps this is just an ebb in the movement for national sovereignty for all citizens through a democratic-populist form of government in contrast to the progress made in this area from the late 1950's to the early 1970's. None the less, it points out that those of us who would fight for our personal civil liberties, which the framers of the Constitution intended to guarantee for us, and a responsive-representative government can ill afford to rest on our laurels.

Blacks and other Third World people, women and organizers of the 1960's were justifiably proud when the seventh decade of this country was ushered in and they were able to look back on an impressive list of accomplishments and victories in the areas of insuring individual civil liberties and an open government.

The organized people composing these groups wielded hefty political clout, and still do, and constituted an effective check on the actions of the federal bureaucracy.

Students, too, were organized and performed much the same check-type function with respect to the modes of conveying a higher education to students.

And the national and local media also sprung to life with the onset of investigative journalism and adversary reporting.

The logical extensions of these events would have been the influx of blacks, women and populists into state and federal government positions, and, right along with the institution of the 18 year old vote, the increasing organization of students into a block as politically powerful as the others.

In Butterfield dormitory the other night just such a topic was discussed at a meeting of all the residents — student unionization.

For almost 45 minutes students debated the picayune procedural details of instituting a union, until it was pointed out that none of the participants, in anything they had said, indicated they were against the concept of unionization. Three foreign students also contributed information on the operation of student unions in England and one indicated her consternation at the attention accorded procedural details and political protocol rather that actual group action.

The conservative administrating of higher education institutions that accompanied the recession-inflation has caused administrations to retreat and refuse to acknowledge students' rights. Students have been thrust into a position of bargaining with a weak power base because they have stratified themselves. We are more concerned with our degrees and "getting a job" than with our own freedom to determine the value of our educations.

And the Bakke case soon to be heard by the Supreme Court represents a significant and unfortunate challenge to this country's attempt to correct historical wrong.

Our legal policy of precedents or stare decisis often serves to maintain injustices accorded the less powerful in often hostile courts. If the Supreme Court decides the Bakke case for Allan Bakke, it will be saying that it's more important to maintain the sacrosanct image of the law than it is to correct legally sanctioned social injustices of the past.

The House of Representatives vote against using federal money for abortions and the Supreme Court's ruling on the same issue are direct attacks on the civil rights of women. And the conservative backlash evident in many of the state women's conferences preceeding this year's first national conference scheduled for Houston, Texas from November 18 to 21, is a deliberate attempt to cut women's political power.

There have also been, in recent history, numerous court cases serving to shroud the operations of government and hinder the reporting of those operations by the media.

If a constant, organized and adversarial eye is not continually monitoring the government, the organizers of the 1960's may become the organized (and governmentally regulated) of the 1980's.

Gidget goes...

Walt Disney Productions is re-creating those zany and wacky movies again, but with a massage, eh, message. Aloha Kent State!

Gidget played by Sally Fields, bounces and giggles her way back to our cinemas. The "modern" Gidget merrily prances about in a bikini made of army surplus fatigue material. She is also decked out in a beret — with a button pinned on — "Give It Back To The Indians, I Did!" — and a black arm band on her freckled upperarm.

Tony Orlando and Dawn are out of retirement to sing the soundtrack, "O-hio", the Crosby, Stills, Berkowitz, and Feliciano tune. Jim Nabors does the background screeching. "How many more" and ad-libs the between verses la da da da da da da da's.

Fred McMurray, Gidget's pop, has a bit part as the bulldozer driver that attempts to stampede the protesters. His only lines are, "Geez, kids just used to cut down the nets from the basketball hoop ater a big game or rip down the goal posts. Now the little bastards wanna tear down the athletic facilities before it's even built. How's the administration goin' t' give 'way complimentary tickets?"

steve dubin

Demonstrators, protected from the sun by straw hats and girl watcher sunglasses, skateboard around the proposed gym site obstructing construction. Bob Denver, Dobie Gillis, and Annette Fullofjello plays bongos and volleyball while chanting, "No more causes, so give gym to Jaws!" Ronnie Howard hopping about clad in Kent State athletic shorts with blood red suspenders, is the leader of the coalition. He keeps the dissidents shocked in bandanas, bullhorns, and beer.

A jeep with O.J. Simpson, Don Meredith, and Joe Kapp scrambles through the crowd trying to frighten the student strikers. The jeep is seized by the demonstrators and transformed into a planter for their herbal garden.

The film climaxes when ushers dump tear gas in the cinema aisles and the local National Guard performs a 21 gun salute.

The flick is terrif! So from Gidge and me, "See ya there and tootles!"

Pot production is not exploitive

To the Editor:

I almost choked on a roach when I read Stephen Modena's column on "Pot Smokers and Capitalists." Behind his pseudo-economic reasoning lies the contention that smoking a joint helps "fire a blood sucking profiteering adventure." Well you can keep on toking because Modena is all wrong. Smoking a joint is actually one of the last remaining ways not to help a capitalist line his pocket with a workers sweat.

Let me explain why pot is different from all the commodities which are produced by workers in the capitalist's factory. Marijuana is grown [produced] by farmers not workers and capitalists. The farmer harvests the finished product which he then sells, smokes, or stashes to seed next year's crop. The farmer sells a product which he owns and therefore meets the capitalist exporter as a fellow trader; not as a submissive worker. The farmer does not sell himself to the capitalist for wages. Instead, he sells pot. [Have you noticed that dope dealers at any level never seem to work] Chances are that the farmer also grows most of his own food so his survival does not depend on the local price of pot.

The production of marijuana is one of the few activities that remains outside the control of exploitive capitalists. Perhaps that's why several of the giant tobacco companies are secretly lobbying for legalization. Once pot becomes legal the government will certainly ensure that production and distribution falls completely into capitalist hands. But today, the marijuana producer stands outside capitalist social relations as a lonely reminder of a Jeffersonian ideal; the independent yoeman. In fact the more pot we smoke, the more eager the exporter becomes for the farmer's crop, and the higher the price the farmer will receive. So as you toke into oblivion remember that some self-sufficient independent farmer is counting on you to cop another ounce and save him from the grip of wage slavery.

Arena reasoning under false premises

To the Editor:

I think it's sad that Ronald J. Arena would support Bakke in his case against UCal, while still agreeing that this country is racist.

Mr. Arena is reasoning under several false premises: 1] that UCal-Davis has lowered its standards, 2] that UCal-Davis operates under a system of quotas, and 3] that this is reverse discrimination.

1] White students with cums as low as 2.3 are considered for admission, minority students — 2.1. No minority student is ever admitted who is not qualified or able to meet the strict standards of medical school.

2] UCal-Davis reserves sixteen spaces for consideration of disadvantaged minority students, but does not always fill that allotment as a quota would imply. If sixteen qualified minority students are not found among the applicants, then some spaces go unfilled.

3] In a nation such as the United States, one of many different cultures, a profession such as the medical profession should reflect that diversity. There is more to consider in a medical student's application than his-her cum; what must be considered is how well this doctor could serve the public — the patients — and one's background is certainly a part of this. For example, if a substantial percentage of this country's population does not speak English, then this country's doctors must reflect this need.

In a country where discrimination is rooted so deeply in its institutions, a ruling in favor of Mr. Bakke would be a highly dangerous way of condoning further discrimination.

Lucy Montes

Difference doesn't justify Bryant

To the Editor:

I feel compelled to respond to Andrew Kirsch's letter which appeared in the Collegian in which Mr. Kirsch had defended Anita Bryant's tirade of oppression by stating that she "dared to be different". Mr. Kirsch makes it sound as if Ms. Bryant is to be glorified merely because she is being different, and that her "difference" somehow justifies her actions. If this is true, then why aren't the homosexuals whom she persecutes held in similar high regard?

The fact that Ms. Bryant does what she "believes is right" also fails to justify her actions, as one may have said the same for Hitler.

I also fail to be convinced by Mr. Kirsch's statement that we live "in an age when homosexuality is considered to be acceptable". I was under the impression that it is still far from "cool" to be gay, and in fact, that homosexuals are the most oppressed group in our society today. If Mr. Kirsch disagrees with me on this point, I suggest that he try living as a homosexual for a while.

In conclusion, I propose that Ms. Bryant does not dare to be different at all. She conforms to reactionary pressure to continue the oppression of gay people, and recites her false interpretations of scripture to justify her hatred. Speaking as someone who has borne the brunt of many jokes over the years, I don't feel sorry that Ms. Bryant has had to "bear the brunt of a thousand Johnny Carson jokes". Ms. Bryant is a woman with fascist attitudes and is neither to be pitied or respected.

Degli Altri

SATF provides for diversity

To the Editor:

Steve Mathieu appears ignorant of a few facts concerning the University and the uses of SATF funds.

First, there are over 20,000 people enrolled at the university. The diversity of interests represented by these people cannot be met simply by funding organizations that sincerely appeal to everyone.

Second, not everyone is Jewish, black, gay, handicapped or female. Does Steve feel that the distinct numbers of people making up these groups, each of whom pays the SATF fee, should be barred from using money THAT THEY PAY for furthering their group interest? Apparently so.

Third, RSO funding goes to groups because they do not have access to channels that would permit them to raise funds. Many people in these groups use their own money because the funding that their group receives is simply not enough. There is also the Catch-22 which prohibits groups receiving RSO money from raising their own funds. Otherwise their funding can be cut off.

Finally, the lack of 'social awareness' on the part of Steve Mathieu has unfortunately led him to believe that if it's not for everyone, then it should not be for anyone.

More striking teachers from Franklin are in court to face contempt charges for defying a back to work order. The strike by more than 280 teachers is in its 13th day.

Hostages held for ransom by Red Army guerillas

DACCA, Bangladesh [UPI] — Japanese Red Army guerrillas holding 155 hostages aboard a Japan Air Lines DC8 jetliner told airport authorities early Thursday they planned to execute an American Jew within hours because all their demands had not been met.

Authorities identified the hostage only as John Gabriel and told newsmen at the Dacca airport that he was a friend of President Carter. Authorities released no further information on the hostage.

The Red Army hijackers made the threat despite being told that the Japanese government had agreed to their demands for a $6 million ransom. Airport officials said the hijackers were holding out for the release of nine comrades jailed in Japan as well as the money.

The guerrillas hijacked the plane on a Paris-to-Tokyo flight shortly after a stopover in Bombay. They later forced the jetliner to land in Dacca.

In a statement given to airport officials, the hijackers said they were determined to "free the Japanese people from oppression."

The statement said that despite the agreement of the Japanese cabinet to pay the $6 million ransom, they would kill their hostages one by one unless their compatriots were freed from prison.

The first victim, they said, would be Gabriel, one of 13 Americans aboard the plane.

Irish peace on horizon

LONDON [UPI] — Britain and Ireland yesterday pledged to work jointly to bring an end to eight years of bloodshed in Northern Ireland and Britain promised to restore self-government to the embattled six counties of the north.

The agreement came at the end of daylong talks between British Prime Minister James Callaghan and his Irish counterpart Jack Lynch at No. 10 Downing Street.

A joint communique issued after the meeting said the two prime ministers "were united in reaffirming their commitment in the immediate future to achieving the earliest possible restoration of peace and political stability in Northern Ireland."

Violence between the province's two-thirds Protestant majority and one-third Roman Catholic minority population has cost nearly 1,800 dead and between 18,000 and 20,000 injured in the past eight years. At present some 14,000 British troops are trying to keep peace between the warring factions.

The statement said Callaghan promised Britain would work to restore a provincial government to Northern Ireland which has been ruled directly from London since March, 1976.

Britain at that time abandoned further efforts to bring about agreement between the Protestants and Roman Catholics on a new provincial government in which both would share power.

The statement said that in the meantime, before a full power sharing provincial government is restored, Britain would hand over "a range of powers" to a locally elected body under arrangements acceptable to both Protestants and Roman Catholics.

Government officials quoted Callaghan as promising there would be no integration of Northern Ireland in the rest of the United Kingdom.

The sources said Lynch told Callaghan that Ireland still had ultimate Irish reunification as its long term aspiration. But they said he did not make a major issue of this.

Deaths linked with legionnaires disease

BURLINGTON, Vt. [UPI] — Two more deaths in Vermont were attributed yesterday to Legionnaires disease, bringing the number of fatalities linked to the pneumonia-like illness in the state to three since July.

It is believed the three victims represent the largest cluster of Legionnaires disease fatalities in the nation since the July, 1976 outbreak in Philadelphia killed 29 people.

However, a doctor from the Atlanta-based Center for Disease Control told a news conference Wednesday at the Vermont Medical Center hospital there was no cause for alarm concerning the Vermont outbreak.

Dr. Claire Broome, a CDC investigator, said all six cases of the disease found in Vermont since July, including the three deaths, involved patients who had suffered major illnesses or undergone operations such as kidney transplants. She noted three of them were successfully treated with antibiotics and released from the hospital.

There is no reason for tourists to drop their planned visits to Vermont, she added, because there is no evidence the disease is transmitted from person to person.

S. Korean accused in bank fraud

WASHINGTON [UPI] — South Korean businessman Tongsun Park and a close adviser to religious cult leader Sun Myung Moon were accused yesterday of secretly gaining control of a national bank, then fraudulently selling $500,000 worth of shares to the public.

The Diplomat National Bank of Washington and Charles Kim, who resigned in April as the bank's chairman, immediately consented to the allegations brought by the Securities and Exchange Commission without admitting or denying guilt.

Park, who is now in South Korea, his associate Spencer Robbins and Moon's executive assistant Bo Hi Pak did not consent to the charges. But their attorneys said at a U.S. District Court hearing they would soon comply.

Judge John Pratt signed an injunctive order to prevent Diplomat Bank and Kim from future use of "devices, schemes and artifices to defraud."

The SEC, filing the complaint, said the investigation was conducted with the aid of federal banking regulators and two congressional panels that have probed Park's affairs.

The SEC said the Diplomat Bank became a national bank under charter from the comptroller of currency in 1975. In a public offering of 97,000 shares of stock to raise $2.4 million that year, the bank said no individual would own more than 5 per cent of the offering.

Actually, the SEC said Park and Pak were in control of 53 per cent of the stock. For corporate purposes, effective control usually can be administered with 5 per cent of outstanding stock.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 29 — Born today, you have been gifted by, perhaps, an embarrassment of riches where talents are concerned. As a result, it may be extremely difficult for you to settle on a single career. You may find yourself well into middle age before you are able to focus upon a single goal in such a way that it becomes not only achievable but a source of happiness. Once you reach this stage you must be careful not to spread yourself too thin, or you may loose all the ground you've gained.

You draw loyal and lasting friends to your side, in good times and bad. On the other hand, you can be a frightening enemy. You are not adverse to throwing your weight around when you deem it necessary; yet, no one could be kinder, more considerate, more sympathetic to others when to do so doesn't jeopardize your own progress. It is perhaps a selfish attitude; but one which may be necessary to the furtherance of your own particular career.

You possess tremendous vitality. Only illness can keep you from expending energy. You do not like leaving work to vacation away from home. The fact that you consent to such vacations at all is more a proof of your wish to please others than a sign of unselfishness.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let our birthday star be your daily guide.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 30

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22) — Concentration is essential today if you are to make the gains promised by general circumstances. Give facts and figures your attention.

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21) — Early morning gaiety should keep you from succumbing to another's black mood later. Keep your own council at evening.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) — Evening festivities may require you to behave in ways quite foreign to your habit, though perhaps not your nature. Join the fun!

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19) — Moderation in all things is called for. Don't be tempted into excessive eating or drinking by a festive occasion.

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18) — Take time out today to help another. This is a good time for showing the attitude of cooperation you wish to be known for.

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20) — There may be romance around the corner for you today. Take your time responding to another's overtures, however.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Rely on another to steer you in the direction you should go at this particular time. Take advice and be glad for it.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Put off business decisions of importance to your future. This is a poor time to attempt to steer the course of fate.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Save energy and thought for PM. This is no day for asking favors; make an effort to fulfill your own daily potential.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Try out a new method of operation where career activitiy is concerned. Don't expect another to pull your weight and his.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22) — Unless you are really willing to take on more than your share of the responsibility, you would do well to refuse involvement in a new project.

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22) — Gains made in the morning can be relished at your leisure during evening hours. Teach others.

Los Conquistadores capture 3rd relay title

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

"We're number one," shouted Ferdinand B. Singleton. "Three times."

He said it all, as his team, Los Conquistadores, won its third straight 440 yard relay title in the annual intramural track meet yesterday at the Derby Track.

Last fall and the spring before that, Los Conqistadores: Singleton, Todd Bausley, and Ismael and Al Ruiz won the race. This year, Ismael coached the team and was replaced by Dave Hinds. There was no meet last spring.

Yesterday, they won by 20 yards over four other relay teams. Their time of 47.0 seconds was slower than last year's 46.0.

"We should've run faster," said Al. "We haven't worked out together yet. We just met today and worked on handoffs."

Hinds led off, and made up the staggered start on all but the Young Stars, running in lane six. He handed off to Singleton, who picked up a couple yards down the back-

BUZZARDS BAY [AP] — Veteran guard Dave Bing, who announced his retirement from basketball last week, was signed by the Boston Celtics yesterday.

The team also announced here that its captain, 15-year veteran John Havlicek came to undisclosed terms as the Celtics prepared to launch its exhibition game season.

The 34-year-old Bing, the number one draft choice of Detroit in 1966, played 10 years for the Pistons. He spent last year with Washington, but reportedly was unhappy there.

The 6-foot-3 185 pound former Syracuse star has a lifetime scoring average of 21.9 points per game, 17th highest in National Basketball Association history.

He averaged 16.2 points last season and appeared in all 82 games.

Bing's shooting percentage is .440.

Celtics Coach Tom Heinsohn and team president Red Auerbach tabbed Bing the prospective No. 3 guard, behind Jo Jo White and Charlie Scott.

Bing's signing means that a crop of rookie guards in the Celtics camp will be cut. Last year's No. 3 guard, Kevin Stacom, likely will be retained.

Bing has appeared in four All Star games and five playoffs.

Havlicek will bring a 21.4 point average into his 16th NBA season.

Run for Fun

The Intramural Dept. will sponsor the first of six weekly 2 mile runs this Sunday in the apple orchard. Registration is at 10:30 a.m. at the base of the water towers on Orchard Hill, with the race starting at 11 a.m. It is open to the UMass community.

The UMass junior varsity field hockey team yesterday extended its two-season unbeaten streak to 16 with a convincing 5-0 victory over Keene State on the NOPE field.

Fran Cornacchioli scored two goals for the Minutewomen, while Becky Haag, Patty Bossio, and Becky Haag added the others.

Coach Mary Ann Ozdarski was pleased with the win, terming it a "total team effort. Every player saw action and that's the way we like to play the game," she added.

PORTLAND, Ore. [UPI] — The NBA champion Portland Trailblazers yesterday cut their roster to 13 players, releasing veterans Dale Schlueter and free-agent Jim Bradley, along with rookie forward Ricky Brown from Alabama.

Schlueter, a 6-10 center, had nine years experience in the NBA with various clubs, including Portland. Bradley was a forward with experience in the ABA.

Coach Jack Ramsay had announced he would cut the squad to 13 players, leaving it there until the National Labor Relations board makes a ruling on an NBA proposal for teams to carry an 11-man roster.

Women booters bombard MHC in home debut, 6-0

By GARY ADINOLFI
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's soccer team scored an impressive victory over Mount Holyoke College yesterday on the intramural field just below Boyden. The Minutewomen were led by the three-goal performance of Elaine Contant and Barbara Douglas, who scored two goals in the 6-0 romp. Kelly Tuller also chipped in with one goal to complete the scoring.

UMass dominated the play from the outset and in the first half Mount Holyoke could not even manage a shot on goal. For most of the first half the play was in the Mount Holyoke end with Contant scoring the first goal of the game three minutes into the first half. It came off a throw-in from the right sideline and her shot deflected off the hands of the MHC goalkeeper and into the right corner to make it 1-0.

Contant made 2-0 with about eight minutes remaining in the first half on a nifty move in front of the net to get the goalie down and out. By this time the score could have been 5-0 but UMass just missed on three opportunities only moments before.

Twice Contant was set up in front of the net but both times her shots sailed high. She once came down the entire length of the field on a brilliant individual effort but lost control while attempting to fake around the opposing goalkeeper. One UMass score was negated on an offsides call but Contant scored her third minutes later to give UMass a 3-0 lead at the end of the half.

The second half was pretty much the same story but Mount Holyoke had the edge in the first few minutes of play. During this span the Lyons were able to come up with their only scoring threats of the game, but were turned back by two sparkling saves by Diane Buckhout.

The first save came on a free kick directly in front of the UMass goal and the second was on a partial breakaway down the middle. But both times Buckhout was equal to the task and was able to record her third straight shutout.

Later in the half UMass was awarded a free kick and Tuller took advantage of it by keeping the ball on the ground and placing into the left corner to put UMass up by four. Just a few minutes later Douglas scored to give the Minutewomen a 5-0 lead and it was just a matter of playing out the string. But UMass was not finished. The Minutemen continued to storm the MHC goal and Douglas completed the scoring with her second on a rebound off the post to make the final score 6-0.

"I was very pleased with the team as a whole," a happy Luis Macedo said. "They did everything that I asked them to do in practice.

"They are a very coachable team," he added. "They will always try to do everything that I ask them to do. I really enjoy coaching them."

The Minutewomen will travel to Mount Holyoke on October 12 for a return matchup before heading to the Tufts Tournament on October 29.

The UMass women's tennis team won its second impressive victory of the fall season by beating Springfield, 6-3, in a rescheduled home match yesterday on the NOPE courts. The win was keyed by the strong play of the three doubles teams.

The doubles teams swept in fairly easy fashion as the first doubles team of Dawn Minaai and Jennifer Ranz defeated Springfield's Wolfe and Nuara 6-0, 6-1; the second doubles team of Martha Aswiszus and Cathy Sullivan defeated Noane and Itiseerman 6-2, 6-3; and the third doubles team of Chris Carson and Fran Meyers defeated Kuzazal and Cararthus 6-0, 6-1.

UMass won three out of six singles matches to ensure victory. Cathy Maher lost a tough one at number one singles to Robin Rich, ranked number one in New England in 18 and under doubles, 6-4, 1-6, 5-7. At number two singles Carolyn Mooney of UMass defeated Kate Purcell 6-3, 6-3. Lee Robb of UMass lost to Barb Arvanitis at number three 4-6, 1-6.

Sherry Lurie of UMass won a hard fought battle at the number four spot by defeating Mary Jane DeSouza 3-6, 7-5, 6-3. Jackie Isgur lost to Jan Penzi at number five 4-6, 3-6; and Jane Carson defeated Mitch Peloquin at number six 6-3, 6-4 to complete the scoring for UMass.

The win was another step forward toward a successful season for coach Bill Yu and his team, as Springfield defeated UMass last season 5-4. The women hope to continue their winning ways this afternoon when they face a very strong Mt. Holyoke team in a 4:00 match on the NOPE courts.

Following today's game, the Minutewomen will play two successive home matches, against Boston College and Keene State.

UMass' season will stretch into late October, and will climax in the New England tourney. Prior to that, the Minutewomen will have competed in the state tourney.

straight before handing off to Al, who opened up a huge lead, since he was running on the inside, and Hinds and Singleton had wiped out the stagger.

He gave the baton to Bausley, who wavered slightly before exploding down the homestretch to ease up in the last ten yards.

"I put my fastest men in the leadoff and anchor positions," explained Ismael. "That way we had a strong kick from Todd and a good lead from Dave. I also set it up so Tuffy (Singleton) would line up at the end of the fly zone (10 yard zone before the baton passing area) and Todd at the beginning, so our fastest men would run the farthest.

"The key was in the handoffs, though."

All five of Los Conquistadores ran track in high school. Bausley and Hinds ran for UMass as freshman. They intend to come back and make it four straight.

"I just hope there's more competition," said Al. "I don't like it when there's no challenge."

"Everyone should get involved in this," said Singleton. "This year's meet was much better — there were more people involved.

"It's a good workout," added Hinds. "It's good for the mind and body.

"We've established a tradition, and we intend to carry it on."

KEENE, N.H. — Freshman sensation Tommy Koutsoukos scored the only goal of the game on a direct kick after a Keene State penalty to lead the UMass soccer team to a physical 1-0 victory over the Owls here yesterday.

The victory proved that the Minutemen deserved their newly assigned ranking of number three in New England, which is currently shared with UConn, ranked 15th in the nation.

"They really outplayed our offense, but I was happy to come home with this win," said UMass coach Russ Kidd. "Our defense was immense with Larry Aronson, Mark Vassalotti and goalie Mark Hodgdon having super games."

The win was no cakewalk for the Minutemen, who had to contend with some illegal hits and trips dished out by the Owls, most of which went unnoticed by the two referees. Senior co-captain Ed Niemiec had to sit out part of the first half and most of the second after falling victim to a kick delivered by Owl netminder Todd Delorn.

After the game, Kidd was extremely critical of the way the refs handled the game. "This isn't the way soccer is played and it only makes it worse when the refs don't pick it up," said Kidd.

The Owls, coached by eight-year mentor Ron Butcher controlled the ball for almost two-thirds of the game, but the Minuteman defense was equal to the task as it stopped charge after charge. "It happens in this game; my goalie Todd Delorn thought that he had Koutsoukos' shot covered, but he apparently misjudged it," said Butcher.

The loss dropped the Owls' record to 2-1 this season, and was also the first time that they had been scored upon this year. On the other hand, UMass said its 1977 ledger upped to 3-0 while it remained unscored upon in 1977.

Other major contributors to the UMass effort included aggressive Pat Veale and Andrew Moore on defense. Moore was specifically cited by coach Kidd for his excellent defensive work when defending against corner kicks.

The game itself was pretty lackluster until Koutsoukos scored at 14:15 in the first half. Coming from a direct kick awarded after a penalty, the ball struck the post to the right of the Owl netminder and careened into the goal. It was Koutsoukos' seventh goal of the season and he is currently averaging an impressive two goals per contest.

After that score, the game remained uneventful until about 10 minutes left in the game when the Owls began an all-out effort to tie the contest. Sensing defeat, Keene State mounted several offensive thrusts only to be stymied by a "hard as nails" UMass defense.

Exhaling several sighs of relief after the contest, coach Kidd said, "You come up here, play a game like this, and you thank God when you come away with a win."

Booter Banter: The Minutemen now have an undefeated streak of seven games and five straight shutouts that includes the tail-end of the 1976 season ... This was the second year in a row that Ed Niemiec was injured in the Keene State game ... UMass has a chance to break into the national rankings of it defeats Vermont in the UMass home-opener on Saturday ... Koutsoukos had root canal work done on one of his teeth minutes before boarding the bus but it didn't appear to slow him up too much.

Dave Hinds, leadoff man for Los Conquistadores, hands off to second runner Ferdinand Singleton on the way to a 20 yard victory in the 440 relay at the Intramural track meet yesterday at the Derby Track. # Stickers shutout Owls

By JIM GLEASON
Collegian Staff

The UMass field hockey team, behind Cheryl Meliones' two goals, defeated previously unbeaten Keene St. 2-0 yesterday on a soggy NOPE field.

The Minutewomen controlled and dominated play throughout the game, but their inability to score kept the game close.

The first half was characterized by UMass missing several good opportunities as its passing and shooting were off.

UMass coach Judith Davidson commented on her team's early poor play: "We were standing around doing nothing; there was no anticipation. I think it was because there was a big letdown after the Springfield game."

The game was scoreless until Meliones stickhandled in on the right side and let go with a low, hard shot which eluded Keene St. goalie Colleen Pettigrew with seven minutes remaining in the first half.

In the second half, the Minutewomen came alive, perhaps realizing that the score was still close. But the Owls defense also came alive and Pettigrew made many fine saves

As the game neared the close, Meliones again scored, this time on a very difficult shot in which she reversed the side of her stick and fired in a hard shot. Sue Kibling drew the assist.

With the score 2-0, the game was over even before the horn sounded.

Davidson complimented the play of Meliones. "Cheryl played an exceptional game. They were really big goals."

Ginger Bulman and goalie Gipps also received praise. Bulman was largely responsible for keeping the pressure on the Owls and Gipps made the big saves when called upon.

"Kathy (Gipps) is the stabilizer on defense", said Davidson.

The final statistics remained lopsided from halftime. Shots on goal were 23-3 UMass, and saves were 14-2, also in the Minutewomen's favor. Penetration time was 13 minutes for UMass and only 3:04 seconds for the Owls.

Summing up the game, Davidson said she was pleased with her team's play. "I liked our support on attack. That kept the ball in their zone most of the game."

About UMass' lackadaisical play in the first half, Davidson could only say "it was good to see we can come back after playing lousy."

Yankees clinch tie

NEW YORK [UPI] — Reggie Jackson's first inning grand slam and subsequent homers by Graig Nettles, Mickey Rivers and Thurman Munson last night carried the New York Yankees to their sixth straight victory, a 10-0 rout of the Cleveland Indians which enabled them to clinch at least a tie for the American League East Pennant.

How to build up UM football

Attendance at UMass home football games has been dwindling over the past few seasons, and must be leading members of the team and the athletic department to wonder what the loyal student body is doing on Saturday afternoons.

On a rather damp and gray afternoon two weeks ago, the Minutemen played their first of five home games this season against Maine, and attendance figures released estimated the crowd at 8400.

Now that may not sound bad, but more than 18,000 students attend this institution, and not all of those 8400 in attendance were students. Then when you consider the fact that many high school football games in other regions of the country attract bigger crowds, UMass' home attendance begins to take on miniscule proportions.

So where are the students?

Assistant athletic director Robert O'Connell remembers back when in the early 60's football was actually BIG at UMass. According to O'Connell, 65 per cent of the student body attended home football games during that era. But that's not all.

On Friday nights before the big home games, the women who resided on the western portion of the campus, and the men who lived on the eastern side (remember, there was nothing so sinful as coed dorms back then) would assemble outside the Student Union building. Then, as O'Connell related, a huge bonfire would be ignited. The UMass band would then march out of the hills and strike up the music, and finally, the glorious UMass football team would appear on the Student Union balcony and parade by.

Now that's what I call spirit, and no folks this scene didn't come from a 'Gidget goes to College' movie.

O'Connell realizes that times have changed, and the idea of a bonfire before this week's game against Youngstown State would probably go over as big as a Ronald Reagan demonstration against the Panama Canal treaty.

So how then, can UMass increase its home attendance at football games? Now I don't say I have all the answers. I'm not even a marketing major, but a few of these suggestions might be considered by the athletic department.

First we must start with the basics. Therefore UMass football coach Dick MacPherson should arrange his schedule so that all home games are played under bright sunny skies, with temperatures in the mid-70's. Students might not be interested in the game but at least they would get one helluva tan. A more practical suggestion might be a domed stadium with sunlamps.

The scheduling of teams is also a problem for the Minutemen. Who wants to watch such non-entities as Rhode Island, Maine and Connecticut? Since we all know UMass can't go BIGTIME because of budget restrictions, it's going to have to revert to deceptive practices. Why not advertise that Ohio State and Notre Dame will be appearing at Alumni Stadium in the upcoming weeks? Stranger things have been done in the business world.

Athletic director Frank McInerney might consider blacking out all televised sports programming on Saturday afternoons between the hours of one and four in the Amherst area. That way many students might be less inclined to sit home and watch the Minutemen's biggest competitor on the tube — the pro bowlers tour.

In order to attract all factions of the student population, the concessions must expand their current menu of hot dogs and coke. There are too many vegetarian football fans in the area who are forced to stay home because of this limited assortment currently being offered. Such items as carrot bars, prune juice and yogurt must be added if the athletic department intends to cater to all students.

If none of these work, coach MacPherson should revert to my fail-safe plan. After studying the entire university budget and receiving instructions from members of the education department, MacPherson should imbezzle a huge sum of money, and then recruit the best high school players in the country.

Why not? What's ten years in Walpole when you've got a packed house and a winner.

Poet-President of Angola

Agostinho Neto

Poet President of Angola

From boundless Africa and above the treachery of neo-colonialism comes the poetry of Agostinho Neto. Anxious, seething, abundant, his words ripple like images across the flow of life. Like muted drums carrying messages of pain and suffering and like a river's roar booming indignation, Neto's poetry , profound, humanistic, vital, has become the source of inspiration for a movement, a naton, a contintent.

It is no accident that his works remain, to this day, unpublished in the USA. Tortured and imprisoned by PIDE, the Portugese secret police, Neto's anger is precise; his mastery of language is so well honed that he weaves images and shapes thought with a few sparse but well chosen words- a feat that ruling classes everywhere with all their tehcnological media-marvels and cultural trappings strive to rival. Amidst a concerted campaign to discredit the infant People's Republic of Angola and its leaders and to suppress all relevant literature, these poems come to you fully revealing the true nature of a great man.

THE BLOOD AND THE SEED
by Agostinho Neto

We
from boundless Africa
And above the treachery of "crocodiles"
Span the majestic and invincible forests across the flow of life
Anxious, seething, abundant our rivers' roar
Through the harmonius sounds of muted drums
Through the eyes of youth in multitudes
Multitudes of arms, of pain, of hope

From boundless Africa
beneath the claw
Bleeding from grief and hope, from sorrow and strength
Bleeding on this earth torn by hoes
Bleeding with the sweat of forced labor in the cotton fields
Bleeding hunger, ignorance, despair, death
From the wounds on the black back of the child of the mother of honesty
The blood and the seed

From boundless Africa
Black
And bright like mornings of friendship
Desirous and strong like the pace of freedom

Our cries
Are drums heralding desire
In the harmonius voices of nations
Our cries are hymns of love from the heart
Flourishing on the earth like sun-lit seeds
Cries Africa

Cries of mornings that our seas cough up bodies
Chained by
The blood and the seed

-Behold our hands
Open to friendship with the world
United in certainty
For the future of man
For right for friendship for Peace

From our toes grow roses
Perfumed with the perserverance of the river Zaire
And with the grandeur of the trees of Maiombe
In our souls
The way of friendship through Africa
Through the world
In our eyes the blood of life
Turned towards hands beckoning love throughout the world
Hands of the future-inspiring faith in the vitality
Of Africa-human land of Africa

From boundless Africa
Germinating under the sun of hope
Creating bonds of brotherhood in freedom from want
From anticipation for peace
The blood and the seed

For the future behold our eyes
For Peace hear out our voices
For Peace here are our hands from Africa united in love

Movement On Display

DANCE GALLERY
by Sharon True

Dance Gallery, the dance company in residence at Mt. Holyoke, presented an impressive "gallery" of dances at its Fall Concert Sept. 22 and 23 at Chapin Aud. With the possible exception of the first dance, "Opaque", (choreography- Karen Steele, music- Ravel's "String Quartet in F") in which the love" sequence appeared stilted and unspontaneousand the man (Peter Schmitz) nearly took an awful spill at one point, all the other dances sparkled with pizzazz, originality and precision.

Following the love disillusionment-grief story of "Opaque" was a poetry-dance entitled "Adam and Eve". No music was used in this dance, the rhythm and dramatic action being impelled forward by the dynamic expressiveness of the dancers' voices speaking both in unison and soliloquy to the words of Karl Shapiro's "The Adam and Eve Poems".

This was a touching dance in both the physical and the emotional sense of the word. To illustrate: Eve, after having been created (the result of the androgynous "adam-being" being split by "The One" into two- a female and male half- according to ancient myth) scampers to a nearby pool to get a drink of water; Adam folllows and kneels beside her. As they cup their hands and begin to drink, by accident their hands touch. They are simultaneously shocked and delighted with the pleasurable sensation oftheir first kiss, a kiss of the hands. This poignant moment of discovery subsequently evolves to a joyful physical touching- and hugging and holding and wrapping-around-one-another.

Shapiro's poems give equal emphasis to the characters of both Adam and Eve- neither "rules over the other, and Eve is not condemned by Adam for eating the forbidden fruit (he asks how did it happen, not why did you do it). Their vulnerability (the tail-between-the-legs nervous contraction positions) their bewilderment at what was happening, (the uplifted faces), their pure and uninhibited expression of love and need for one another were all sensations and experiences which they shared and felt equally. I found this to be a refreshing, non-sexist interpretation of the Adam and Eve story.

"Nexus of Dreams" and "Debussy Dance" , choreographed by Peter Schmitz and Hannah Kahn respectively, were both fast-moving complex works in which the movement explored every dimension of space imagineable, pursued to its fullest realization. The swift changes in direction, in line (such as sharp, extended linear lines to soft curves) and in quality (from punctuated , piercing thrusts of arms and elbows, heels, hips to drawn-up , sustained positions with the focus downward, suggesting gliding flight) were all executed pecisely, and wove a rich, ever-changing tapestry of movement to music by Maurice Ravel and Claude Debusey.

Katherine Sanderson's "It's a Long Way to Tipperary" rounded out the gallery of dance with an excellent flourish of humor. The dance is essentially an up-dated version of Alice in Wonderland, with Alice being played as a normal dumb little kid by Peter Schmitz and tall, lanky Katherine Sanderson taking the role of the cigar smoking "Cheshire Puss".

Highlights of the dance included the outrageous appearances of a singing dancing group (performing a syrupy-sweet rendition of "Happy Birthday to You", ahilarious take-off of the typically over-amplified gestures musical theater soloists employ singing "You'll Never Walk Alone", and a finger and head-wagging vaudeville interpretationof "It's a Long Way to Tipperary"), and Alice's own little scenes , such as her fifteen or so plaintive replies "What??" each one different from the other, to the Chesire Puss's repeated "Alice...Alice...Alice", her Let's Make a Deal crazed indecisiveness over which door to choose to go through , her "watch me do this, wasn't that good?...here let me try it again...just one more time for sure," etc. show-off scene for the Chesire Puss.

Although some might argue that this was more an acting scene than a dancing one it was precisely the movement which accompanied the singing and dialogue that gave the comedy its punch.

Reflections on the Art of Joanne Popsicle

by Don Aucoin

The evening began innocently enough. An invitation from a friend, free tickets to a play in which a girlfriend was performing, a trifle called "Once Upon a Mattress," The play lurches forward. The acting ability ranges from cigar-store Indian passivity to a kind of noisy competence. Thus far, a pleasant evening. One was not seeking epiphany in a high school auditorium.

Suddenly, one is startled by the appearance of the Princess who is soon to sleep on the Pea. Her presence is strangely riveting, and serves as an explosion of air into a vacumn. Her face is unusual, and sends one flipping through the file cards of memory to find the antecedent. Bergman...no, Hepburn...no-but of course! Garland! The same piquancy, the same crushed rose-petal mouth (with a hint of sadness tugging at the corners), the same porcelain-doll face. One searches in that face for a portent of things to come, and guesses at her past.

She bounds about the stage, singing, whirling, injecting a serum into the bloodstreams of her fellow actors. The males in the cast, who had previously moved with the awkwardness of waltzing mannequins, seem to come alive and reflect some of her glow, for she gives off not just heat, but light.

One continues to watch, enchanted. It was as if she had sprung full-blown from the womb of some nameless Muse. Her style is unique; finally, she vitiates the need for comparison. In her best moments she is lunging towards trancedence (the metaphor is clumsy, but then, so is the magic). Her role calls for her to be ungainly and dizzy, but she has the self-assurance of one who knows that she is possessed of a large talent. There is much here, much grist for the literary mill. She puts one in mind of many other actors and actresses whom one has seen in the past (perhaps that is why she is so significant to the writer.) They too labored in obscurity, serving their art faithfully and brilliantly. They too rise above their scripts. They too act for themselves alone, not for somnolent crowds who blink at them from the dark.

And her audience is no different. They are impervious to all nuance, oblivious to excellence. What must it be like to work before such people? To need applause of sneezing grandmothers, constipated businessmen, young toughs doing bad James Dean impressions, giggling pubescents, whining and sighing children, is a dismal state of affairs indeed. One sees an alarming individual at intermission, an amorphous hulk in whose beefy brow can be seen the signs of a declining civilization. What can Joanne Popsicle say to such people? How can she dazzle those empty eyes, how can she set those dead nerve-endings tingling? Where are those big-game hunters to match the daring of an amateur actor? This persistence in the face of such apathy is uplifting. On this evening, this young woman surely could have coaxed a smile out of a corpse.

Mass reaction is torpid, though, and critical reaction would probably be dull and unimaginative. Meaningless words such as "irresponsible", "exuberant", etc., would be tossed about to explain the phenomenon of Joanne Popsicle. They will fail to discern that she has at once the force of a hurricane and the subtlety of a zephyr. She is the small-town ace raised to apotheosis. She can go in any one of several directions. She can dive into the shallow, glitzy world of the sitcom, and be successful in it. She could probably preserve a place in the pop pantheon. Or she can shape her craft, honing it until she finds a vehicle worthy of her considerable gifts. Or (glum probability!) she canglide through the years unknown, content with the encomiums of those who once thought to pay tribute to her artistry.

GOODBYE TO THE HOUR OF LEAVING
BY Agostinho Neto

My mother
        '(all the black mothers whose sons have left)
You had taught me to yearn
As you yearned in the difficult hours

Yet life
Killed in me that soul-sprung hope
I no longer hope
I am he from whom hope comes

I, my mother, am the hope
We are
Your sons
On our way for the faith that feeds the life

Today
We are the naked children of the sanzalas
The boys without training that play ball with knotted rags
In the mid-day sand
We are the same
Contracted to waste our lives in the coffee-fields
The ignorant black folks
Who must respect the white man
And dread the rich
We are your sons
Of the black bairros
Yonder where electric lights have not reached
Where the downtrodden fall
Abandoned to the rythmn of the dance of death
Your sons
With hunger
With thirst
With shame to call you Mother
With fear of crossing the street
With fear of men
Ourselves

Tomorrow
We will intone hymns of liberty
When we commemorate the day
Abolishing this slavery

We are going in search of light
Your sons Mother
        (all the black mothers whose sons have left)
They are going in search of life.

Trouble in The Valley

RING BEFORE ENTERING

Will The Pioneer Valley Secede•

THE EVENT

September 21, 1977 is a day that we are not likely tfor generations to come. The great event for many of our grandparents was World War I; for our parents, Pearl Harbor; for our older brothers and sisters, the assassination of JFK; and now, for our generation, there is the Day of Occupation.

As we all know, September 21st was the day twenty-five armed students supported by five battalions of 500 students each, surrounded the Amherst and Northampton city halls, smashed down the doors, shot all the leading officials, and began what they termed, "the occupation to end all occupations and then some". Students from all five colleges participated in the small, elite strike force: Five from the University, four from Smith, seven from Mount Holyoke, eight from Hampshire, and one from Amherst. The Amherst student surrendered to the FBI later that afternoon, claiming that he had gotten on the wrong bus and had "nothing to do with politics".

"How could I possibly be involved in something like this," he stated, "with the MCATS on October 15th, I have no time for mixers, let alone social change!"

The surprise attack over, their initial aims reached, the students settled in for what they knew would be along and bloody fight. While the National Guard forces rolled in towards the Valley, two student battalions were detached to the Amherst commons. The other three remained in Northampton and took over 'key strategic centers", including the train station, bus depot, all gas stations, Cousin William's, and Fitzwilly's. A small detachment of fifteen students took over Bart's ice cream store for no apparent reason.

What puzzled state and local officials while all this was going on was: Where did the students get their weapons• (And fine weapons they were!) Several BMW automobiles (with Smith stickers on the rear bumpers) were now re-equipped so that they could fire Surface-to-Air missles in lightning speed. There were hundreds of anti-tank bazookas, rapid-fire machine guns, napalm cannisters (organic--"Made from a unique family recipe for you, from us, Delaware" read the label), and Polish cannons. The mystery was cleared up a week later when one of the students admitted that his Hampshire College Division III project had been: "Weapons of War: Invention and Improvisation". Apparently, this student had been assembling all that was needed to equip a modern army.

Day of Occupation lasted several days. We all know the historical outcome. We all read the reports in the New York Times, Boston Globe, and Daily News (covered by Jimmy Breslin, he titled his story: "Sons and Daughters of Sam"). We all saw the flashy covers of Newsweek and Time: MAD STUDENTS RUN AMUCK and TROUBLED TIMES AHEAD•. We heard Eric Severaid and Barbara Walters lament the passing of civilization. But what really happened those five short days when the world we thought we knew so well slipped out of our fingers•

When the FBI and the National Guard received reports on the strength of the student forces and the damages they had already inflicted, they held their troops at a distance from the Valley and waited for federal instructions. President Carter was alerted. He released this statement:

I have received the FBI reports on the tragic situation in the Pioneer Valley in Western Massachusetts. At this time, I am ordering the National Guard to halt until a possible peace settlement may be negotiated. In respect ot this settlement, I am sending Bert Lance to meet with student officials at their headquarters in Northampton, the establishment know as Fitzwilly's. I understand that this location was "once a nice place to spend an evening, but is now a singles pick-up joint". I am hoping Mr. Lance and the students can come to some agreement when they meet there tomorrow afternoon.

Lance and five students from the strike force met at one the next afternoon. Three hours later the group emerged. One student motioned to the press for a microphone and shouted, "Hey, not only does this clown want an unconditional surrender, but he stole our wallets! No peace, baby!"

The situation became very tense. It was obvious that unless a peace settlement could be reached between the students and the United States government, there would be mass bloodshed, vast destruction and no classes.

THE PRESS CONFERENCE

It was becoming a media event. Five students faced a hall of tense journalists and officials. The hot white lights burned their faces. The cameras properly set up, a cue from the director, and a Hampshire student spoke:

"We all know shy we're here. Or maybe we don't. We've been under some incredible pressure lately to get the Hell out of the buildings we've occupied and give it all up. Well, we don't want to give it all up. Maybe we should explain what we do want."

The Smith student interrupted:

"Our list of demands is short and sweet. One, we demand that the Pioneer Valley officially secede from the Union of the United States of America, that the government to be established here be parliamentary and New England Socialist in form. Two, we demand that this new nation be called Naturalland, and that it be granted a period of three years of non-inteference in which to establish a national economy, anthem, Olympic team, and the postal service which will issue an exciting variety of colorful postage stamps. Three, we demand the right to exile anyone who is presently living in this Valley for social, political, or personal reasons. Four, we demand the right to develop a People's Army. Finally, five, everyone here must speak French. Ou est la Gare! Gateaux! Vive l'escargot!" Laissez-les manger les gateaux vive notre republique.

Amid wild applause from fellow student members of the strike force, she sat down. There was a short period of silence, then a student announced that the press could ask questions.

The journalist from the New York Times asked, "Where will you get the money to build up a nation•"

"Well," began one of the students, "I work tables in the dining commons. My folks said they'd help pay for books."

Several questions later and the conference was over. Yes, the situation was a bit more clear, but the deadlock still remained. The government announced that it would not negotiate on any of the issues until the students apologized to Bert Lance. The students refused to apologize until the National Guard were pulled back. The government agreed to call the Guard back if the students would accept the nation of Bolivia in exchange for Northampton. This last point angered the students and they unleashed one of their battalions on Mountain Farms Mall. Two hours later all that was left standing was a "tanks" game from "Just Fun".

Furious at the waste of human productivity and crass capitalism, President Carter ordered Federal troops to march on the Pioneer Valley. September 25, 1977. Who can forget the sight of tanks in the Amherst Common• Or the sound of one of the Southwest dormitories as it crashed to the ground, a target of a US missle• The battle lasted a bloody twelve hours. When the firing was over and the smoke had cleared, National Guardsmen had taken over all the major student strongholds and the elite brigade that had commandeered the battalions had surrendered.

At this time, however, there are hidden pockets of resistance all over the Pioneer Valley.

COMMENTARY

Did it have to happen• Certainly student unrest is nothing new, but did it have to take an extreme view•

The Pioneer Valley was once a lovely place to live. One visitor called it, "One hell of an area. Really! It's one hell of a place to live!" He was not drunk.

But today there is debris on the streets. The Day of Occupation is not yet a memory. The reality of that time still lingers. Let us for the moment put aside the tragic remnants of history and examine the event itself. The Day of Occupation took place because people wanted a change, but a change that was ill-defined, misshapen, confused, leaden, and club-footed. Still, there is the energy to consider.

You must decide if the move towards secession was just one. We all know what took place, but how shall we relate this to future generations•

In the meantime, there are several pockets of resistance in the Valley right now. Find these people and send their names and photographs to this column care of Below the Salt.

A WOMAN TRANSCENDS

I

Sun-bleached bone statue stands at the mouth of the cave. Cool, detached, waiting. Lacerating eyes perforate the muffled space in the passageway between us. Electric disturbance. Ten footsteps, ten thousand excuses, ten million fears separate me from she. Slip knots of madness swing like coiled snakes from the black stone domed cavern ceiling. Traps, I precariously hung through the eroding years, out of my horror, out of my awe. Ultimate paradox.

II

Rite of passage begun. Perspiration of blood blinds my vision. I sense my way forward so slowly, so very slowly, that one inch of progress takes a century. On my pierced tongue, texture of chants. Syllabic submission to the sorceress. There are knots of terror in my straining muscles as my body spins through the darkness, a whirling prayer wheel in honor of her. She, who is my other half, my divine twin. Only my desire allows me to slip through the hang ropes. Only my hope propels me over the belladonna spittle that lies in puddles on the surface of the floor. One step more...Passage completed.

III

I intact, we celebrate my dance of resurrection. The moon's liquid warmth sweeps across my body. My pores inhale the honey and wine that emanates from her being. I am totally saturated. Completely immersed in this graceful goddess. I go where she leads me. A ziggurat of bluest lapis lazuli and brightest sapphire. A tower, reaching arms, to the night sky. We begin to climb and as we ease upwards, limitations fall away, surrender to the earth below which' seems more and more distant. Removed. Dissolved.

IV

A woman transcends. In the indigo heavens, a firey comet speeds by, perfectly undivided.

TRIBUTE IN BLACK SAND

you are encircled by an aura of dazzling stars scattered on ebony sand beaches-a spattering of diamond jewels-tiny crystals
sparkling me into a state of painful awareness-white light refractions shimmering pulling eyes in search-
i scoop up the sooty grains trying to seize one star of you-one star
i could flick into that black hole my pupil-

but my hands are like nets

WHY IS SIGLINDA STEINFÜLLER DEAN OF BEER?
WHY NOT?
Fellow Beer Persons,
Life is full of unanswered questions such as: Is there intelligent life elsewhere in the universe? And if so, do they wear socks?
In beer, however, there are no unanswered questions. Because there is only one word for beer, and you know it.
Schlitz.
Therefore, as your Dean of Beer, I suggest you research the essential rightness of the word for yourself at your next social function. Or even your next antisocial function.
And please note: The recommended source material for locating the word can be found in any phone booth. In other words, look in the Yellow Pages. Under "Beer."
Thank you.
THERE'S JUST ONE WORD FOR BEER. SCHLITZ AND YOU KNOW IT.

Paul Bley - NHOP
Paul Bley - Niels- Henning Orsted Pedersen
(Inner City)

Putting two outstanding musicians together in a setting relatively devoid of any constraints on their collective creativity does not guarantee an outstanding recording, as Inner City should have discovered with this 1976 release.

Actually, this meeting of Canadian keyboardist Bley and Danish bassist Pederson (NHOP only so that the name will fit on the album cover) is pleasant enough, and does even have its moments of brilliance. What it lacks is variety and emotional power.

The blame seems to lie mostly with Bley, who incidentally composed seven of the nine pieces on the album. His usual cool intensity is too cool here, and when the communication with Pedersen so necessary in a duo session breaks down, he often resorts to redundant block chords and repetitive phrasing.

In places, though, Bley is colorful and imaginative. Playing both electric and acoustic piano, his style is sparse and subtle, in contrast to the dense 'power piano' style characteristic of the best-known new music pianists--Taylor, Jarrett, and Tyner. Still, Bley fails to experiment with texture on this album as he has on other efforts, particularly on the electric. Occaisional hints of marvelous overtones and fuzzy ringing sounds suggest that Bley is being all to conservative.

Pedersen does a little better. He is at present probably the world's greatest 'jazz' bassist, and certainly one of the busiest. His complete mastery of the instrument is awesome, and on the album he displays a broad range of styles-- from delicate harmonies to percussive thumping to melancholy bowing. Pedersen has spent the last few years sitting in with a number of major figures in the jazz world, and his unsupassed ability makes his popular 'discovery' inevitable.

The compositions on the album are primarily of the European 'new music' genre, although the musicians harken back to their jazz roots on 'Carla', a blues progression where Pedersen slips into a definitive walking bassline while Bley fools around with altered chords and some almost traditional sounding solo runs. The remainder of the pieces are subdued and introspective, with a varying degree of sympathy generated between the musicians. Of interest is Carla Bley's composition, 'Olhos de Gato,' in which Pedersen plays a droning bass part of only four different notes beneath Bley's colorful phrases.

Despite the problems, it's nice to see another label giving musicians like Bley and Pedersen a chance to work in this sort of setting. While there is nothing really new here, the integrity of the music puts the album miles ahead of the typical commercial slop.

GRATEFUL DEAD
Terrapin Station
(Artista)

The Grateful Dead have produced anumber of good albums and at least a couple of great ones,but it is still their lengthy and fantastic live concerts for which they're chiefly noted.

The San Francisco group's Springfield Civic Center show last April won many of the older Dead heads over to the Dead's '75 studio LP, Blues for Allah, a truly superb album of intricate material, well executed.Terrapin Station,however, is not as consistently dynamic as Blues For Allah; it's inventive but not sensational.

'Estimated Prophet,' with a bit of reggae and Tom Scott playing sax, is catchy with'Ace' Wier singing optimistically('My dawn's coming anyday, don't worry'bout me...'), but the lyrics elsewhere aren't always cleanly audible. 'Passenger', for instance,is interfered with via burdensome string orchestration.

'Sampson And Delilah' is a good song because of the band's poised playing behind Weir's energetic vocals, and Donna Godchaux's composition 'Sunrise,' an ode to husband Keith, is lovely, but 'Lady With A Fan,'though a space tale, is not comparable favorably to, say,the beautiful'St. Stephen,' an early Dead gem.

And while many of the sextet'sclassic songs establish lone vocals and vital restraint followed by the fabulous instrumental riffs or strong dual singing, side two'sTerrapin medley has too little restraint and again, too many strings.

Deadheads will likely insist thatTerrapin Station still beats the pants off 70percent ofthis year's records, but recommendations to buy it should be restricted to Deadheads only.

MAX WEBSTER
High Class in Borrowed Shoes
(Anthem/Mercury)

Remember JoJo Gunn? Remember Spirit? Remember the James Gang? Remember that Camaro that you had an affair with? Remember your first beach party? Your first drunk? Getting wrecked and going to an amusement park with your date? Remember high school love? Making it in the hallway before the bell? How loaded you got at your first rock concert? The few good cuts on Max Webster's second album are sorta like that. I can hear this album cruisin' Ft. Lauderdale Easter vacation. I can hear this L.P. through the haze of fevered adolescence. The instrumentals, vocals and lyrics are simplistic but sincere. The lyrics sweet little rock poems. The band manages to look respectably weird on the cover photo.

Some salvage herein.

STRAPPS
Secret Damage
(Harvest)

Secret Damage ain't so secret, nor subtle. Here we have a perfect example of formula rock. Bop Bop a little drum riff, or Whee a thin synthesizer whine, off into four bars of heavy guitar. A hit of rasping monotone screaming mildly decadent verses. Do I need this? Excellent production and photos by Mick Rock disguise this record as good music. Don't let 'em fool ya. Noel Scott-keyboards needs his fingers slapped with a ruler and his synthesizer confiscated. Ross Stagg-vocals and guitar obviously has Led Zep wet dreams should meditate on the secret meaning of things. The other two are untalented if innocent bystanders. I'd have to be tied up to listen to this one through. What a pan, huh?

Sparks
Introducing Sparks
Columbia PC34901

I happen to be one who gets very excited at the sight of a new Sparks album; they always contain such great music. But a couple of listens (all the way through) to Introducing Sparks drives home the fact that it is one record that is very difficult to get at all flustered over.

The record opens promisingly enough with a great Spector-cum-Raspberries styled number, 'A Big Surprise'. Castanets and everything. 'Occupation' is next, and the sound dates to very early Sparks, when they were at their weirdest musically, conceptually, vocally and lyrically ('We cowboys are a hardy breed, we eat our beans and tumbleweed, we're good on horses, good with guns, we smell, but so does everyone'), with some scorching guitar work lying just below the song's surface.

'Ladies' and 'I'm Not' are preludes to mush of what is wrong with dide two of the record: one of Sparks' (actually chief songwriter Ron Mael's) greatest assest has long been their knack for an inspired hook, and these songs, as well as three—fourths of those on the flip side, tend to neglect strong hooks in favor of pounding rhythms. Again, however, great lyrics.

Finishing off the side is the albums primo numero, 'Forever Young'. It's got it all: melody, lyrics, great guitar and drums. Suffice to say that it would be real fine were Introducing Sparks composed of ten of these babies rather than the relatively mediocre material that it instead is.

Side two: 'Goofing Off' is all souvlaki and pita bread. Once more—great lyrics, weak melody, which also sums up 'Girls On the Brain' (which opens like Iggy's 'Nightclubbing'), and 'Over the Summer' (their new 45, which I had hoped would be an interesting cross between Sparks and the Beach Boys but is in fact no such thing).

Finally, 'Those Mysteries', all slush. It reminds me of unflavored Italian ices.

This is the first Sparks album with no Sparks—we are not even told which studio musicians (all nonenites, incidentally) play which instruments. The Mael brothers' bands have always been excellent and have always made major contributions to the respective record's sound, and it is probable that the lack of a real band this time around has brought about the highly unfocused, inconsistent and uninspired nature of Introducing Sparks. The album's title is terribly ironic in light of this—'Sparks' in name has been around for a while, but when they finally get around to being 'introduced' there is no Sparks to introduce.

Bring back Earle Mankey.

"Astro-Black Mythology
Astro-Timeless Immortality
Astro-Thought in Mystic Sound
Astro-Black of Outer Space
Astro- Natural of Darkest Stars
Astro-Reach Beyond The Stars
Out To Endless Endlessness
Astro-Black American"

Philosopher-poet Sun Ra is one of the ultimate explorers in music today and has been for decades. The metaphor for some of his wildest far-reaching accomplishments rests comfortably in space exploration; like an astronaut he seeks the newest worlds and the truest gods. Like monks his Arkestra profess their faith against the commercial and superficial realm of modern American music.

Cosmos extends the metaphor encompassing as many interesting vistas as any Sun Ra album of the past. These devoted preists to his vision provide the proper exotic blend of sound to create these visions of sound. As you release to the pleasant strangeness of "Moonship Journey" or "Journey Among the Stars" it becomes apparent what is lacking from most types of music we listen to—that which transcends to a level where familiarity and strangeness become one and the same; contradictions and similarities mean nothing.

Sounding like mainstream in an occasional riff, sets a starting point for listening and before you know it you're off and running in what sounds like an infinite array of noises and rhythms intentionally constructed to alter your listening waves. this man has jumbled everything together to create blocks of music as sweet and cryptic as you can get. "Moonship Journey" is nothing so spectacular that no one else couldn't have devised it, but no one else can come up with entire album sides of this stuff except Sun Ra. And he does it with intense conviction. When dedication is the name of the game Sun Ra will be crowned the king of all musicians, high priest of aural plains. Solo Piano also conveys Sun Ra's ideology in a more personal vein. Paul Bley's production remains subject to Ra's mastery and prefers back seat to his concentrations which include a beautifully Ra-ified version of Jerome Kern's Yesterdays among more personal material. Sometimes I feel Like a Motherless Child begins the album with an intensity that could only be evinced from Sun Ra.

Both of these new releases can introduce you to untold pleasantries and wonderful trips beyond. Try studying to these and you'll probably fare better due to their meditative quality. Or you might turn the volume up and catch up to Voyagers I and II.

The Meaning of the Enz

"MUSIC AND MIRTH FROM THE ENZ OF THE EARTH"

SPLIT ENZ
DIZRYTHMIA
(CHRYSALIS)

In 1975 when ROXY MUSIC toured Australia, lead guitarist Phil Manzanera caught one of the strangest looking groups he had ever seen on the tube. Amazed at their technical skill and professional air for a place like Australia he sought to meet them personally. Little did he realize that night that this strikingly original act, Split Enz would be opening for Roxy Music on that same tour. So began the real beginning for Split Enz as the musical force we have come to reckon with here today. Of course there were many struggles travelling around New Zealand and Australia as an acoustic ensemble long before that but thanks to Phil Manzanera, Split Enz made it to London where Manzanera produced Mental Notes, their first album for Chrysalis.

Mental Notes has a split personality in itself; Manzanera's production was thick and professional yet Splitz Enz were restrained and wary of their new position on the other hemisphere. Like a thick syrup Mental Notes poured much that was beyond description over its listener, and still managed to hold even more precious eclecticism back. Where King Crimson or Roxy Music developed a particular style of production technique to complement their idiosynchratic sound, Splitz Enz simply could not hold everything together without alot of assistance, and although the production of their debut album in some ways appeared a hindrance to the music, it was a thanks to Manzanera for getting them there in the first place.

Confidence began to build as the band toured Great Britain and America in '76 and '77. Their costumes, a self-parody modern burned-out-businessman-cum-clownsuit helped to accentuate the lyrics of lead singer Tim Finn; a very mock serious approach to apocalyptic and modern tragic situations coating their act with a more emotional philosophy. The parody was obvious and Split Enz let themselves go in small halls and nightclubs all over America to cheers and laughs and sweet rocking good times. The shyness and unfamiliarity was wearing down to reveal the talents of classically-trained professionals and a singer that harkened back to Bowie, Ferry and even further on down the rock line to the roots with stances and swinging hips like a Lennon or Presley. Modern zany rock had come. The appearance was more that visual, beyond hallucinatory to actually meaning something; the suits not too far removed from those chaps getting out of the office after a 'bitch of a day' music depressingly funny like alot of lives and the delivery pure rock and roll. This was no place for burn-outs. Those fortunate enough tohave attended were witnessing the beginning of one of the only new bands to remember what meaning meant to the Bonzo Dog Band or the Mothers.

After a couple of personnel changes Splitz Enz returned to London to record DIZRYTHMIA : A more informal production of their better attributes, namely rock and twisted roll with a razor edgr that tickles as it gently tears you apart.

Co- produced by Geoff Emerick and Split Enz, DYZRTHMIA reminds me of that fascinating performance at Paul 's Mall last March. Tim Finn is twice as much the singer he was on Mental Notes and his compositoions remain the ever sly tho'serious elegies to love and death and life . Bold as Brass opens the album with what could be a very interesting single, a sharp whine pierces and the Enz blow it out like never before; the mix seriously owing much to the Beatle's experiments in production back with Revolver; the incessaant buzzing of the album being something like John Lennon should appreciate. The highest point of Dyzrythmia is reserved for the final spot with Jamboree, a building celebration of life all captured in the beautiful imagery of carnivals and fairs, indicative of the Enz's ever inspiring approach to existence-light, carefulyet ever anticipating the worst pitfalls of modern life.

This faster and more imformal Split Enz deserve much more attention with this recording and they'll probably get it. What remains is to see how much of their originality will be sacrificed in order to round up a larger following. Like Roxy Music they may harden into a slickness that will never chip away from them. But just as they jump from album one to album two was what was necessary for them to continue creatively, Split Enz may find for themselves a formula where their contribution to rock will always be recognized and appreciated.

DWIGHT TWILLEY BAND
Twilley Don't Mind
Arista)

Sincerely, the Dwight Twilley Band's first LP, was a gem, an endlessly enjoyable synthesis of pop styles of the 50's and 60's. It was one of my four most-played albums of last year, and Twilley Don't Mind is well on its way to the same distinction. But for an entirely different reason.

This record was really disappointing when I first got it. But I have eaten my words once too often lately because of records that grew on me. So I have been playing the thing over and over and over for a couple of weeks now , trying my damndest to love it. The sound is unmistakeably Twilley, there are all sorts of neat liittle touches to the arrangements, and the production is superb. It has all the earmarks of the kind of music I would go nuts over . So why don't I?

The main problem with Twilley Don't Mind is that all the songs, with one exception, have almost the same beat. This can work on high energy albums like those of the Ramones, but on lower-key efforts there has to be more variety or the result is snoozeville (Eric Carmen take note). It has taken a great deal of effort to be able to distinguish between the cuts here, and at times when I am listening to one I still expect part of another to come in.

Keep your eyes posted for a single from this album. (Arista: may I suggest"The Haunting Sleeping.") Until then, stick with Sincerely . Now that I've done my duty,I think I'll go play that one again...

GENTLE GIANT
The Missing Piece
(Capitol)

Gentle Giant fans rejoice: This is the album we've been hoping they'd make. After a dissapointing studio set (Interview, a rush job by the band's own admission)and a stalling-for-time live album, the logical successor to 1975's excellent Free Hand is finally here. The Giant have saved their music from stagnation by taking a different approach to the recording of this one. A few of these songs were featured earlier this year in concert, so the band was evidently comfortable with this material before they went into the studio. As for the rest, the Giant is now taking a more straightforward and aggressive approach to their music, and as a result this is one of the most energetic albums the band has made.

The first notes of "Two Weeks in Spain" should be enough to convince you that this is no throwaway album. The tasty rock riff which opens the piece catches your attention immediately, and once again it's that classical Gentle Giant sound, with the vocals being a perfect mixture of gutsiness and sophistication and the band tearing into a complex arrangement as though there was nothing to it. The major difference is that this song is only three minutes long, as is everything else on the first side. This is hardly a move towards commercialization, but a sign that they are mastering the skill of becoming more concise in their musical statements.

The rest of side one is the surprise, in which Giant pulls out the stops and rocks harder than ever before. "Betcha Think We Couldn't Do It" is the track that tells the story: the Giant realizes that they are surprising their audience, and take great pleasure in doing so. "Who Do You Think You Are?" and "Mountain Time" continue in this vein, with Gary Green's guitar taking firm control and guiding the Giant's sound closer to rock and roll than it's ever been. Also on side one is "I'm Turning Around", a fine ballad with one of this year's most memorable choruses.

Those who've been missing the more intricate and less immediate side of the Giant's music can find it on side two. "AS Old As You're Young" is a return to the style of previous Giant albums, with the keyboards building up some nice textures and a madrigal-like quality in the vocals. "Memories of Old Days" is a long, contemplative piece which sounded good in concert and better here, with some subtle interweavings of acoustic guitars. "Winning" is the closest thing this album has to a weak track, but the interesting use of percussion saves it from being a throwaway. And it does serve to prepare you for the finale, "For Nobody", a classic Giant track which has another one of those instantly memorable themes and some fine multiple harmonies. Special mention throughout the album goes to Kerry Minnear, who always seems to come up with just the right keyboard sound at the right time.

The critic in me wants to find something nasty to say about this album to prove I'm objective, but to no avail. This album has hardly anything wrong with it, and is running a close competition with Wind and Wuthering and Silly Sisters as my favorite album of the year. If you have ever been interested in Gentle Giant or in progressive rock in general, this is one piece that you shouldn't be missing.

ROBIN TROWER
In City Dreams
(Chrysalis)

Now that Robin Trower feels that he has proven himself a most capable guitarist, he has done an about face on In City Dreams and delivered an album which stands as a showcase for Robin Trower the group, not Robin Trower the guitarist. Comparisons to Hendrix are no longer truly valid, for Trower has surrounded himself with three excellent band-members who all shine and sparkle in their respective roles. In City Dreams reveals a quartet who have faith enough in their own ability to avoid falling into the trap of performing as merely Robin Trower and three chaps named Joe.

Vocalist James Dewar, who has been with Trower from the beginning (six albums ago), turns in a fine performance on this disc. His lyrical deliverances are as smooth and breathy as ever as he gets more of a chance to reach for the limelight. The rhythm section, once a team for Sly Stone, unites cohesively to provide a solid foundation for the strong blending of heavy metal, space rock, and R® B. This is drummer Bill Lordan's fourth album with Trower, while bassist Rustee Allen is the welcome newcomer. Both are virtually as steady as the Rock of Gibraltar.

For his part, Trower brings us masterful guitarplay which is as crisp as any from his past. However, there is a marked feeling of both restraint and economy; whereas once Robin would be proud to do an extended solo, he now picks and chooses his spots.

His most rollicking work is to be heard on the cover version of the old Bobby Blue Bland number, "Farther Up The Road, " as well as on the hypnotically bluesy "Little Girl." Throughout the LP's nine tracks, Trower is dominant without being overbearing.

Although Trower is too progressive to be considered as a singles artist, "Love's Gonna Bring You Around" is a catchy enough piece of melodic balladry to warrant its being issued as a single. No doubt about it, it's the tune which most impressed me after but one playing of the whole album

In any case, now that I've heard the entire album a multitude of times, every cut has some basic strength which stands out like Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis at a Salvation Army rummage sale. In City Dreamsis one of the best efforts that Trower has ever put out. It should be pleasing to old and new fans alike as it scores resoundingly with a "Trower Power rules the hour" A.

BE BOP DELUXE
Live in the Air Age
(Harvest)

The critics have been predicting big things for this British quartet ever since the early seventies. Led by composer-vocalist-guitarist Bill Nelson, Be Bop Deluxe play an inspired form of space rock, producing a total sound somewhat akin to a band in which Pink Floyd meets Jeff Beck meets Mott the Hoople.

Live in the Air Age (one LP plus one LP-sized EP), chronicling Be Bop's '77 tour of the United Kingdom, should earn the group quite a few new followers, but it won't break them wide open. The reason for this is taht the recording suffers from Nelson's less than perfect vocal style. His range is relatively limited and his delivery unemotionally staid. Additionally, his lack of verbal communication with his audience between songs makes for a most incomplete picture of how exactly Nelson relates to the people who are putting bread on his table.

Fortunately, his guitar-play is excellent. Andy Clary plays some fine keyboard in tandem with Nelson's bombastic riffs, but Nelson holds the spotlight with his axe as top dog. Be Bop's rhythm section is secondary, but consistently solid.

Selections here should be familiar to Be Bop aficiandos from past albums, except for two cuts, "Piece of Mine" and "Mill Street Junction." Both of these are set to vinyl for the first time, although the group has been performing them live for some time.

Despite its drawbacks, Live in the Air Age is an enjoyable album, but Be Bop Deluxe should be seen live, not merely heard. Their future is still in front of them. (B)

UTOPIA
Oops! Wrong Planet
(Bearsville)

Oops! Wrong Planet,released only six months after the masterpiece Ra album, marks a new direction for Todd Rundgren, Kasim Sulton, Roger Powell and "Willie" Wilcox. This does not mean much though, because every Rundgren or Utopia album blazes a fresh path. Twelve songs, all under four and one half minutes make up Oops! Wrong Planet. On Ra, four of the seven songs were over seven minutes .

Utopia has turned completely against society on this album. Titles like "Abandon City", "The Martyr", "Rape of the Young", and others all show more than a mild discontent with the condition of our world. Todd handles guitar, saxophone (•!!), engineering, and production, while Sulton, Wilcox, and Powell play bass, drums and keyboards, respectively. All band members take some lead vocals, but fortunately, Todd does most of the singing. The major weakness of the album lies in the weak voices of Wilcox and Powell.

The music displays the usual instrumental expertise, and most of the tunes find the band right on the mark. "Trapped", "The Marriage of Heaven and Hell", and "Love in Action" are the best cuts on side one. "The Martyr", "Abandon City", "Rape of the Young" and "Love is the Answer" from side two are easily as good as any older Rundgren material. Despite the negative "Love is the Answer", the closing cut, leaves us with some hope.

After some in-depth listening, any fan of Rundgren's can hear that Oops! Wrong Planet once again displays the usual high standard of excellence marking all of Todd's endeavors.

BOB JOHNSON AND PETE KNIGHT
The King of Elflands Daughter

MADDY PRIOR AND JUNE TABOR
Silly Sisters
(both Chrysalis)

It should be common knowledge to Steeleye Span fans by now that there have been some changes within the group, but for the unenlightened: guitarist Bob Johnson and fiddler Peter Knight both left earlier this year, to be replaced by one new member, John Kirkpatrick, and the return of an old one, Martin Carthy. The new Steeleye is doing fine, having played some successful concerts in England and premiering some new material which should make their next album an essential one. But while we're waiting, we've been provided with these twonew releases from past and present Spanners.

Silly Sisters is the earlier of the two albums, having been available as an import nearly a year before its American release this summer. Both the album and the brief British tour which followed it were the result of a collaboration between Maddy Prior, Steeleye's vocalist, and June Tabor, a traditional singer who'd spent the past few years performing in folk clubs. This is a purely traditionalalbum, with the songs ranging from hymns to bawdy ballads to tearful tales of lost love. The instumentation is all acoustic and forms a simple and sensative accompaniment, but, predictably, it's the vocals that steal the show. Maddy's voice is as regal and ethereal as ever, while June's is deeper and more earthy, and the interweaving of these two voices is often quite exquisite.

The King of Elfland's Daughter is the album that Knight and Johnson left Steeleye to make. It's an elaborate musical fantasy, complete with narration and an assortment of singers to handle the various roles. The songs cover a variety of styles, but the instrumentation is usually second to the narrative thread. Knight's superb fiddling appears on only one track, and more often a sort of orchestral-rock sound is used to suit the various characters. How much you'll appreciate the album will probably depend on how well you enjoy hearing such tales of elves, trolls, and enchanted princesses. Two memorable moments are Alexis Korner's humorous portrayal of a troll who howls the blues as he rolls into elfland, and Mary Hopkin's performance of "Beyond the Fields We Know," an anthem to discovery and imagination. And you'll be glad to know that everyone involved lives happily ever after.

SLY, SLICK AND WICKED
Ju-Par (Motown)

A lot of people have asked, 'What's happendd to the MotownSound?' Well, that topic is too lengthy to be covered in this review, but, in short, the Motown Sound has been moved to the westcoast, electrically rendered by the T-Connection, left by Norman Whitfeild, produced and arranged by 'The Harris Machine' and sugared and spiced by Shalamar. But, ladies and gentlemen, the 'Motown Sound' and its various influences are still with us.

The most 'Motownish' thing that Motown itself has released of late (through their custon label, Ju-Par) is an LP entitled Sly, Slick & Wicked a three man vocal group. It's all there from the strong leads and tight harmonies to the instrumentation that, while impressive, yields to the talents of the vocalists who in the true Motown tradition are the focal point. Sly, Slick & Wicked is an excercise in the 'Motor City' sound that's both faithfully nostalgic and refreshingly new. One listen and you'll see that the 'Motown Sound' is still alive and well.

THE STORY OF THE PIED PIPERS-A MYTH
HE REALLY WAS A BRILLIANT PUPPETEER
by Zusaan South

Imagine the universe inside an ant farm. We unconciously go about our affairs with a purposeful air. The tunnels in an ant farm are preserved by covering the glass with black paper. No light comes through, giving the ant a feeling of continuity and safety. When we lift the barrier we are faced with a narrow maze of neat tunnels and hallways. Our domestic ant frantic/scurries in the deeper regions. We are fascinated by the strange symmetry of their hallways odd angles are formed by the intersection of parallel lines shapes drawn by multi level study always delightful with the magnetic patterns. In order to preserve this occasional treat we always replace the black paper, or the ant will abandon the exposed tunnels. Fallen into disuse, they eventually crumble and collapse depriving us of architectural masterpiece. Day is fading.

Let's say we'll look at the ants again another day and go out for a walk in the dusk. The pale cast on the southern horizon shadows the clean grayness of daysend. The crickets churn out the broken staccatto that we rarely hear, preferring instead to let it sift into our unconciousness. The sound of our boots on the roadway is harder to ignore as the dull scrape traces our passage. There is a kind of womb-ness to the dusk. A warm invisible mist seems to wrap us in soft breathing blankets and our minds drift in reverie through places we'll never be able to remember. Vague images of an old man in China, gold leaf design, and metallic glow flash and fragment and hide beneath your monologue. One by one, as the sky blackens, the stars intensify. Each one strikes us with a separate and peculiar emotion. When we stare intently at one star, it dances around, as if uncomfortable at being pinned by gaze. Finally it slips away, flickers a few times, and recedes, just as our ant in his glass and sand universe disappeared into his interior cities. The stars are lit with unearthy brilliance. They seem to swarm on the periphery, swimming at the corners of our sight. We talk to ourselves the whole while. Without speaking we discuss with ourselves the whole of our lives. Turning your head, you fix your gaze again. Again a star quivers, trembles with anxiety, fades and recedes. Over there. Look. The constellation of the Plieades. The picture of the Seven Sisters. The youngest was gifted with the name of Maia. No-one remembers her now. She pleads with her radium song for you. Listen. That chill and slow melody. You must hear it with your sight for it's out of range of your ears. Listen. That thin and sad sound, it mutates, repeats, disturbs your sense of quietude with cold insistance. She sings her story ......born in the blackness of a forest with no mother with no father she drifted naked and slight through violet shadows and haze..."I am the last of an extinct race that has evolved to another place living in sighs and secret whispers"...Alone she nervously watched all directions, grew eyes on all parts of her body. The birds were fascinated by this glittering blinking creature.

The raven desired her........The song is a keening silent screaming harmony penetrating to the center of your every cell.

The ant colony is one complete organism, aware of its own existance. Each ant is but a single cell with it's own special function. The tunnels are like the veins and arteries of the human circulatory system. Each red corpuscle and white cell is a worker ant, carrying food and banishing the intrusive alien elements. The ant has no needs of its own, existing for the colony. The organism is a living pulsing unit of survival. The colony is happy in its fullness. Satisfied and sated in it's busy cellular motion.

The stars have grown so bright as to be frightening......"I was cold I was alone I hid in the shadows they could not find me I slip through in smoke the raven desired me a talon pierced my thigh I see everything......" You hug yourself, wrap your arms tightly across our chest, you retire to the muted yellow light of your room. You find safety in the golden warmth of the patterns on your walls. You brew some spice tea and find comfort in a soft chair. You look to the window, and beyond, to the layers of midnight ink. An ant crawls mechanically along the sill. The paper is on the other side. Star chorus sifts through the spaces visible between tree branches. Ants can drag 10 times their own weight and grasp an object with hard-clasp mandibles. You sip your tea and your hand trembles, spilling tea pale liquid into the saucer. The word "ant" leaps out at you making no sense. The twistng antennae symbols have lost their meaning. From the depths of amnesia you remember the resigned terror once felt in a dream.

Gun-metal gray airships hovered in formation over the meadow. Day was fading. Dull glint from the silent cruising fleet. Cold menace. You forgot your purpose. I pointed to the sky and said, "It doesn't matter now, I am with you."

The saucers have landed and the airfield isn't your neighbor's backyard or a verdant woodland glade. A sage in a Chinese garden complete with carefully set out pools and goldfish was wearing a mandala pattern robe. His two disciples sat at his feet, one at each side. The ants dragged heavy loads through the greenery. Multivision scanned complete circumferance from a shadow. The sage spoke, "The landing field is your own central nervous system." Imagine your cerebral cortex is inhabited.

Imagine symbiotic parasitic relations. Fat white baby ant slug hides in the inner chambers. Suppose that even now, as you read this, the puppeteer is carefully monitoring your vision, your reactions, your hormonal secretions and the muscles tensing in your shoulder and jaw. A chill of raised flesh flows down your back. The light seems to bright, doesn't it? Your friends are suddenly strange, distant, do you understand them? Do you? Do they know you? If they do, then they know me for I control your every move. When I smile, you smile. When I cry, so do you. Is it really you who decides when to eat, drink, and sleep? Why do you do all those things that you don't want to? Those odd little motions that confuse you. Where do they originate? How do the stars sound? What melodies do constellations generate? Imagine the universe inside an ant dragging a talon-pierced shadow through a blue dusk country of dwarfed stylized trees, shining twisted pieces of metal, inaudible music, and goldfish swimming mandala.

"Bitter Days"

I wandered into the depths of loneliness, surrounded by images that remain unnamed.
I am walking through a fantasy, hoping that reality is not too far in the distance.
I once discovered who I was, and a special glow, helped put my mind at ease.
Now, it is as if I never tried at all.

I long to touch the tenderness of friendship the warmth of someones smile.
I have become afraid to risk, to seek out.
for sparks fly out at me, as I do.

I have become buried in my lonely journey, wondering, and hoping for a hint of warmth to ease my self image.

I have not given up, I was once much too strong,
to let the winds turn me into ashes.
I plan to take my dusty shoulders by a raging fire-- and help that glow return to me.
So once again, I will feel special to be me.

You gave me the ribbons of life and tied them into a bow of happiness

We sailed on the stream of love

A FATAL WILL TO POWER
Aguirre, The Wrath of God
a film by Werner Herzog
starring Klaus Kinsi
German in English Subtitles

After pillaging and claiming for the Spanish crown other beautiful and exotic terrain in the Americas, Pizarro led his army into the Amazon basin in search of the legendary El Dorado. There he sent an exploration party ahead to travel up one of the Amazon tributaries. Along with Don Pedro de Ursua and Don Lope de Aguirre, the leaders of those conquistadors of the expeditionPizarro sent the priest whose diary is purpotedlythe source of the story.

Various problems ensue resigning Don Pedro to return to Pizarro's encampment. Upon this announcement de Aguirre mutinies shooting his leader and any others set against him. As the raft moves further down the river, Aguirre's sense of power increases. The party also becomes more weakened with various attacks from the natives on shore and problems of food. Still Aguirre's power forces the entire division to their deaths slowly and painfully.

Werner Herzog masterfully relates this horrific story leaving none of its agonizing detail out. It is a film of powerful beauty as well; the ethereal quality exhibited in the opening scene as the army of conquistadors cling to the side of a mountain in the Andes, slowly descending along their forward course, is beautiful in all its mist- shrouded silence. Filmed on location, the elements of that climate are paradoxical in themselves leaving even our modern imaginations at their mercy.

From this general sense of scene to a more particularized, more objective viewpoint, Herzog films the journey in unbearable yet beautiful detail.His close-up shots dominate the film with their remarkable candor. Slowly we watch de Aguirre's crazed desire for power mutiply with each shortfall that overtakes his companions. He takes command,claims all territory for himself, and as the only survivor in the final scene, hallucinates that he will form a more perfect race. The workings of his mad mind are demonstrated fiendishly slowly as the quietness of this deformed men (resembling Oliver's Richard III very much in his style) ascends to insufferable rage and power-crazed obsession. The madman has come fully into view although we watched closely at all times. His transitions are perfectly filmed and so smoothly as to be virtually indiscernable in their forms. Truly it is the case of the madman always being there and our finally realizing it as more information is graphically handed to us.

The diary from which the story of the quest is told is also the product of Werner Herzog and serves its purposefor the greater part of the film, until one of the men,in a fit of fever, drinks the priest's ink mistaking it for medicine. From that point on, the film enters a visionary and nightmarish conclusion where the audience watchesthe entire remaining crew suffer through fever and hallucinations until they are no longer living. Alone, and still deluded into thinking he is greater than God, Aguirre is consumed by the wildness of the land he was determined to possess. Wild monkeys envelop his raft and cover the corpses strewn around as the picture ends.

The devastating effect of this film is creatively exploited to its possible limits by this stunning director's techniques. With all his visual artistry in check, Herzog confidently cuts his scenes and lays them together in manners echoing his themes. The exposure to the wilderness is beautifully contrasted with the protagonist's obsessionto continue and conquer. His objective camera documents the entire film in such a way as to leave its audience with no questions as to what such a scene could have meant. The film is clear, trancedent and breathtaking. That Herzog has a relish for the peculiar is clearly evidenced here as in his other films, this freshness is welcomed from German cinema and there is much to this man that the serious film artist and student will want to know.

Concert Review-Interview
Aztec Two Step The Hatch
9/27/77 by Janie Portnoy

Rex Fowler and Neal Shulman, better known as Aztec Two-Step,performed in the Hatch Tuesday night. Prior to their performance, I had the pleasure of joining them for dinner at the Top of the Campus restaurant. At the table were pianist Gordon Cohen, Michael Finkelstein,(drummer),David Gross (bass), and David Sleight (electric guitar). The interview went rather well, although much of the talk, was about David Gross' burnt steak.

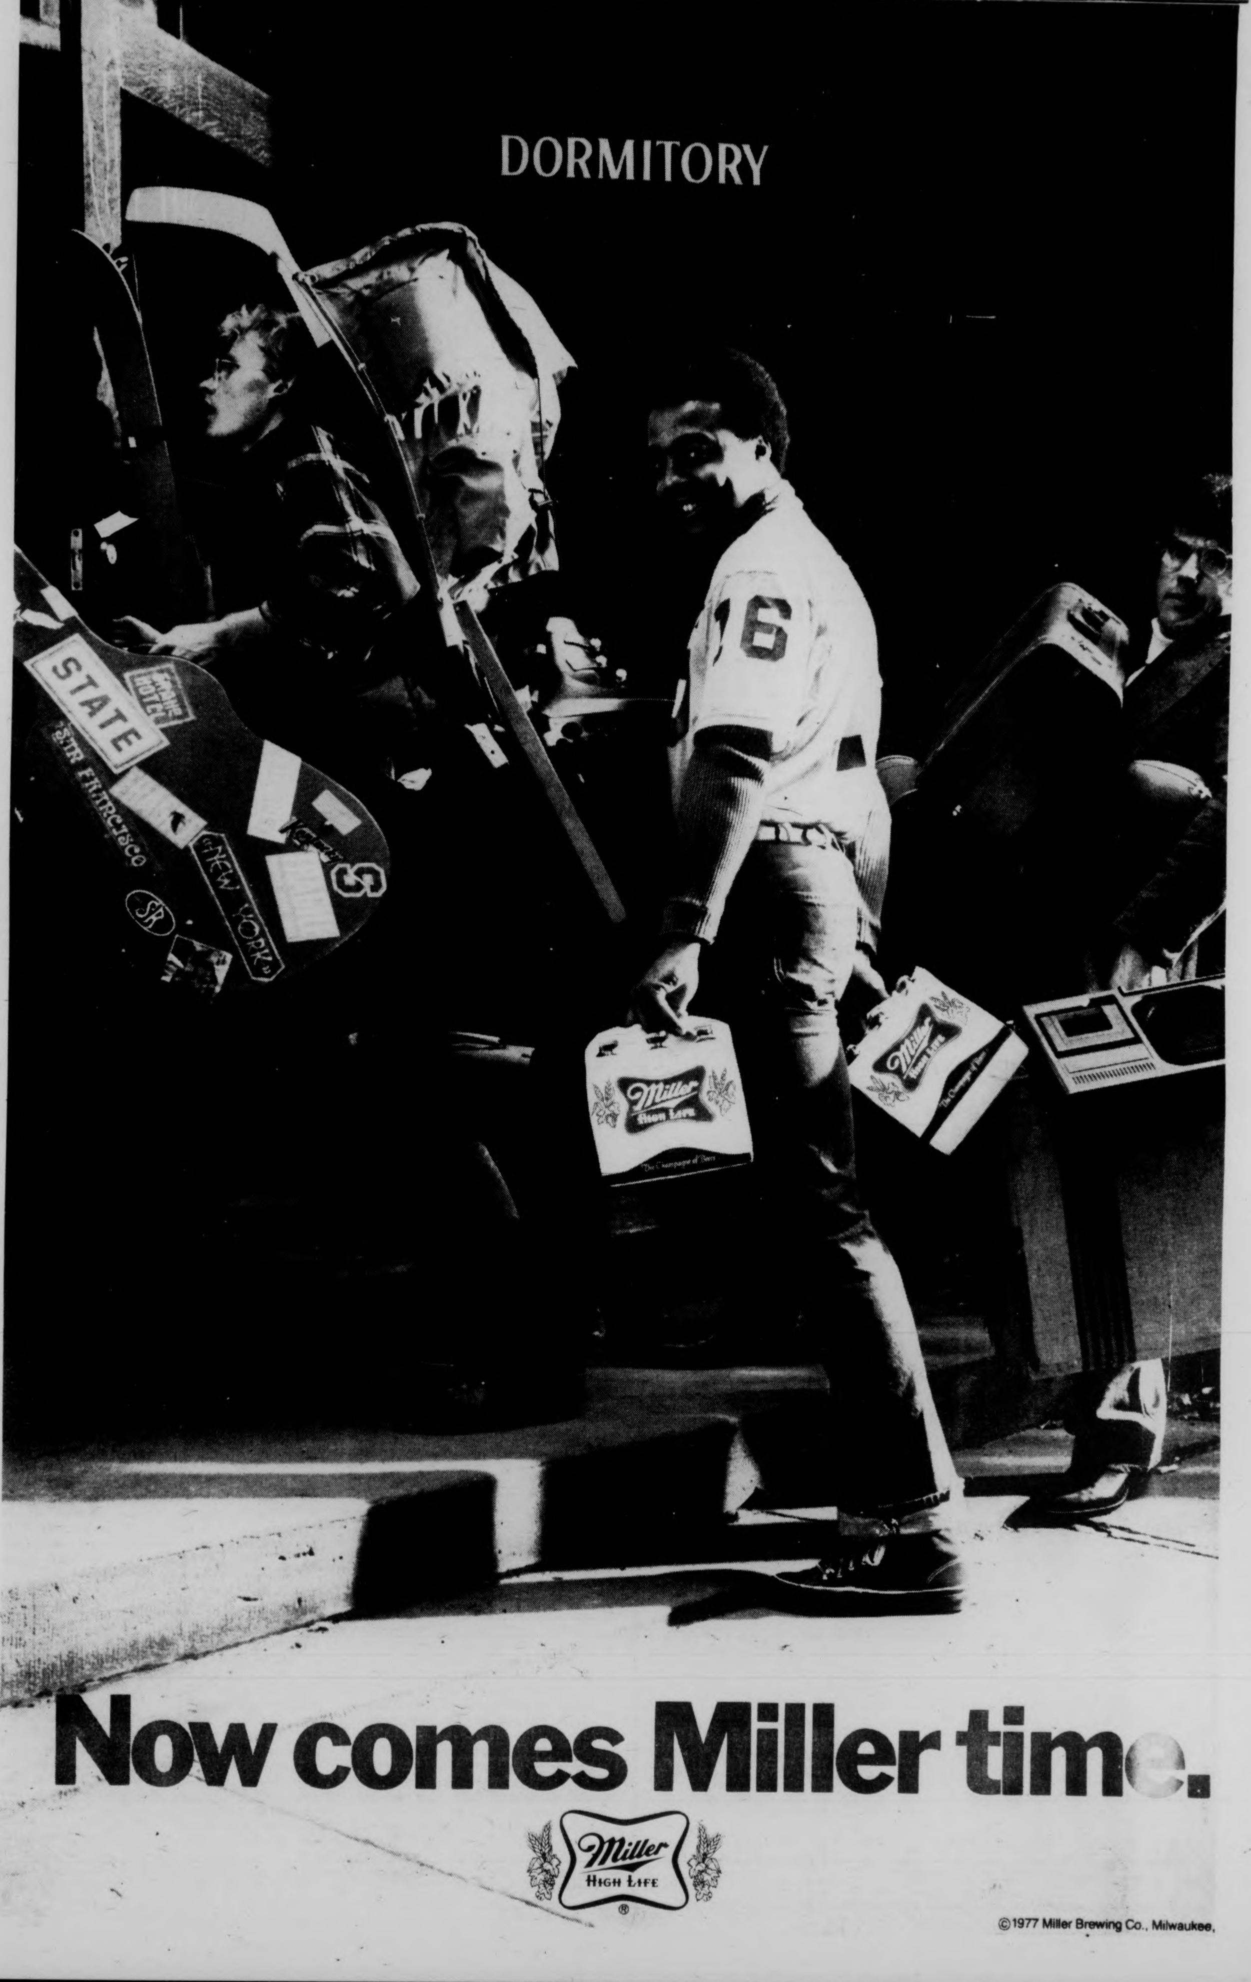
Rex Fowler is as easy going and happy off- stage as he is on. When asked what he thought of UMASS he replied,'It looks like a complex of condominiums." As for playing in the Hatch, "It irks me to play in a cafetaria." That was the general feeling of the men in the band. They felt the acoustics were poor in the Hatch. I wondered what kind of crowd Rex enjoyed performing for. Going along with the theme of most of their songs, he said,"a loving crowd." Does he ever think of doing anything different with his life? "Sure. All the time. The grass is always greener... you know." I knew, but decided to ask Neal how he felt, as well.

He swallowed his scallops and replied, " There's nothing else I'd rather be doing." After discussing his age(almost 25) Neal reflected upon his reply. "The Beatles didn't want to be Beatles when they were thirty. But, look what happened. You never know." The Beatles were a big influence on Neal's outlook on music, as were Bob Dylan and Phil Ochs. Neal likes an audience who "listens to mellow things, but boogies. I don't want to have to respond to the audience. It's the other way around." Neal is big on acoustic music, but also enjoys doing rock, funk and jazz with the band. " The band has been a big influence. Everyone is different with different habits." He thinks UMASS is a "nice place ,"but prefers small concerts halls to places like the Hatch. Rex Fowler and Neal Shulman met in Boston about six years ago. Unsuccessful at making it on their own, they decided to become a team. Their name Aztec Two-Step was derived from a poem by Lawrence Ferlinghetti(on their 1972 album"Aztec Two-Step"). One year ago, the men in the band you saw Tuesday night were added.

The performance exemplified hard work and preparation. The band was so tight, it was difficult to believe how shortly they've been together. The harmonious quality Aztec Two-Step previously displayed was accentuated by the talent of the other men in the band. As "Baking" began, the crowd roared. Hands clapped, feet stomped; everyone was high and smiling. Other favorites like "Conversation in a Car" and new songs such as "Pajama Party" and "You and I" provided a soft, easy atmosphere, as everyone samk into their chairs to soak it all in.

The outstanding quality of Aztec Two-Step's performance was unity. The band was so together that the audience was drawn into a series of rising and falling emotions; the actual climax occuring with "Cosmos Lady". A standing ovation ensued with "Prisoner" and "Dean Moriarty". It was a good night for Aztec Two-Step despite the poor acoustics in the Hatch.

I later apologized to Rex Fowler for taking a picture of him during dinner. "Hey, he said , You don't have to apologize.You've got to be ballsy. It's the way to get your job done." He buttered his bread and grinned. I guess that's show business.



Now comes Miller time.

CABARET BRECHT OPENS THE NEW DOORS FOR CITY STUDIO THEATRE

by TONY SHEPERD

As City Studio Theatre celebrates its first birthday, it moves into a new theatre space at 49 Pearl Steet in Northampton. According to Directors Mark Cuddy and Margaret Van Sant, CST will open its season with CABARET BRECHT: TO SEE US FROM THE GROUND UP.

CABARET BRECHT is from the works of Bertolt Brecht, adapted and arranged by Johnstone Campbell and Erin Williams. Campbell is a professor in the Inquiry Program at UMass , teaching Dramatic Literature, and Williams is a UMass student, majoring in Radical Theatre studies.

"CABARET BRECHT is intended to de-emphasize the presonality of Brecht, and focus on his material." It examines how he looks at American culture and history," Ms.Williams said Saturday. "We've treid to pick pieces where Brecht utilized the American theatrical tradition," Mr. Campbell added.

CABARET BRECHT uses songs, scenes, and poems from THE THREEPENNY OPERA, THE CAUCASION CHALK CIRCLE, AND MAHAGONNY. It is an evening which looks at American culture and politics through vaudeville, lyric prose, personal poetry, amd music hall songs. It will be performed Thrursday through Saturday evenings at 8 pm, and Sunday afternoons at 2:15 pm. from September 29 thrugh October 23.

"The cabaret setting seems a natural because most of Brecht's work touches upon the popular entertainment of the nightclub, miusic hall or cabaret in one way or another," Mr. Campbell went on to say. "Our purpose is to direct the audience'sattention toward its culture and the society of which it is a part."

"The script is a medley , but we have tried to build it around two interconnected progreessions: Brecht's theatrical-political development and his increasingly complex attitude toward his use of American culture," Ms. Williams said.

Mark Cuddy, the director of CABARET BRECHT, added to Erin Williams comments: "Brecht's early work was forceful but often contradictory whereas his later work was more pinpointed and refined."

Mr. Cuddy is also the Managing Director of City Sutdio Theatre, a position he has held since January of 1977. He also directed the play, CHICAGO, for CST, as well as the critically acclaimed LENNY. Cuddy also played one of the two leading roles in VOLUNTEERS, an American premiere that will play Off Broadway in December. Cuddy came to CST in the Fall of 1976 as a director, and assumed his present position a few months later.

"One of the most impressive things to me," Mr. Cuddy went on to say, "was the collaboration that has taken place during the preparation of CABARET BRECHT. The group effort has really made it work. Without this cooperation, it wouldn't have happened."

CABARET BRECHT: TO SEE US FROM THE GROUND UP is the first of four main season productions that CST will offer this year. Following CABARET BRECHT will be THE LAST MEETING OF THE KNIGHTS OF THE WHITE MAGNOLIA , by Preston Jones, directed by CST's producing Director Margaret Van Sant. The third slot will be a musical, yet to be announced, also to be directed by Ms. Van Sant. The final production of the season will be THE HOUND OF THE BASKERVILLES, by F. Andres Leslie, from the story by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, , directed by Mark Cuddy.

City Studio Theatre will also offer its first New Plays Festival this winter, where local playwrights will have their previously unproduced work presented for the first time. CABARET BRECHT will also be repeated later this season in a late night cabaret setting.

Sol Lewitt
Graphics and Sculpture
University Gallery

A sampling of works by a well known and controversial artist is currently on display at the 'University Gallery through Oct. 7. Sol Lewitt, the featured artist, is well known for his graphic and sculptural works which are considered to be minimal art by definition. Minimal art deals with the reduction of forms to very basic, simplified elements such as straight lines, angles, or geometric shapes which are monochromatic in color. With this in mind, it becomes somewhat easier to understand what Lewitt had in mind when he created these works.

Lewitt is concerned also with deductive reasoning and schematic planning in this very rational, calculated system. He deals, most consistently, with cube forms which exist in this show as a series of unfinished 8 inch wooden squares which have been painted white. These squares represent all the possible permutations of an open-ended cube ranging from 3 to 11 sides. The sum total of these permutations represents approximately 122 combinations. Accompanying these cube forms are a combination of drawings and photographs representing each cube at the "drawing board" stage and as each appears in its finished state.

In keeping with the cube forms is a large scale sculpture which has been placed in the middle of the Fine Arts Center overlooking the reflecting pools. This sculpture measures 5' by 11' and is constructed of white metal which makes for an impressive sight when set against the gray of the surrounding building. This figure is open on every side and consists of 4 large squares on the top and bottom, 2 large squares for each of the sides. A spatial relationship is apparent when viewing this piece as the white square displaces the space around it, creating an effect of optical dynamics.

While Lewitt's work is not about color, he has become more involved in using color. A series of 60 lithographs have been created displaying straight, not straight and broken lines using all possible combinations of black, white, yellow, red and blue for lines and intervals. Here Lewitt serves to teach the viewer about color and line and the existing relationships in a way few of us have ever thought of before. Lewitt encourages the viewer to think, pondering what is possible and obvious, as well as the reasoning behind it. This reasoning is what makes this whole concept appear new and innovatives.

Color has also been introduced in a series of color grid systems which illustrate the relationship between line and color. these grid systems range from a series of very basic straight or curving lines set against a solid ground of red, yellow or blue, to a more complicated latticework of colored lines utilizing all of the surrounding spaces. Again, the emphasis is on the interaction between line and color and the many continuous possibilities that exist in this ordered spectrum. In some respects this classifies Lewitt as a conceptual artist as he is involved with science and technology in the creation of a sophisticated communication system.

In a systematic retreat from color interplays are Lewitt's large scale chalk drawings which appear along one wall at the University Gallery. These drawings exist as 6 different geometric forms ranging from a circle to a trapezoidal shape. The importance of these figures is derived from the ability to apply an open system to a specific and literal space, squating drawing with the act of measurement. No one form assumes more importance over the others; this becomes apparent when the forms are superimposed on the flat wall surface.

As a minimal artist Sol Lewitt acknowledges lines and minimal forms as a linguistic basis for art. He employs this language in flexible grammar which is varied whole still remaining consistent. In this respect, Lewitt's art exists a language created by the artist, with a message which can be appreciated by the wiewer.

This exhibition is on display at the University Gallery which is located in the Fine Arts Center. Gallery hours are Tuesday 11:30-8, Wednesday throggh Friday 11:30-4'30, Saturday and Sunday 2-5.

DNA research may be conducted

By MARY WYATT
Collegian

UMass is currently in the middle of a controversy concerning experimentation with the DNA molecule.

DNA, the genetic component of life, is the material that carries the chromosomes necessary for hereditary information to be shaped in humans. The issue being debated is a process known as recombinant DNA research. According to Prof. Curtis Thane of the Microbiology Dept., this procedure consists of splitting and recombining the DNA molecule in the laboratory. Not occurring in nature, this process can lead to scientific advancements in the fields of antibiotic and cancer research.

Marvin Kalkstein, a University Without Walls coordinator, believes the decision to allow DNA research at UMass should not be made by the university alone, but rather in conjunction with the townspeople of Amherst.

"The creation of a new organism by tampering with the evolutionary development may create a new ecological problem. Safeguards are built in nature to prevent catastrophic organisms from developing. There is always the potential of disrupting that balance," Kalkstein said.

"Of course, I think the idea of a genetic 'monster' is a minor issue. I can't rule out the possibility; to some degree anything is possible. However, this tends to sensationalize the issue," he added.

Professor Robert Mortlock, Chairman of the Microbiology Department said, "The DNA issue is starting to be looked into more rationally. Scientists have begun to look at their work more carefully. Recombinant DNA is probably not as dangerous as one might expect, although a great deal of precaution must be taken."

"Looking at the situation carefully, I do not think we are unleashing a Pandora's box. We are following a cautious progress," he added.

Kalkstein said, "The development of this new technology, significant to the biological sciences, is an early enough stage so that the townspeople can have a say in the matter. I believe the issues involved are not so radical that the public cannot understand them. We want to inform the public so a group of lay people will be able to deal with the extremely complex study and be able to make recommendations."

Prof. Thorne explained the methods of recombinant DNA. "It is a sophisticated research that involves taking genes from one source and putting them into chromosones of a different organism," he said. "The chromosomes are split into similar pieces which carry genes and are put back together outside the organism. In many cases, the genes function as well exposed as they did in their original habitat."

Thorne added, "I can't speak for the university, but I think that DNA research should happen here since it is such a useful tool to be used in many areas of genetic research."

But the matter is under nationwide debate. The National Institute of Health has set up guidelines to be followed by those DNA researchers funded by federal grants. There are now bills before both houses of Congress to make the NIH guidelines mandatory for all DNA recombinant research.

Thorne said, "The NIH has worked very hard and dealt with a lot of informed people on writing up guidelines dealing with safety. Only certain organisms are allowed for experimentation and only laboratories furnished with safety equipment can be used. Great precautions have been taken and need to be taken to prevent the recombinant DNA from getting out of the lab."

"If the experimentation is done at the university, there must be a Biohazards Committee. It is a prerequisite before the NIH will allow research to be done. The board will probably be made up of professors, scientists and townspeople," he added.

Kalkstein said, "Aside from the NIH regulations, there are standard laboratory safety procedures to accompany research of any kind. Other issues besides safety must be taken into consideration. There are social and ethical matters to be seriously looked at. For instance, gene implantation and genetic engineering are grave moral issues," he said.

Thorne said, "in my opinion it is no different than handling infectious organisms which have been experimented with for years with very few accidents. You can imagine where we would be without this kind of bacterial research today and where we will be tomorrow if genetic research is not carried on," he said.

Equipment funding questioned

By MEGAN O'REILLY

Botany professor Otto Stein yesterday at the Faculty Senate meeting questioned university administrators about the whereabouts of funding for scientific equipment in this year's budget.

The senate also held committee elections and discussed vehicle parking problems for some faculty during its afternoon bimonthly meeting.

The depleted amount of funds for scientific laboratory equipment, supposedly a top priority in the 1978 fiscal year budget, prompted Stein to question Provost and Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs Paul Puryear and Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery about a transfer of $140,000 from program support accounts to faculty staffing.

Bromery replied that faculty staffing was a top priority as indicated by Seymour Shapiro, dean of the School of National Sciences and Mathematics.

Bromery said the staffing used up all the L. Puryear and Chancellor Randolph W.

"However, there may be some money for equipment if we get the full two million dollars in capital outlay we requested," Bromery said.

For the first time in three years, the senate's Program and Budget Council was not asked to go over the budget with the university administration, according to council chairperson Harvey Kline.

"Consequently," Kline said, "I have to run around and get all the information I needed from the deans."

"What is the need for a faculty senate if you don't ask the faculty what their needs are," said Stein.

Sociology Professor David Yaukey was elected chairperson of the senate Rules Committee, composed of newly elected members Harvey Kline and George Chametzky and incumbant Sidney Sufrin.

Alice Freedman and Paul Mankin were elected associate delegates to the UMass Board of Trustees

The faculty continues to be plagued by parking problems as riders in faculty carpools cannot be delivered to their buildings without parking stickers.

"There are too many people who would take advantage of the situation if it were not controlled," said Vice-Chancellor of Administration and Finances James L. McBee.

"The bad outnumber the good five to one."

"The lack of cooperation on parking matters leaves a bad taste in my mouth," said Psychology Professor Sheldon Cashdan "we weren't asked if we'd mind parking meters or the other inconveniences in parking," he said.

Gov. will open economic talks

By DEBORAH EDWARDS
Collegian Staff

Governor Michael S. Dukakis will speak at the dedication ceremony of the University Center for Economic Development, Monday, 10:30 a.m. in the Campus Center.

Other speakers will include an aide of Senator Edward Brooke, Congressman Michael J. Harrington, UMass President Robert C. Wood, UMass Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, State Sen. John Olver, and State Rep. James Collins.

The Center will offer technical assistance in economics to businesses, communities and individuals throughout the state. As part of the Community Renewal Studies Program at the UMass Institute for Man and Environment, the center will also work on the problem of venture capital and the need for overall economic planning by local communities, and help to develop job opportunities in areas of high unemployment.

The new center is backed by a $100,000 grant from the U.S. Department of Commerce Economic Development Administration, as a result of a proposal by the Chairman of the Executive Committee of the new center, Ray Werbe.

The assistance will be offered as a public service at no cost but will not replace the services of private practitioners, Werbe said.

"Our primary role will be to help identify problems, help identify solutions and offer direction to whatever professional assistance is needed," he said.

Center policy will be guided by a seven-person Executive Committee under Werbe's chairmanship. Committee members will include the director of the Institute for Governmental Services, the dean of the School of Business and officers from two state agencies: the secretary of the Executive Office of Communities and Development and the director of the Office of State Planning.

"The work we'll be doing will involve government, business and the State university in a way that will have a multiple impact," Werbe said.

He added that the $100,000 grant covers one year with strong possibilities for annual renewal. The University Center for Economic Development will operate in cooperation with ongoing programs of the Center for Community Renewal Studies. The latter center is involved or has recently have involved in community development projects some 15 areas all over the Commonwealth, including Ayer, Buckland-Shelburne, Fitchburg, Greenfield, Lowell, Melrose, Peabody, Revere and Taunton.

Dukakis will also speak at the Western Reginal Solar Energy Conference at 9:30 a.m. in the Campus Center. Topics of the conference include the need for training professionals, and informing customers regarding heating costs, installation guidelines and local building codes.

Inquiry begun on Hampshire cross-burning

By BETH SEGERS
Collegian Staff

The Hampshire College president yesterday appointed a social science professor to head an inquiry into last weekend's cross burning outside a Third World party.

President Adelle Smith Simmons told 300 persons crowded in a campus dining commons, that Frank Holmquist will chair a committee to study the weekend incident and "any other incidents of racism which have or may occur."

Simmons last night told the Collegian she has not yet named the entire committee but said it will consist of faculty and students of the Hampshire College community.

Holmquist could not be reached for comment last night.

Members of the Third World community contacted last night by the Collegian expressed "mixed feelings" over the Simmons' speech and declined to give further comment.

The Hampshire controversy centers around the burning of a cross outside a Third World social gathering held Saturday night.

Simmons addressed the college members in a 20 minute prepared speech and then left immediately. Simmons last night said several people told her they wish there had been opportunity for discussion after her talk.

"In retrospect, I wish we had set up smaller discussion groups on various parts of the campus to discuss my talk," Simmons said. The president added that some students had gathered together on their own after the campus meeting to air their views among themselves.

The investigative committee set up by Simmons was requested earlier yesterday in a resolution released by the Hampshire College faculty. The statement identified the aim of the committee as "producing concrete policies and guidelines guarding against the repetition of similar or less obvious every day racist episodes in the future."

Simmons said further committee appointments will be made by the beginning of next week. She said the Hampshire College community has reacted to the cross burning incident "with one voice ... members of the white and black communities have met separately and together to condemn it."

Citing the history of racism in the nation, Simmons said "it is no longer acceptable in our society to demonstrate overt and deliberate prejudice."

She said, "the incident that occurred at Hampshire was more typical of decades past than 1977."

5-college newspaper to bring people together

By KAREN PARMENTER
and JIM KASSNER
Collegian Staff

A new Five College newspaper debuts today hoping to "serve as a real vehicle for bringing the Five College community together."

According to Executive Editor Jan Thaw, the bi-monthly newspaper will be distributed to over 30,000 students at each of the five colleges in the Pioneer Valley.

"I've lived in the Pioneer Valley for four years," Thaw said, "and it's a really great place to go to school. We'd like to open the valley up to more college students," she said.

Thaw, a "fourth-year" student at Smith College, along with David Zatzkis and Lindsey Gruson of Hampshire College, began organizing the newspaper last spring.

"We tried to get school support and funding," Thaw said, "but we couldn't get it probably because we either went through the wrong channels, or we were too late." As a result, she said, the project "fell flat."

"In June, we started again, and went full scale, Thaw said, and enough money was raised through contributions and advertising to finance the first 20 page issue.

The paper will contain a full-length calendar section with an emphasis on the arts, and other features concerning the Five-College area.

"The Pioneer Valley is so packed with people forming the new ideas of the decade," Thaw said. "We really wanted to capitalize on this."

According to Thaw, local businesses have been "most interested and cooperative" in helping to share the future of Fresh Ink.

"Our efforts seemed to have paid off," Thaw said, "but what will really break us or make us is whether people like us or not," Thaw said.

Thaw said the tabloid will expand to possibly 24 pages by the next issue.

"But if there is enough interest, we can go to as large as we want," she said.

But according to Thaw, the paper has encountered some problems attracting UMass students.

"We're very interested in UMass students," Thaw said, "and we'd love to have them work with us in distribution, advertising, layout, or anything else."

Try yoga to kick a habit

By NANCY CALLAHAN
Collegian Staff

Have you been searching for a way to "kick those habits" that are driving you insane? Yoga may be what you've been looking for.

Diane Flaherty holds classes three times a week in "Hatha Yoga" and "Maternity Yoga" at the Amherst Ballet Center where she rents studio space.

Flaherty, who also teaches yoga in the Physical Education Department at Amherst College, has been certified to teach for four years and has had her classes approved by the Pioneer Valley Childbirth Education Association and several area doctors.

The classes will run eight weeks. "Beginners Intermediate Yoga", Tuesdays at 8 p.m., starts Sept. 27 and "Beginners Yoga" also at 8 p.m., starts Thursday, Sept. 29.

"Maternity Yoga" will be held Tuesday mornings at 10 a.m. and will begin when Flaherty has enough women enrolled. There will be a $20 fee per course.

Flaherty says she offers her courses independently because her philosophy of living is to keep her costs as low as possible.

Flaherty says yoga is a non-competitive form of exercise involving relaxation of the body muscles through breathing techniques and stretching. Yoga is a private time, Flaherty says, to get in touch with one's inner self.

Flaherty says yoga is beneficial because one becomes patient with the body. The gentle feelings attained from the exercises carry over into other aspects of life, she said.

Maternity Yoga is designed to help pregnant women feel good about themselves and the changing shape of their bodies, said Flaherty. She also said yoga exercises will help ease labor by strengthening abdominal and back muscles involved in delivery. Yoga is especially relaxing for women who are house bound because it helps speed up recovery.

She said Maternity Yoga was not to be confused with the Lamaze technique of natural childbirth which educates women for the physical processes involved in actual labor and delivery.

Reference center on nuclear power opens

By MICHELE JOSEPH
Collegian Staff

Northeast Utilities has opened a Nuclear Power Reference Center at their Amherst office located at 237 Triangle Street. A reception was held Wednesday Sept. 28 from 3:00-5:30 p.m. for community and academic leaders and the general public. Robert L. Klein, Amherst District Manager, said the center was opened in Amherst because "this is an area where many questions are raised about nuclear power."

The center, open weekdays from 8:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. is set up to serve anyone with concerns about nuclear power. Klein stressed that students in particular should utilize the center, whether or not they have a specific concern, or for classes. Information in the center could be used for speech classes, science, or current events.

The center is basically a library, Klein said. Much of the material may be taken home. There are 20 position papers put out by the Montague Nuclear Project Information Center and pamphlets concerning Northeast Utilities in general, and other projects are also available. For example, pamphlets on research projects, energy conservation, nuclear safety, power plants, and specific reports are available to consumers. The Montague Nuclear Power Station license application and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission final environmental statement will be open for public inspection. There are also many detailed books which could be particularly useful for students writing reports.

A great deal of the information is biased, which is to be expected since there are public debates about Northeast Utilities opening the Montague Nuclear Power Station, Klein said. However, much objective and critical literature is available. Representatives will be at the center to talk to visitors and the center someday hopes to show films and slides to small groups. In addition, a film lending library is available with films that are not readily accessible elsewhere. A list of films provided by Northeast Utilities is available at the center.

The main goal of the center is to provide factual data to students and the public so that they can understand and judge the nuclear power issues, according to material obtained at the center.

Outfront, CC administration far apart on suit

By JERRY ROGERS
Collegian Staff

Staff members of Outfront, a monthly UMass student newspaper, face upper level University and Campus Center employees in a $1000 suit that both sides feel could have been avoided.

The action, filed Tuesday in Hampshire County District Court by student Legal Services Office attorney Jim Starr, involves the alleged removal of Outfront files, reference materials and production materials from the Commuter Lounge sometime during last intersession and the subsequent discarding of them. Starr worked with attorney Michael Pill, co-chairperson of the Board of Governors to prepare the one page complaint, 16 plaintiffs' interrogatories and summonses filed.

The interrogatories request certain information from the defendants, and they must be answered by the defendants. The suit claims that responsibility for the discarded material lies with Dean of Students William F. Field, who was acting Campus Center director until last summer, Assistant Campus Center Director Bernard F. Wilkes, Jr., Manager of Campus Center Building Operations Dudley Bridges, Professional Technician Edward Kelly and any other Campus Center employees who may have been involved with the cleaning of the Commuter Lounge during Intersession.

The plaintiffs contend their material was thrown out by Campus Center employees who cleaned the Commuter Lounge during Intersession, even though it was tied in bundles or packed in boxes and obviously not refuse material.

Bridges said the plaintiffs were "so wrong ... it (the room) was just like trash". He said no "bad faith" was involved and claims his employees threw out only what was obviously trash.

In denying the plaintiffs claims that the material was neatly stored, Bridges said, "If I had something of value it would not be stored in that (strewn about) manner."

In an Outfront memo to Bridges last January, the plaintiffs requested a reimbursement of $500 which they contended was a "fair and proper resolution".

Bridges memo in reply pointed out the condition of the room when it was cleaned and claimed exterminators had to be called in. He denied any obligation to reimburse Outfront.

The University's insurance company also denied the liability of the insured employees and denied the claim for $500 made by Pill, acting for Outfront. Pill had become involved in the matter after it was discussed at a BOG committee meeting.

Last summer, Starr brought the matter to the attention of University attorney Sidney Myers, but no settlement was reached.

The Outfront claim had been upped to $1000 upon reassessment of losses.

Bridges feels the suit "should have, could have" been avoided with better storage of records by the plaintiffs.

Pill and James Jordan of Outfront indicated a willingness to negotiate but, Jordan claimed, the two face an "administrative stone wall".

Pill said he thought the suit also had to be filed as a matter of credibility, and Bridges admitted the existence of "tension".

RSO groups will not pay for office space

By DEBBIE GRAFF
Collegian Staff

Rising concern over whether or not Recognized Student Organization would be charged rental fees for occupied space in the Campus Center Complex by the Campus Center administration led co-chairperson Herb Tyson to make a proposal resolving the problem at last night's Board of Governers meeting.

The motion that all RSO groups or co-op organizations legitimately allocated space in the building by the BOG space committee will not be charged, assessed or taxed in any way by the building administration for the use of that space was passed unanimously by the board. This will assure that student organizations will have the right to use the space that all students are helping pay for with the Campus Center fee, according to board members.

Other motions passed by the board include BOG Finance Committee Chairperson John Foley's motion to allocate up to $200 for the purpose of hiring interpreters for the deaf at all Distinguished Visitors Program lectures and other public speeches held in the CC-Su complex, and Programming Committee Chairperson David Kantor's motion to limit the number of admission-charging films presented in the Campus Center to four a week in order to provide RSO groups with more time and space for alternative programming in the CC complex.

The BOG also looked into the problem facing fine art students. Because undergraduate student artists have no place to exhibit their works, the board has decided to set fall 1978 as the date for the conversion of the SU Art Gallery to a Student Art Gallery, where UMass undergraduates will have the opportunity to exhibit their artwork.

Grads send Kent St. letter

By RUTH McGORTY
Collegian Staff

In addition to committee elections, some important issues were dealt with at the Graduate Student Senate meeting Monday night, according to Senate President Sally Rees.

Passed at the meeting, was a motion which would send a letter to the President of Kent State University from the Graduate Student Senate, Rees said.

It stated, "The Graduate Student Senate of the University of Massachusetts urges you to reconsider your decision to proceed with the building of a gymnasium on the site where four students were slain during an antiwar demonstration. The memory of these students and those that were killed at Jackson State is part of our heritage.... To put an impediment in the way of history is to put an impediment in the way of progress."

Rees said it was also brought to the attention of the senate that graduate students with research assistant contracts were having problems receiving pay.

According to the minutes of Monday's meeting, "Sally checked with Dean Piedmont and found out the holdup was due to Provost Puryear's requesting departments to include a job description with the contract. Many departments did not do so and contracts were held up. She asked anyone having problems meeting the fee deadline (Oct. 7) to contact the senate office."

Another motion was passed according to the minutes, "recognizing 800 non-degree graduate students as a special constituency with rights of representation.

"The election committee will be handling details of how this election will take place. Any interested non-degree student should stop in at the senate office."

Rees said the senate will also elect people to the Advisory Committee on Collective Bargaining at the next Graduate Student Senate meeting on Oct. 5.

NEAG discusses union

By BRUCE KAYTON
Collegian Staff

The Northeast Area Government discussed a variety of topics ranging from student unionization to whether officers should wear green shirts at certain events at last night's Northeast Area Government meeting.

Four people representing the student unionization movement gave a talk and slide show on the unionization movement. They stressed, as they have in previous meetings that the student unionization movement will give the students power to voice their concerns over university policies.

Two centers, a Women's Center and a Third World Center, were allocated $100 each, in order to get off the ground. The centers will also receive $500 from the Northeast Sylvan area office.

Thatcher Dorm was given $82 to stage a coffee house on Nov. 6 for the entire Northeast area. There was some debate as to whether Thatcher should get the money from NEAG because no definite policy has been set up for the handling of coffee houses. However, the student representatives voted Thatcher the money, and agreed to have a meeting on coffee house policy next week. Hamlin will also be having a coffee house on Oct. 3 a 8 p.m. which is open to all Northeast residents.

The policy of obtaining liquor licenses for dorm parties was brought up, but not resolved. The extent to which the person signing the license, usually the Head of Residence, will be held liable is still in question.

Diane Lauricello, co-president of NEAG, praised everyone who helped in the Fall Day activities held Sunday. The activities cost $1700, but would have cost only $1300 if it had been held outside as planned.

During the Fall Day Activities, NEAG officers wore green shirts so that they could be easily noticed. Student Representatives were informed of this for the first time last night. The shirts cost a total of $17 and some student representatives wondered why they were being informed of it afterward. Other representatives asked why they could not wear green shirts, too. However, a vote was taken and it was agreed that the money would be allocated from the area government.

The prospect of having a Halloween function and a Fine Arts Festival will be discussed in the future.

Vets get organized

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

"Veterans are once again organizing on campus" was the feeling expressed at the Veterans Organization meeting Thursday in the Campus Center.

The purpose of the meeting was to give veterans a voice, by setting up an advisory group that deals with veterans and their problems.

Ron Corriveau, acting chairperson, said veterans need to be able to direct energies and programs that have to do with other veterans. Veterans should have a voice in how these programs are run according to Corriveau. Discussing plans with other administrative offices along with the Veterans Affairs office was another important goal.

Those veterans that did attend the meeting appeared enthusiastic but the turnout was disappointing. There are about 3000 veterans at UMass, and the group hopes to publicize more effectively so that more veterans will attend, and be represented.

To be the most effective, the advisory group will provide sources of information for veterans. Corriveau said the areas of information would be directed toward financial aid, employment, the job bank, tutors, the veterans lounge located in room 411 in the student union, and the garden plots for veterans. Some veterans do not know about many of these resources available to them, Corriveau said.

To make veterans feel they are a part of the administrative process is very important, Corriveau said "To have a place to channel complaints and form a cohesiveness between the different groups involved with veterans is a clear need," he said.

The Loan Fund, a special short term fund set up for veterans is almost out of money. Corriveau stated the importance of saving the fund because of the lack of financial sources available to veterans. Veterans are not eligible for work study, but do receive V.A. work-study benefits of $2.50 an hour with no provisions for increase. Very few veterans receive the Basic Education Opportunity Grant so the short term fund is an important assistance to them.

The meetings are open, and veterans are urged to go when they can, and look for notices on the time and place. The meetings will be once or twice a month.

The group plans on sending seven members every two weeks to talk with Art Hillson of the Veterans Affairs Office and inform him of their needs. There is also a plan to set up a table in the Campus Center with information that will help veterans. In addition, information for married veterans, as well as health information, food stamp and student-help loans will be coordinated at this table.

Until the next meeting, offices will be coordinated by the members that attended last night's meeting. Corriveau, now chairperson, said he does not want to "run the show". If the effort is put into the group and other veterans see the need to have their opinions count, then this group will really have an impact, Corriveau said.

In memory of Steve Biko

By JAMES LEWIS
Black Affairs Asst. Editor

The passing of Steve Biko indicates again the duty of us all to keep him living in our minds and in our hearts. Steve Biko is a great man. He will not be dismissed from us if we are the type of people who dislike the injustice in ourselves and in other people, and work to see the establishment of an equal, non-racist, non-sexist, non-sick society.

If we take a look at what he did and what he lived for, we know that we must see him, use what he left for us to hear, carry his ideas so far as we can agree, and maintain the standard of life and reality which will force our experience to deepen and challenge the evils of this society in our experience, until we are free from this insensitive sick lie, the lie that is chaining us with this false sense of being.

Steve Biko is cited as the founder of the Black consciousness movement in South Africa. He was killed while in a South African prison on September 13, 1977. The police department said he died as a result of a hunger strike. The medical examiner is not allowed to release the autopsy report. It has been stated by the examiner that he died because of severe brain damage; in other words, he was tortured to death.

Mr. James Kruger is Justice and Police minister in South Africa. He needs police and prisons. Kruger has immense power. He does not have to account for anything he does with maintaining control of Black people there. He would be the one largely responsible for Biko's death.

Biko taught Black people, students mainly, to have pride in themselves as Black people. He was working to receive his degree in law next year. He was arrested on August 11, and was never let out of prison.

Biko was the first president of the South African Student's Organization (SASO). He had been banished to a Black Township near King Williamstown. He was also president of the Black Peoples Convention (BPC). Before he left he said that BCP was determined not to allow "mental rape and mental oppression" to continue. He said that he wanted to encourage Black people to get the proper view of themselves and of the need to struggle. He expected the exact pattern of struggle to define itself within the next five years.

Biko believed that right now is the last opportunity for peaceful change, and that the majority will not accept separate development. He felt that whites must accept the honesty of the Black search for change and consent to deal with Black organization.

In the words of Biko, "I do not doubt the eventual outright racial conflict in South Africa. All we can do is minimize conflict. All of us are involved. I want to keep the conflict at a minimum level.

In this country we have a situation peculiar to all of Africa: Black and White must live together. At the end there can only be a non-racial government.

If the white power structure wants to see any peaceful change they must realize the Black is not going to accept separate development (Apartheid). The last chance for peaceful change is to accept the honesty of Blacks in their quest for peaceful change."

An editor once said, "As a journalist who has interviewed politicians not only at home in South Africa, but in America, Canada, Britain, Germany, France, Italy, and Israel, I have not met in any of these countries a man as gifted with intellect, personality, and human understanding as Steve Biko."

I, the writer of this article, loved Biko. I never knew him and never met him, yet he stands tall for me. People of all types owe it to themselves to learn about him, especially the Black people in America.

Student Senate Report

By RENEE MOBLEY
Black Affairs Staff

The Student Senate, this past Wednesday, September 28, passed a motion allocating $800 to the Black Mass Communications Project. This money will allow B.M.C.P. to sponsor a pro and con debate on the controversial 'Bakke Case'.

Distinguished guests will be recruited from Washington, D.C. as well as from the five college area, to participate in a three panel discussion. Though no specific contracts have been arranged, it is hoped that persons working closely with the case, may be obtained to sit on the panel.

The major purpose of the program is to heighten awareness among the student body of the facts and possible consequences of the Bakke decision.

The tentative date for the debate is October 11th. Further information will appear in future pages of Black Affairs.

The Senate, at this meeting, also welcomed its newly elected members. Among them, two new Third World Senators were present. Robert S. Key and Harry Yee received their orientation into the Third World caucus. Other Third World Senators elected include, Lucy Montes, Carolyn Yee, Jose Santiago, Jose Candelario and Ana Melo.

One candidate, a Craig Sherwood, elected on the Third World Ballot, is not a Third World student. Yet because his name appeared on ballot, he received 110 votes. Sherwood was not present at the meeting Wednesday. In all probability, it is likely that he will be recalled by the Third World Constituency.

There are still six Third World seats that have yet to be filled. Third World students who can attend Senate meetings every Wednesday evening are urged to contact Stanely Kinard. Kinard may be reached in the Office of Third World Affairs, 308 S.U.B.

Fine Arts Center starts special program

AMHERST, Mass. — A new program designed as an educational experience in the performing arts for students and members of the university community began this week with a critique and open class discussion featuring the legendary vocalist, Sarah Vaughan.

The event is called "The Special Program In The Arts", and is sponsored by the Fine Arts Center and the Provost Office. Dr. Frederick Tillis and Director of Development, Fritz Sweinway are coordinating the program.

The "Special Program In The Arts" will feature many of the artists and performers who will appear at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall during the 1977-78 Concert Series.

Sarah Vaughan inaugurated the new program on Thursday in room 44 at 3:30 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center.

The University Vocal Ensemble under the direction of Dr. Terry Stackpole performed selections of their repertoire. Miss Vaughan critiqued their presentation and then lead a discussion with those in attendance.

Tillis and Steinway stress that these events are not concerts by the performers, that they are intended as an educational experience.
